1. Nuclear Disarmament: President Obama has signaled that he intends to bring nuclear disarmament back on the U.S. arms control and disarmament agenda. He has stated that he intends “to make the goal of eliminating nuclear weapons world-wide a central element of U.S. nuclear policies.” This corresponds neatly with our own long-standing advocacy of nuclear disarmament as one of the highest priority for the international community. During the election campaign President Obama has also declared that he “will initiate a high level dialogue among all the declared nuclear weapons states on how to make their nuclear capabilities more transparent, create greater confidence, and move towards meaningful reductions and eventual elimination of all nuclear weapons.”

I am not aware of what the current status of this proposal is, but India would certainly support it. The best way to follow up could be for India and the U.S. to support the setting up of an Ad Hoc Working Group in the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva on nuclear disarmament. India has proposed appointing a special coordinator at the CD to carry out consultations on measures which could lead to consensus and form a basis for the mandate for a Ad-hoc working group on nuclear disarmament. We are ready to consult with the U.S. on this subject.

2. Fissile Material Cut Off Treaty (FMCT): India has held a consistent position on Fissile Material Cut-Off and envisages it as a significant contribution to nuclear non-proliferation in all its aspects. We have encouraged the negotiation and early conclusion of a multilateral, universally applicable and effectively verifiable treaty on Fissile Material Cut-Off at the Conference on Disarmament. The Bush Administration had signaled a change in policy, to insist that the FMCT should have no verification procedures and that national means would be relied upon for ensuring compliance. Therefore, even though the July 18, 2005 Indo-US Joint Communiqué states that the two countries would cooperate to bring about an early conclusion of the FMCT in Geneva, the nature of the treaty was left deliberately ambiguous, precisely because India continued to favour multilateral verification procedures. This is also the consensus view among Conference members. We welcome the Obama Administration's reversion to this consensus and are prepared to work together for the early conclusion of an FMCT. We need bilateral consultations on the issue of the likely mandate and scope of the negotiations.

3. Nuclear Weapons and Terrorism: India is one of the countries taking the lead in raising international awareness of the dangers inherent in the possible link between Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMD) and international terrorism. The possible acquisition, through clandestine means, of nuclear weapons or other WMDs, by terrorist and jihadi groups, adds an entirely new dimension to the nuclear threat, a threat which cannot be deterred by the doctrines of retaliatory use. In fact, the dangers of nuclear terrorism, are another reason to seek the early elimination of nuclear weapons. For as long as there is a world divided between nuclear weapon haves and have-nots, there will always be the danger of proliferation to additional countries. This is what gives rise to a clandestine network of the kind run from Pakistan and which creates potential sources of supplies for terrorist or jihadi groups. The greatest likelihood of such a threat emanates from our neighbourhood. What is encouraging, from an Indian perspective, is President Obama's clear recognition of this danger and his willingness to confront it with a sense of urgency. He has committed himself to working together with other concerned countries in developing and implementing a comprehensive set of standards to protect nuclear materials from terrorist threat. During his election campaign, the President also spoke about his intention to convene a Summit on preventing nuclear terrorism. We are willing to work together with the U.S. on this shared concern, which to us, living in a dangerous neighbourhood, is of great importance.

President Obama has also spoken about his plans to expand the Proliferation Security Initiative (PSI) “from its current focus on stopping illicit nuclear shipments to eradicating nuclear market networks, like the remnants of the Abdul Qadeer Khan organization.”

India is not yet a member of PSI and there have been doubts in our country about its consonance with international maritime law. However, it is my own belief that India should have an open mind on joining the PSI and in supporting its expanded mandate as envisaged by President Obama. This fits in very well with India's own concern over clandestine proliferation, especially in our own neighbourhood, and the likelihood of such clandestine activities facilitating the acquisition of nuclear weapons or fissile material, by a terrorist or a jihadi group. We look forward to exploring these ideas further, in a spirit of shared concern and convergent interest, with the U.S.

Non-Proliferation: President Obama has declared his intention to strengthen international non-proliferation efforts. We welcome this and are willing to work together with the U.S. and the rest of the international community in building a new, effective and credible non-proliferation architecture. The new Administration has already acknowledged a key element of the Indian approach – that efforts at ensuring global non-proliferation, horizontally to additional states, are unlikely to succeed unless they are linked, integrally, with visible and concrete progress towards nuclear disarmament. Some of the initiatives I have touched upon before, fall into the broad category of non-proliferation, such as the FMCT. However, there is specific reference to restricting the expansion of sensitive nuclear fuel cycle facilities that are capable of producing bomb grade plutonium and uranium. This could take the form of creating regional or international nuclear fuel banks to meet the nuclear fuel needs of countries that do not possess reprocessing or enrichment facilities.

India has developed indigenously a robust nuclear programme covering the complete fuel cycle. Nevertheless, in practical terms, we are already committed, in the Indo-US Joint Statement of July 18, 2005, to not transferring reprocessing and enrichment technologies and equipment to countries that do not possess them. Furthermore, we have expressed our willingness to ourselves host a regional or multilateral fuel bank, to supply nuclear fuel to other states, under appropriate IAEA safeguards. We would also be prepared, as a supplier nation, to participate in an international fuel bank, which may be located in a third country. It may be however difficult for India to endorse a view that there ought to be a discriminating legal regime put in place, which would allow only some states to possess reprocessing or enrichment facilities but not others. Therefore, while reserving our position on a question of principle, we would be prepared to work together with the U.S. and other friendly countries on practical steps to discourage proliferation.

CTBT: Let me now turn to an issue that has been seen as potentially, a contentious one in our relations with the new US administration. This, of course, is the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty or the CTBT. President Obama has made it clear that we will seek Senate ratification of the CTBT, which the U.S. has signed, and India has not. He has also promised to launch a “diplomatic effort to bring on board other states whose ratifications are required for the treaty to enter into force.”

India has been a consistent votary of a CTBT but did not sign the CTBT as it eventually emerged because it was not explicitly linked to the goal of nuclear disarmament. For India, this was crucial since it was not acceptable to legitimize, in any way, a permanent division between nuclear weapon states and non-nuclear weapon states. The other reason was the manner in which the CTBT was pushed through, bypassing the Conference on Disarmament, which works by consensus, and bringing the issue before the UN General Assembly. This was done to over-ride Indian objections and was justifiably seen in India as a not too subtle attempt to foreclose India's options. Additionally, India was included in a category of states whose signature and ratification was deemed necessary in order for the Treaty to come into force, again an unusual provision, directed at putting international pressure on India to join a Treaty whose provisions it did not agree with. It was against this background that India did not sign the CTBT. However, since its nuclear test in 1998, India has observed a unilateral and voluntary moratorium and is committed to its continuance. This is spelt out in the Indo-US Joint Statement of 2005. It is also our conviction that if the world moves categorically towards nuclear disarmament in a credible time-frame, then Indo-US differences over the CTBT would probably recede into the background.

Anti-Satellite Weapons: India is one of a handful of countries with significant space capabilities. We have a large number of communications and resource survey satellites currently in orbit. Although this does not fall strictly within the nuclear domain, the need to ensure the peaceful uses of outer space, is important for nuclear stability and international security. We welcome President Obama's intention to join multilateral efforts to prevent military conflict in space and to negotiate an agreement to prohibit the testing of anti-satellite weapons. This is an area of convergence on which we would be happy to work together with the U.S. and contribute to a multilateral agreement.

Conclusion: A careful examination of initiatives President Obama has signaled his intention to pursue during his tenure reveals a number of points of convergence in the pursuit of a stable, peaceful and eventually nuclear-weapons free world. Some of these initiatives have been followed up and announced after the President's inauguration, such as nuclear disarmament and CTBT ratification. We await the elaboration of others, including the proposed summit on nuclear terrorism, the high level dialogue among declared nuclear weapons states to kickstart the process of nuclear disarmament, the pursuit of an anti-satellite weapon agreement and the elimination of clandestine nuclear proliferation networks. This security-related agenda is substantive and no less important than the follow-up on the civil nuclear cooperation agreement in terms of expanded nuclear and high tech commerce. These are early days yet in the new Administration and India, too, is headed towards general elections. The ongoing financial and economic crisis is obviously an over-riding preoccupation not only for the U.S. but for India as well. Nevertheless, I believe that the Civil Nuclear agreement has opened up several areas of mutual interest that are worth pursuing and which should, therefore, remain within our sights in the days ahead. I thank you for your attention and my apologies for interrupting what looks like a sumptuous lunch.

134. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the meeting of Nuclear Suppliers' Group Troika.

New Delhi, May 11, 2009.

The Nuclear Suppliers' Group (NSG) Troika led by its current Chair Ambassador Viktor Elbling of Germany visited New Delhi today for a bilateral meeting.

The Indian delegation was led by Shri Vivek Katju, Special Secretary (Political & International Organizations). The NSG delegation included representatives from South Africa (the previous Chair of NSG) and Hungary (the next Chair of NSG). India has had meetings with NSG Troika since 2004.

Today's meeting was held in the context of the decision by the NSG in September 2008 enabling its members to engage in full civil nuclear cooperation with India. The discussions were positive and forward looking and included an exchange of views on future cooperation in different areas*.

* The meeting took place against the backdrop of the Obama Administration's indication that it would like non-NPT countries to sign the NPT and the NSG to consider a total ban on the sale of enrichment and reprocessing equipment for those countries. It may be mentioned that last year the NSG had withdrawn its ban for nuclear trade with India after the US Congress had passed the necessary law for Civil Nuclear Cooperation with India.

135. The Question of Refusal to transfer enrichment and reprocessing technologies by G-8 countries raised in the Rajya Sabha during Zero hour under the special mention rules.

New Delhi, July 13, 2009.

Dr. (Shrimati) Najma A. Heptulla (Bharatiya Janta Party): Sir, I rise to command the attention of the House and of the Government, through you, to the recent declaration made by the G-8 countries at the end of the recent summit in Italy. In the declaration, the member countries have resolved to curb the transfer of enrichment and reprocessing technologies, and equipments. The declaration also asked the Nuclear Suppliers' Group to disallow the transfer of these technologies to the countries which have not signed the Nuclear non-Proliferation Treaty. I would like to know if the Government is aware of the text developed by a Consultative Group of the Nuclear Suppliers' Group in November 2008.....

As the G-8 declaration indicates a general acceptance to the proposal made by the Consultative Group, I ask the Government to clarify if these proposals impose extra conditionalities, over and above the waiver granted to India by the IAEA and the Nuclear Suppliers' Group in September 2008, on transferring the dual-use equipments, software technology, and material for use in the civil nuclear facilities under the IAEA Safeguards.

One wonder whether India was consulted before finalising this declaration. The hon. Prime Minister attended the said summit and if India was consulted, did the Government agree with the resolve of the declaration and the content of the Consultative Group's proposal? If India was not consulted, then concern and sensitivities were ignored in the declaration. I apprehend that India is being subjected to extraneous conditionalities for the transfer of enrichment and re-processing technologies beyond the clean waiver given to India. If you remember, Sir, hon. Prime Minister on the floor of the House had said that 'full' means 'full' and that it meant the full agreement and the full utilisation of the conditionalities of the civil nuclear cooperation. Sir, in this case, the matter is very serious. Our party has been raising this issue on the floor of the House. I remember Mr. Arun Shourie, speaking on this subject, had very clearly mentioned this. What happened in Italy has vindicated the view of our party. I would like the Government to respond.

.....Interruptions.....

Shrimati Brinda Karat: Sir, the Hyde Act is coming into operation. Let the Government come out with an answer. (Interruptions).....

Shri S.S. Ahluwalia: Sir, there should be a statement.

(Interruptions).....

The Leader of Opposition (Shri Arun Jaitley): Sir, it is a very important issue. (Interruptions) .....

It has been debated repeatedly in this House.

(Interruptions) .....Sir, the Government must come out with a statement in response to this.

(Interruptions).....

Shri Arun Jaitley: Is it the Government's stand which is coming out in newspapers? (Interruptions)

Mr. Deputy Chairman: It is for the Government.

(Interruptions).....

Shri Arun Jaitley: Sir, it is a controversial issue. The House and the country is misled by the Government and the Government's stand is that they will not clarify. (Interruptions).....

Mr. Deputy Chairman: It is Zero Hour. You see, whatever you have said, the Government is aware. (Interruptions)..... But, I will not be able to say that the Government should reply. It is for the Government to react. (Interruptions) .....You have raised the matter. It is for the Government to take note of it and react. (Interruptions).....

Shri D. Raja: Sir, it is a very serious matter. (Interruptions)

Shrimati Brinda Karat: Sir, why is the House being kept in the dark on such an important issue? (Interruptions)

Mr. Deputy Chairman: How can I answer that question?

(Interruptions).....

Shri Arun Jaitley: Sir, why don't they clarify the issue?

Shri Arun Shourie: Sir, I am not requesting you to do anything. Sir, the former Minister of External Affairs is here. He was present at that time also. Shri Prithvirajji is also here. The reason for clarification is that now it is not just a matter of Government because an assurance was given to the House.

So, it is the right of the House to know as to how an assurance....(Interruptions).....

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You are right, but, Zero Hour has a limit.

(Interruptions).....

Shri S.S. Ahluwalia: Sir, Zero Hour does not mean that they will not respond. (Interruptions).....

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I am not saying that, but, that is the practice.

Shri S.S. Ahluwalia: Sir, the Zero Hour does not mean that the Government will not pay heed to important issues. (Interruptions) It is a matter of national interest. (Interruptions) It is not only for the Government. (Interruptions).....

Mr. Deputy Chairman: In Zero Hour, the Government cannot react immediately. (Interruptions).....

The Minister of Finance (Shri Pranab Mukherjee): Mr. Deputy Chairman, Sir, the hon. Members are fully aware that we had this meeting with G-8 and G-5. It is known that it is an outreach meeting. We are not members of the G-8. So far as the civil nuclear cooperation is concerned, the appropriate agency is IAEA and 45 members group of NSG. We got the clean waiver from them. Therefore, we are not concerned with what resolution or position G-8 takes in respect of a particular issue. So far as the civil nuclear cooperation is concerned, we have received clean waiver. We have the India-specific safeguard agreement with IAEA. We have received clean waiver from 45 NSG countries. And, therefore, we are not deeply concerned, as some hon. Members appear to be, from a newspaper report that G-8 has expressed a view in respect of the civil nuclear cooperation agreement or not.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shri Santosh Bagrodia. (Interruptions) .....It is over. He has responded. (Interruptions).....

Shri Arun Jaitley : This waiver ceases to be a clean waiver. (Interruptions) .....

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The hon. Finance Minister has clarified.

(Interruptions) .....He has clarified. (Interruptions) You give notice in different forum. (Interruptions).....

Shri Pranab Mukherjee : So far as this trade is concerned, every individual country has its right to decide whether to enter into a trade or not to enter into a trade. Therefore, this is not the subject. The subject is whether G-8 is the appropriate forum to decide about the Civil Nuclear Cooperation Agreement. My respectful submission to the hon. Members is this. Every one of them is fully knowledgeable that they are not the appropriate agencies or authorities; only two relevant agencies are IAEA and NSG. For any individual country, whether it belongs to G- 8 or G-24 or G-27, to decide whether to enter into any agreement or not, it depends on them*.

* Meanwhile it was reported by The Hindu on July 16 that India had already received natural uranium in the form of pellets from Russia and as yellow cake from Areva of France for use in its safeguarded reactors, according to S.K. Jain, Chairman and Managing Director, Nuclear Power Corporation of India Limited (NPCIL). This was consequent to the Nuclear Suppliers Group relaxing its Guidelines last year to allow its member-countries to have nuclear trade with India. Subsequently, India signed agreements with Russia and France for importing nuclear power reactors and fuel. Mr. Jain said on July 14 that India had also received clearance from the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) for the fabrication of this imported fuel into fuel rods. The process was now underway at the Nuclear Fuel Complex (NFC), Hyderabad.

“...I am happy to share with you that I flagged off on Saturday [July 11] the first consignment of fabricated fuel from the NFC for use in the second unit [already under safeguards] of the Rajasthan Atomic Power Station (RAPS),” Mr. Jain said. The entire initial core of natural uranium fuel for RAPS-2 would be available in August. The reactor, which has a capacity of 200 MWe, would start generating full power in September/October.

If the current fuel fabrication plans of the NFC were achieved, enough fuel would be available for the two new units of RAPS-5 and 6 to be commissioned and they would start operating at full capacity by 2009-end, Mr. Jain said. RAPS-5 and 6 have a capacity of 220 MWe each. Since RAPS-5 and 6 would come under the IAEA safeguards as per India’s Separation Plan, the two reactors would become eligible to receive imported fuel. However, clearance from the IAEA should be obtained before the imported fuel was fed into the two reactors. Mr. Jain said the NPCIL had “come out of the bad dream” of shortage of natural uranium fuel supply to power its indigenous Pressurised Heavy Water Reactors (PHWRs). “The turnaround is taking place and we want to march ahead,” he said.

The supply of indigenous natural uranium fuel had gone up with the mine and mill at Turamdih in Jharkhand adding to the supply from the mill at the nearby Jaduguda. This had led to the PHWRs operating between 60 per cent and 65 per cent capacity factor compared to less than 50 per cent earlier. “I plan to take them to 70 per cent,” Mr. Jain said. The fourth reactor at Kaiga in Karnataka would reach criticality in six to eight months with the increased flow of indigenous natural uranium.

It was further reported by the P T I from Washington that allaying fears in India over the recent G-8 declaration regarding restriction on transfer of atomic technology to non-NPT States, the U.S. on July 16 said it was “fully committed” to the nuclear deal with New Delhi and hoped to sign the end-use monitoring agreement.

"We hope to be able to sign that [end-use monitoring agreement], and obviously, that will take place .... next week," Assistant Secretary of State for South and Central Asia Robert Blake told reporters in Washington on the eve of Secretary of State Hillary Clinton's visit to India. "I do not think there should be any apprehensions about the future of the civil nuclear agreement," Mr. Blake told reporters. "The [U.S.] Secretary and the President are fully committed to that agreement. I think the Indians are also fully committed," he said. "They [India] are going to be, I am sure, moving forward to file a declaration of safeguarded facilities with the IAEA, which is sort of the next step in that process, and then we're going to start reprocessing talks, probably either later this month or in August," Mr. Blake said.

"So all of that is very much on track. As I say, we'll also be starting some bilateral cooperation with — hopefully with the announcement of these two nuclear sites. So I would discourage any talk that somehow the agreement is off track," Mr. Blake said. He said the U.S. hoped to get commitment from India for two nuclear park sites for American companies during Ms. Clinton's visit. (This information was conveyed to the Secretary of State during her visit) "On the question of the two nuclear sites, we hope that we will be in a position to be able to announce publicly those two sites where U.S. companies can have exclusive right to locate reactors and sell reactors to the Indians," he said, amid reports that India has identified the two sites in Gujarat and Andhra Pradesh. "We think that that's a major opportunity for American companies. It opens up as much as $10 billion worth of new exports to India. So again, we hope to be in a position for both sides to announce it," Mr. Blake said.

"The agreement would be with her [Ms. Clinton's] counterpart, Foreign Minister (S.M.) Krishna. The end use monitoring is the only one that is on the table for the moment," he said. He said the purpose of Ms. Clinton's visit to India is to strengthen and broaden the strategic partnership between the two sides.

The Press Trust of India further reported from Vienna on July 25 quoting Department of Atomic Energy sources in Vienna that India and the U.S. had completed the first round of consultations on 'arrangements and procedures' for reprocessing of spent fuel of American origin on Indian soil. The consultations, which took place in Vienna, were considered a significant step to further the interaction at commercial level and for the operationalisation of the India-U.S. nuclear deal. The talks, which had begun early in the week, ended on July 23 and the process was likely to be completed in two months. "We expect the consultations to be over in two months so that the implementation of the 123 agreement can start within the time frame given in the agreement," PTI quoted a top DAE official. "The consultations were strictly based on Article 6 (III) of the 123 agreement between India and the U.S. and a few more meetings are expected to take place," he was quoted as saying. The five-member Indian delegation was led by Ravi B. Grover, Director of the DAE Strategic Planning Group (SPG), and also the Director of the Knowledge Management Group. Washington's point man for nuclear negotiations with India Richard Stratford, who is the Director of the Office of Nuclear Energy Affairs in the State Department, headed the U.S. team. According to the agreement, to bring reprocessing rights into effect, India has to establish a new national facility dedicated to reprocessing safeguarded nuclear material under the safeguards of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). Also, India has to reach an agreement with the U.S. on 'arrangements and procedures,' under which reprocessing will take place in this new facility. "We should have upfront sovereign rights in whatever we do, including reprocessing," another DAE official told the PTI. The sites zeroed in by the NPCIL are Srikakulam district in Andhra Pradesh and near Alang in Gujarat.

136. Extract Relevant to non-proliferation in the G-8 Statement on Nuclear Issues from the speech of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh in Lok Sabha.

New Delhi, July 29, 2009.

On the G 8 Statement on nuclear issues

Some Members have raised the issue of the Statement issued by the G-8 countries on Non-Proliferation at their L'Aquila Summit in Italy earlier in July, and the references in it to the transfer of enrichment and reprocessing items and technology.

The concern appears to be as to whether an effort is being made by certain countries to prevent the transfer of enrichment and reprocessing items and technology to non-NPT countries, i.e., countries like India who have not signed the Non-Proliferation Treaty.

Madam Speaker,

The government is fully committed to the achievement of full international civil nuclear cooperation. Consistent with this objective, in September last year India secured a clean exemption from the Nuclear Suppliers Group, one that was India-specific. At that time also attempts were made to make a distinction. The NSG has agreed to transfer all technologies consistent with their national laws.

The 'Statement on Civil Nuclear Cooperation with India' approved by the Nuclear Suppliers Group on September 6, 2008 contains India's reciprocal commitments and actions in exchange for access to international civil nuclear cooperation. It is our expectation that any future decisions of the NSG relating to the transfer of enrichment and reprocessing items and technology would take into account the special status accorded to India by the NSG. The NSG has given us this clean exemption knowing full well that we are not a signatory to the NPT.

Prohibition by the NSG of such transfers would require a consensus amongst all the 46 countries. This does not exist at present. The exemption given to India by the NSG provides for consultations and we will hence remain engaged with that body, so that any decisions take into account the special status accorded to India by it.

As far as the G-8 is concerned, the fact is that we have no civil nuclear cooperation agreement with the G8 bloc per se. We have, however, signed bilateral agreements with France, Russia and the United States. As I have said before, and I repeat it here, when I raised this matter with President Sarkozy, he was gracious enough to tell me that as far as France is concerned, there will be no restrictions. He also said that if we want him to go public on this, he will do so. Therefore, there is no consensus in the NSG to debar India from such technologies. We expect that the countries concerned will honour and implement their bilateral commitments.

Madam Speaker,

In the course of the discussions, some Hon'ble Members have raised the issue of our accepting pre-conditions for transfer of enrichment and reprocessing items and technology. I wish to once again state that pending global nuclear disarmament, there is no question of India joining the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty as a non-nuclear weapon State.

I would also like to clarify that the transfer of enrichment and reprocessing items and technology has no bearing whatsoever on India's upfront entitlement to reprocess foreign origin spent fuel and the use of such fuel in our own safeguarded facilities.

Finally, I would like to bring to the attention of this august House that India has full mastery of the entire Nuclear Fuel Cycle, and this includes enrichment and reprocessing technology. We have a well entrenched E&R infrastructure as well. Our domestic three-stage Nuclear Power Programme is entirely indigenous and self-sustaining. Our indigenous Fast Breeder Reactor Programme and linked technology puts us in the league of those very few nations which today possess cutting-edge technologies.

The transfer of enrichment and reprocessing items and technology to India as part of full international civil nuclear cooperation would be an additionality to accelerate our three-stage programme.

137. Media Interaction of the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission Anil Kakodkar on the question of India's Right to reprocess the nuclear spent fuel.

Chennai, August 2, 2009.

"It will be the same. Whether it is France, Russia or the U.S., we will have upfront consent and rights to reprocess the spent fuel [from the imported reactors] here in India under the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) safeguards," asserted Anil Kakodkar, Chairman, Atomic Energy Commission (AEC), on August 2, 2009. [Reported by The Hindu on August 3, 2009]

He told journalists at Kalpakkam, "before we start a reactor, we should have upfront consent and rights for reprocessing from all vendors." Asked whether the U.S. had agreed to allow India to reprocess the spent fuel from the U.S. reactors that would be built in Andhra Pradesh and Gujarat just as Russia and France had done, Dr. Kakodkar said the 123 nuclear agreement between India and the U.S. "clearly spells out the upfront consent and rights."

In addition to that, arrangements and procedures should be negotiated and established for reprocessing the spent fuel*. The AEC Chairman said: "We are doing exactly that. It will happen in a much earlier time-frame. I have said that we will have arrangements and procedures done and that it would make the reprocessing consent and rights complete. Only then, we will start the process of negotiating or completing the contract [to buy reactors from other countries]."

Asked whether there were plans to upgrade the Rare Materials Project (RMP) at Ratnahalli near Mysore (where uranium is enriched) into an industrial scale plant, Dr. Kakodkar said it had to be done but the production

* It may be recalled that The Hindu quoting senior officials had reported on March 6 that India had formally asked the United States to negotiate the "arrangements and procedures" under which American spent nuclear fuel will be reprocessed in the country. The request reportedly was made in February. [Under the terms of the '123 agreement' on bilateral nuclear cooperation, Washington has six months to begin consultations and one year after that to reach an understanding with Delhi. "The clock has started ticking," an official said. "We have till the end of August 2010 to finalise an agreement."]The paper reported that on February 3, Foreign Secretary Shiv Shankar Menon wrote to Under Secretary for Political Affairs William Burns invoking this provision and asking the U.S. side to propose dates and an agenda. A similar letter was also sent from the Department of Atomic Energy to Richard Stratford, head of the State Department's Office of Nuclear Energy and Washington's pointman for nuclear negotiations with India. Last January, Atomic Energy Commission Chairman Anil Kakodkar explicitly told a delegation of the U.S.-India Business Council — which included many representatives of the American nuclear industry — that there would be no reactor purchases without reprocessing. Shortly after that meeting, Ted Jones of the USIBC told the Washington Post that Dr. Kakodkar had said commercial ties could commence "only after talks about reprocessing rights are concluded."

However, in Senate confirmation hearing Ms. Ellen O. Tauscher head of the State Department's Under Secretary of State for Arms Control and International Security had told Senator Richar Lugar that she supported the 123 agreement and intended to implement of enriched uranium now from the RMP would meet the requirements of India's nuclear-powered submarine, INS Arihant.

To cater for the enriched uranium requirements of a commercial nuclear power station, huge gaskets in the enrichment plant were required.

India had the capability to build large-sized enrichment plants but the decision to build them had to be taken on commercial considerations. Since the availability of natural uranium in India was low, it did not make sense to enrich it for power generation because a Pressurised Heavy Water Reactor (PHWR) produced more energy from the same natural uranium. So India used natural uranium as fuel for its PHWRs.

For the Light Water Reactors (LWRs) that India would be importing, it had insisted on the condition that the imported LWRs should get a life-time supply of enriched uranium. "So these reactors will be fuelled by imported uranium. However, depending on commercial considerations, we will build a [large-sized enrichment] plant at an appropriate time. At the moment, there is no such decision," Dr. Kakodkar said.

it and that she would do her best to further nuclear cooperation with India. She said "During the course of the [nuclear deal], there were supporters and sceptics in both countries," but "upon its successful conclusion, both our Administration and the Government of India have resolved to continue moving forward to strengthen our important strategic relationship. I look forward to doing my part to advance that cooperation."

She highlighted India's "enhanced non-proliferation commitments" and said the U.S.-India 123 Agreement "has also opened new pathways for a strengthened bilateral non-proliferation relationship and for a greater Indian leadership role on non-proliferation issues." Reiterating India's promise to place orders for "at least 10,000 MWe worth of new power generation capacity from U.S. firms," Ms. Tauscher said she would "work with our counterparts elsewhere in the U.S. Government to ensure all possible efforts are being made to promote U.S. business opportunities in India's civil nuclear energy sector." Asked about the impending bilateral talks on reprocessing arrangements and procedures, she said the administration was now in the process of determining what provisions should be contained in such an agreement. "Once we have an interagency agreement on a proposed text, and have consulted with the IAEA on its needs, we will forward a draft text to the Indian side for comment and will offer to open consultations on a specific date." This would happen before August 2, 2009, with an agreement to be finalised by August 2010. Setting to rest Indian apprehensions about the Obama administration's attitude towards the reprocessing of spent U.S. fuel in India, Ms. Tauscher said Washington was committed to implementing the 123 Agreement, which provided for programmatic consent for reprocessing, and that the bottom-line for America would be effective IAEA safeguards.

During the visit of Hillary Clinton, US Secretary of State to India in July there were further consultations between India and the US and the consensus reached was reflected in the Joint Statement issued on July 20, which inter alia stated: "Building on the success of the India -U.S. Civil Nuclear Initiative, on July 21, India and the United States will begin consultations on reprocessing arrangements and procedures, as provided in Article 6 (iii) of the 123 Agreement for Peaceful Nuclear Cooperation between India and the United States." Coming soon after the L'Aquila Non-Proliferation Declaration this pronouncement assumes particular significance in view of the apprehensions created as a result of the G-8 Declaration on non-proliferation.

138. Interview of National Security Advisor M. K. Narayanan with the daily The Hindu.

New Delhi, August 29, 2009.

Describing India's commitment to its voluntary moratorium on nuclear testing as "steadfast," National Security Adviser M.K. Narayanan on August 29 came down hard on those making a case for the resumption of testing by claiming the May 1998 thermonuclear device test had been a failure. In an interview to The Hindu, the NSA described the man at the centre of the current controversy — the former Defence Research and Development Organisation (DRDO) scientist, K. Santhanam* — as "a bit of a maverick" who had no locus standi to comment on the measurement of the test yields despite being the DRDO's point-person at the Pokhran test site in 1998.

Asked whether Mr. Santhanam's claims had undermined the credibility of India's nuclear deterrent because this was the first time Western doubts about the yield of the 1998 test had been echoed by a DRDO insider, Mr. Narayanan said: "First and foremost, DRDO has nothing to do with [this aspect of the] tests, frankly, whatever plumage they may like to give themselves. The measurements are not done by DRDO."

Citing the "authorised and proven measurements" of yields done by Anil Kakodkar and S.K. Sikka from the Bhabha Atomic Research Centre, he said nobody had really questioned their conclusions. "If those who were involved come forward and say, 'I have looked at the measurement and these are the mistakes' that would be different. If Santy says, 'I have an independent set of measurements about the tests,' let him come forward," Mr. Narayanan said, referring to Mr. Santhanam by his nick-name. Western analysts had been questioning the Pokhran-II tests because "they don't want to recognise that we are a nuclear weapon power, particularly that we are capable of a fusion device,” the NSA said. “Now if Santy honestly believed that there was something about it, he should have said so [then], not 10 years later.”

* Mr. Narayanan was clarifying the position arising out of the confusion created by Mr. Santhanam, a former scientist of the Defence Research and Development Organisation that the 1998 nuclear test conducted by India did not yield the desired results and hence the need for more tests. Same day when the interview appeared (on August 29) Prime Minister Manmohan Singh said the government stood by the theory of effectiveness of the thermonuclear device tested in the Pokhran II experiment in 1998 and termed the claims to the contrary attempts at "misleading." Dr. Singh, who cited the opinion given two days ago by the former President, A.P.J. Abdul Kalam, said the nuclear test, carried out during his predecessor, Atal Bihari Vajpayee's time was "successful" and not a "fizzle" as a nuclear scientist claimed early this week. (The Prime Minister was talking to journalists at Ramsar village, 60 km from the district town of Barmer) Dr. Singh said: "We believe in our scientists. It is very clear that the test was successful. The former Defence Adviser and the former President too have testified to this." He termed the controversy over the issue unwarranted. "It is a needless debate."

Mr. Narayanan said that Mr. Santhanam’s statement would lead to increased international pressure on India on the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty (CTBT), even though U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton had publicly declared that Washington had no right to make demands on Delhi until it had itself ratified the treaty. “I think we are going to face pressures from the international community. They don’t know Santy ... I mean, he is extremely bright but he is a bit of a maverick in these matters! But the international community is going to say that this is one of India’s very devious methods of preparing for a test, that [our] scientists are saying that was a fizzle, therefore India may find it necessary to prove itself once again. This is my worry. I hope it doesn’t happen.”

Anticipating a “new rash of [statements] saying India should not test,” Mr. Narayanan said, “In any case, our decision not to test has nothing to do with this. We have a voluntary moratorium. At the moment, our people feel that we don’t need a test. I suppose that’s where we are.”

Asked whether he could think of a situation where India might want to resume nuclear testing in the absence of a deterioration in the international security environment, the NSA said, “As of now, we are steadfast in our commitment to the moratorium. At least there is no debate in the internal circles about this.”

But if that were the case, did the Manmohan Singh government stand by the formulation first advanced by Atal Bihari Vajpayee as Prime Minister in September 1998 — that India would not stand in the way of the CTBT entering into force? Throughout the world, that statement was understood to mean India would have no problem signing the treaty if the others whose ratification is required for the CTBT to enter into force — especially the U.S. and China — did so. Mr. Narayanan ducked a direct response. “I think we need to now have a full-fledged discussion on the CTBT. We’ll cross that hurdle when we come to it.”

139. Press Statement of the Department of Atomic Energy Commission on the success of the nuclear test conducted in May 1998.

Mumbai, September 5, 2009.

The Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) in its meeting held on September 5, 2009, discussed recent statements in the media on the thermonuclear test of May 11 1998. Of particular concern were the statements made by Shri Santhanam, who was a member of the team from DRDO participating in the tests.

The Commission had been briefed about the successful tests at its meeting held on May 21, 1998 wherein, details of the type of tests, estimated yields and other technical details were given. Some subsequent media reports that appeared to question the reported yields of tests done on May 11, 1998 were discussed at a meeting of the AEC held on November 12, 1998. The Commission noted at that time “more recent reports have confirmed the Indian estimate of 60 kilotons for the combined yield of the fission device and the thermonuclear device”. Some members of the Commission had felt that the media reports could be more in the form of a disinformation campaign. Later, at meetings of the AEC held on March 26, 1999 and November 18, 1999, results of radio-chemical analysis of bore-hole samples reconfirming the estimated yields, were presented to the Commission.

Dr. Raja Ramanna was then a member of the Atomic Energy Commission and was present at all the meetings referred to above.

The Atomic Energy Commission notes that the design yield of the thermonuclear test had to be kept at 45 KT in order to protect the nearby Khetolai village from the combined yield of the thermonuclear and fission test (the two tests had to be necessarily done together as the two shafts were only 1.1 Km apart). Close-in seismic instrumentation was deployed. Analysis of the measurements from these instruments as well as those from far field instruments located at Gauribidanur and several IMD stations confirmed the combined yield of the two tests to be 58-83

140. Statement by Chairman Atomic Energy Commission & Leader of the Indian delegation Dr. Anil Kakodkar at the 53rd General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Vienna, September 16, 2009.

Madame President,

First of all, let me congratulate you on your election as the President of the 53rd General Conference. Under your able stewardship, and with the support of your team and the Secretariat of the Agency, this General Conference will be able to accomplish the many tasks before it.

I welcome the entry of Kingdom of Cambodia and the Republic of Rwanda to the membership of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). The expansion of our family is always a happy moment and I take this opportunity to convey our best wishes to each of our new members.

Madame President, this is a landmark year for the Agency. Dr. Mohamed ElBaradei, Director General, will be laying down office after his outstanding leadership of the International Atomic Energy Agency spanning the last 12 years. And if we look back further, it is has been a magnificent quarter century of his association with the work of the Agency. Through his tireless efforts, the IAEA has been able to meet the many challenges before it. Apart from being the chief navigator of the Agency, he has also been a friend, philosopher and guide to its member States at all times.

In these years, one quality that can be said to define Dr. ElBaradei, perhaps more than anything else, is his constant personal concern and compassion towards humankind and the link he made between 'security' and 'poverty alleviation'. Indeed, when development needs remain unaddressed, the resulting misery often leads to conflicts and violence, which in turn further affect development efforts and impact on regional and global stability.

I take this opportunity to express our gratitude to Dr. ElBaradei for his outstanding leadership of IAEA and indeed all his efforts to make this world a better place. I wish Dr. ElBaradei a life of good health and happiness and one of continuing association with the Agency.

I also have immense pleasure in welcoming H.E. Mr. Yukiya Amano who will take over the reins from Dr. ElBaradei shortly. Mr. Amano brings with him his vast experience and exceptional diplomatic skills. I join others in conveying our best wishes as he prepares for this new responsibility and assure him of our support in accelerating and enlarging the contribution of atomic energy to peace, health and prosperity throughout the world.

Role of atomic energy has become more relevant today than at any time before. There are several factors that dictate such a paradigm. Depleting earth resources and threat to global climate on one hand and the potential of nuclear energy to provide a large sustainable source of energy with negligible green house gas emissions that can address the development aspirations of a large part of humanity on the other being the major ones. There are however still some major barriers. Concerns on safety, proliferation and security as well as uncertainty in terms of assured fuel and other supplies over the lifetime of the plants would need credible and universally acceptable approaches before nuclear energy can play a role upto its full potential. In our view unless all related issues are addressed in a holistic manner, we are unlikely to reach a satisfactory solution. Compartmentalised approaches to safety, safeguards and security are unlikely to be sustainable in a scenario of expanding deployment of nuclear energy. We need technological solutions to reduce the risks arising from these factors.

We must also recognize that there is considerable urgency about our effective actions both in terms of access to means for development in under-developed areas of the world and reductions of carbon dioxide emissions. Concurrent progress on both these fronts is crucial to contain human conflicts and climate related disasters and prevent them from reaching a state of irreversible instability. Clearly, the IAEA and all its member states have a major responsibility towards reaching universally applicable solutions that are accessible to all.

The importance of nuclear power in India was recognized right since our independence in the year 1947. India has been pursuing a comprehensive programme in atomic energy covering the entire fuel cycle involving uranium, plutonium and thorium based fuels. While the three stage development of our nuclear programme is dictated by our prime long-term objective of realizing energy independence on the basis of our vast thorium resources, our understanding and experience with thorium clearly reveals several benefits of the thorium fuel cycle, particularly in heavy water reactors, in terms of proliferation resistant nuclear energy production as well as efficient fissile plutonium disposal. These features of a thorium based fuel cycle may also be of interest to other countries.

The 300 MWe Advanced Heavy Water Reactor (AHWR) being developed in India is mainly a thorium fuelled reactor with several advanced passive safety features. The safety features in its design would enable meeting next generation safety requirements such as three days grace period for operator response, elimination of the need for exclusion zone beyond the plant boundary, hundred year design life and high level of fault tolerance. The advanced safety characteristics of this reactor like Passive Containment Cooling System and Gravity Driven Water Pool have been verified in a series of experiments carried out in full scale test facilities. The reactor is manageable with modest industrial infrastructure within the reach of developing countries. Also, for the same amount of energy produced, the quantity of long-lived minor actinides generated is nearly half of that produced in current generation Light Water Reactors. Importantly, high level of radioactivity in the fissile and fertile materials recovered from the spent fuel of AHWR and their isotopic composition preclude the use of these materials for nuclear weapons. Further, high level of fault tolerance provides for a much greater immunity even from insider threat. These features therefore, offer enhanced intrinsic proliferation resistant characteristics and high security strength.

A new version of AHWR named, Advanced Heavy Water Reactor - Low Enriched Uranium (AHWR-LEU) that uses low enriched uranium along with thorium as fuel has also been designed recently. The reactor has a significantly lower requirement of mined uranium per unit energy produced as compared to most of the current generation thermal reactors. This version of the design also can meet the requirement of medium sized reactors, in countries with small grids while meeting the requirements of next generation systems. While we strongly advocate recycle option, AHWR-LEU would also compete very favourably even in once through mode of fuel cycle. A brochure of AHWR-LEU has been made available at this conference.

High level radioactive waste disposal is another issue that needs attention. While we consider recycle option backed up by immobilization of residual waste in inert matrices as a proven technological option for safe geological disposal, there is perhaps a need to develop partition and transmutation technologies that will reduce the radioactive half life of the waste to a level wherein most of the radioactivity is lost within a practical time frame comparable with life span of institutions that are required to manage them. Clearly this necessitates intense research and development. Given the level of understanding and development that we have reached today, it seems to me that this is a realizable goal.

Madame President, an important objective and guiding principle of the Agency in its work is to foster the exchange of scientific and technical information on peaceful uses of atomic energy. Here, I reiterate India's commitment to make a significant contribution to the growth of nuclear energy globally within the framework of IAEA.

I would now like to present some other achievements of the Indian nuclear power programme, which has by now clocked over 300 reactor years of safe and economic nuclear power generation. The Enmasse Feeder Replacement (EMFR) for RAPS-2 has been completed with highest degree of safety. This complex and technologically advanced project was carried out with entirely indigenously developed technology. India is one of the few countries in the world which have experience in the ageing management of nuclear power plants. Our PHWR units offer a wide range of possibilities in the small and medium reactor category with proven performance and cost competitive advantage.

Construction has been almost completed of three 220 MWe Pressurised Heavy Water Reactors (KAIGA-4 and RAPS 5 & 6) while two 1000 MWe Light Water Reactors and one 500 MWe Prototype Fast Breeder Reactor (PFBR) are currently in advanced stages of construction. The unit size of Indian Pressurised Heavy Water Reactors have been further increased to 700 MWe and a series of such units are planned for installation in the country. Our Fast Breeder Test Reactor (FBTR) has successfully achieved yet another milestone with its unique (U,Pu)C fuel crossing 165 GWd/tonne burnup without any fuel failure. PFBR fuel which is under irradiation testing in FBTR has reached a burnup of 90 GWD/tonne.

Madame President, India's indigenous programme is set to accelerate. At the same time, India looks forward to mutually beneficial two-way nuclear cooperation with other members of the IAEA. Last year was a year of intense diplomatic activity in which India and other friendly countries with advanced nuclear technologies worked closely in order to consolidate the framework for cooperation. We are presently in the process of reformulating our plans for the larger scale programme implementation taking advantage of new possibilities that are emerging. This year is already a time for results and RAPS-2 (200 MW) is our first Pressurised Heavy Water Reactor that is operational using imported natural uranium.

Nuclear energy not only lights up bulbs and drives machines, but also has applications in medical field for raising food production and water management. Therefore, these areas need special thrust. During the 2007 IAEA General Conference, India offered a new Bhabhatron-II Teletherapy unit to the Socialist Republic of Vietnam under the Programme of Action for Cancer Therapy (PACT) of the IAEA. We are happy to report that Bhabhatron teletherapy unit was dispatched to Vietnam in August, 2009 and the high-capacity telecobalt source for this machine is also ready for shipment.

This year, two new mutant varieties were notified for commercial cultivation taking the total number of mutant varieties developed by Bhabha Atomic Research Centre (BARC) using nuclear techniques to 37. The interest of entrepreneurs in using radiation technology for hygenising and preserving food and allied products is increasing and 15 such facilities are now operational in India with some more under construction. Radiation technology has also helped India in increasing its exports of food items including to the most developed markets in the world.

Water is the basis for life and the greatest human civilizations have developed around water bodies. Not surprisingly, when we look for signs of life on other planets, we begin with the search for signs of water. And yet, if there is one crisis that threatens each one of us, it is the declining access to water. Our hybrid Nuclear Desalination Demonstration Plant (NDDP) at Kalpakkam, comprising of Reverse Osmosis (RO) based unit of 1.8 million litres per day commissioned in 2002 and a Multi Stage Flash (MSF) desalination plant of 4.5 million litres per day as well as a barge mounted RO desalination unit commissioned recently would help in dealing with the shortage of water in our water-stressed coastal areas. Rejuvenation of springs that are the sources of drinking water in villages on the foothills of Himalayas through use of isotope hydrology techniques is another example of the important role atomic energy can play in this vital area.

Madame President, as I have said earlier, we are now in an era where reserves of fossil fuels are finite and concerns regarding climate change and sustainable development are paramount. This is indeed the nuclear age and the challenge is to meet the enormous expectations of mankind from IAEA in the 21st century. It is India's firm belief that there is no substitute for intensifying joint collaborative activity within IAEA and we have, for instance attached the highest importance to INPRO from the time this programme commenced in 2001. There is the need for all member states to pool in resources and experience in the best interest of mankind. Such collaborative activities should be in the form of participative partnerships that lead to capacity building and grass root level participation of all stakeholders.

In the final analysis, IAEA's success in intensifying the use of nuclear energy in the service of mankind is dependent on urgent action to develop human resources in adequate numbers. One of the biggest limitations to expansion of nuclear power, particularly in countries only now looking in this direction, is the lack of qualified manpower. India is willing to do its bit here in working with friendly developing countries.

Madame President, we are now coming to the end of the Homi Bhabha Birth Centenary year and I am happy to inform you that an international conference on "Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy" will be held in New Delhi from 29 September to 1 October, 2009. I thank IAEA for its support to this conference. I take this opportunity to recall the words of the father of India's nuclear programme, Dr. Homi Bhabha, as President of the International Conference on Atomic Energy for Peaceful Uses at Geneva in 1955. He said,

"For the full industrialization of the underdeveloped countries, for the continuation of our civilization and its further development, atomic energy is not merely an aid, it is an absolute necessity. The acquisition by man of the knowledge of how to release and use atomic energy must be recognized as the third epoch of human history".

Thank you, Madame President

141. Letter from Permanent Representative of India to the UN addressed to the President of the Security Council outlining India's approach and perspectives regarding the Security Council's Summit meeting on Nuclear Non-Proliferation and Nuclear Disarmament.

New York, September 24, 2009

On 23 September 2009 Ambassador H.S. Puri, Permanent Representative of India to the United Nations, New York sent a letter to Ambassador Susan E. Rice, Ambassador and Permanent Representative of the United States to the UN and President of the Security Council, transmitting a paper outlining India's approach and perspectives regarding the Security Council's Summit meeting on Nuclear Non-Proliferation and Nuclear Disarmament being held in New York on 24 September 2009.

The text of the Indian Paper is as follows:

Enclosure to the letter dated 23 September 2009 from the Permanent Representative of India to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council

We wish to place on record India's approach and perspectives with regard to the Summit level meeting of the United Nations Security Council to be held on 24 September 2009.

India welcomes the initiative taken by the United States, as current President of the Council, to convene a Summit level meeting to consider matters relating to Nuclear Non-Proliferation and Nuclear Disarmament. This is an issue of global importance in which the entire international community has a vital interest.

India has an unwavering commitment to global efforts for preventing the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery. These efforts are in India's interest as the infirmities of the non-proliferation regime have had an adverse impact on our security. We support the two global and non-discriminatory international conventions banning chemical and biological weapons and efforts for strengthening their implementation.

During the 63rd Session of the UNGA, India's Prime Minister reiterated our proposal for a Nuclear Weapons Convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of nuclear weapons and providing for their complete elimination within a specified timeframe. This policy reaffirms the highest priority we attach to the goal of nuclear disarmament enshrined in the Rajiv Gandhi Action Plan of 1988.

Nuclear disarmament can be achieved through a step by step process underwritten by a universal commitment for global elimination of nuclear weapons. India has suggested a number of measures in this regard, including reaffirmation of the unequivocal commitment by all nuclear weapon states to the goal of complete elimination of nuclear weapons. Consideration could also be given to specific legal measures, including a Global No First Use Agreement and negotiation of a Convention on the Prohibition of the use of Nuclear weapons. Measures to reduce nuclear dangers arising from accidental or unauthorized use of nuclear weapons are also pertinent in this regard. There is an imperative need for preventing terrorists from gaining access to weapons of mass destruction.

The Security Council's consideration of this issue is based on a widely shared concern about the threat posed by all nuclear weapons to international peace and security. Addressing this threat requires the global elimination of nuclear weapons on a non-discriminatory basis. While preventing proliferation is important, an excessive focus on non-proliferation does a disservice to the essential principle of the mutually reinforcing linkage between disarmament and non-proliferation. International efforts in this regard should build the necessary confidence among states so that international treaties and agreements are multilaterally negotiated and freely accepted which remains the true test of their legitimacy and credibility.

At the same time, states should fully and effectively implement the obligations arising from the agreements or treaties to which they are parties. Non-proliferation obligations arise from international agreements or treaties to which states are parties and issues of non-compliance should be addressed in accordance with the provisions contained within those international agreements or treaties. The role of the Security Council would arise if those treaties themselves provide for such a role.

India cannot accept externally prescribed norms or standards on matters within the jurisdiction of its Parliament or which are not consistent with India's constitutional provisions and procedures, or are contrary to India's national interests or infringe on its sovereignty. India cannot comply with non-proliferation obligations to which it has not provided its sovereign consent.

India's position on the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) is well-known. We cannot accept any obligations arising from treaties that India has not signed or ratified. This position is consistent with the fundamental principles of international law and the Law of Treaties. India cannot accept calls for universalization of the NPT. As India's Prime Minister stated in Parliament on 29 July, 2009, there is no question of India joining the NPT as a non-nuclear weapon state. Nuclear weapons are an integral part of India's national security and will remain so, pending non-discriminatory and global nuclear disarmament.

We remain committed to a voluntary, unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing. We do not subscribe to any arms race, including a nuclear arms race. We have always tempered the exercise of our strategic autonomy with a sense of global responsibility. We affirm our policy of no-first-use of nuclear weapons.

India attaches importance to the Conference on Disarmament (CD) as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum. We have stated our willingness to participate constructively in the FMCT negotiations in the CD as part of its Programme of Work. India is a nuclear weapon state and a responsible member of the world community, and would approach these negotiations as such.

India places great value on the role played by the IAEA's nuclear safeguards system, which is of critical importance to facilitate expansion of nuclear energy to meet global energy needs in a clean and sustainable manner, while reducing proliferation risks. All states have a right to peaceful uses of nuclear energy in accordance with the obligations they have undertaken. A number of agreements and reciprocal commitments were concluded as part of the India civil nuclear initiative. The IAEA's authority to apply safeguards or verify undeclared activity is derived from the specific safeguards agreements concluded with it by its member states. We support international cooperative measures to combat nuclear terrorism and to improve nuclear security, and in this context, look forward to the convening of the Global Summit on Nuclear Security in 2010.

The contributions of various organs of the UN, including that of the Security Council should be in accordance with their Charter responsibilities. During the 1992 Security Council Summit on Non-Proliferation, India, which was represented on the Council, had stated that while prescribing norms and standards for national or international conduct, the Security Council must scrupulously accept those norms for itself. It is clear that the international community would look to the countries with substantial nuclear arsenals represented on the Council for meaningful steps towards nuclear disarmament.

Working towards our common objectives would require a steadfast commitment to genuine multilateralism to ensure viable and enduring solutions to global peace and security. A more representative Security Council would add credibility and vitality to such efforts. India has an impeccable non-proliferation record and is committed to working with the international community to advance our common non-proliferation and disarmament objectives so that we are able to fulfill the vision of a world free of nuclear weapons. We hope that the Security Council summit meeting will spur international efforts in that direction.

The letter was occasioned by the adoption by the UN Security Council a Unanimous Resolution No. 1887 at its meeting No. 6191 on September 24, 2009 and attended by 14 Heads of State/Government and presided over by US President Barack Obama, whose country held the rotating presidency of the Council.

The 13 other Heads of State and Government also addressed the Security Council.

Other Heads of State/Government present were: Presidents Óscar Arias Sánchez of Costa Rica, Stjepan Mesic of Croatia, Dmitry Medvedev of the Russian Federation, Felipe Calderón Hinojosa of Mexico, Heinz Fischer of Austria, Nguyen Minh Triet of Viet Nam, Yoweri Kaguta Museveni of Uganda, Hu Jintao of China, Nicolas Sarkozy of France and Blaise Compaore of Burkina Faso, as well as Prime Ministers Gordon Brown of the United Kingdom, Yukio Hatoyama of Japan and Recep Tayyip Erdogan of Turkey.

The United Nations Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon also attended the meeting. Also addressing the summit were Abdurrahman Mohamed Shalgham, Permanent Representative of Libya, and Mohamed ElBaradei, Director General of the International Atomic Agency (IAEA).

While the resolution did not target specific countries, the Council demanded that parties involved in "major challenges to the non-proliferation regime" comply fully with their obligations, and reaffirmed its call on them to find early negotiated solutions to their issues.

The text underlined the right to pursue peaceful nuclear energy under IAEA supervision, but also urged States to curb the export of nuclear-related material to countries that had terminated their compliance with Agency safeguards agreements. It also called for the enforcement of strict controls on nuclear material to prevent it from falling into dangerous hands.

In addition, the Council called upon all States to refrain from conducting nuclear test explosions and to ratify the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty in order to bring it into force as soon as possible. It called upon the Conference on Disarmament to quickly negotiate a treaty banning the production of fissile materials for explosive devices.

Addressing the summit following adoption of the text, Secretary-General Ban said he had long advocated a stronger role for the Council in nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament, and he urged the 15-member body to make the most of the moment to sustain the momentum. "The need for action is clear. Thousands of nuclear weapons remain on hair-trigger alert. More States have sought and acquired them," he added. "And every day, we live with the threat that weapons of mass destruction could be stolen sold or slip away," the Secretary-General said, emphasizing that nuclear disarmament was the only sane path to a safer world. He called for new ways to increase transparency with regard to the weapons programmes of the recognized nuclear-weapon States, and pledged the commitment of the United Nations in that area and in all other relevant efforts.

In his own opening remarks, President Obama said today's resolution represented agreement on a broad framework of action to end the complex dangers posed by nuclear weapons in the post-cold-war world. To that end, he pledged that the United States would host a Summit in early 2010 and pursue deeper cuts in its nuclear arsenal, as well as agreements with the Russian Federation towards the total elimination of nuclear weapons. He said the resolution also emphasized the Council's authority to respond to violations of its resolutions, including those on Iran and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. "The world must stand together and demonstrate that international law is not an empty promise," he added.

For its consideration of nuclear non-proliferation and nuclear disarmament, the Security Council had before it a concept paper conveyed in a letter dated 15 September 2009 from the President of the Security Council and addressed to the Secretary-General.

According to the paper, the Security Council would focus broadly on nuclear non-proliferation and nuclear disarmament and not on any specific countries, with the goals of underscoring the global reach of proliferation threats; the broadly shared obligation to respond; the positive steps taken to reduce nuclear dangers; and the Council's essential role in addressing growing and pressing nuclear threats.

The paper stated that preventing the spread and use of nuclear weapons was fundamental to the security of nations and the peace of the world. With the recent Group of Eight (G-8) statement on non-proliferation in L'Aquila, Italy, the upcoming Global Nuclear Security Summit in March 2010 and the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) Review Conference to follow, there was an opportunity for important global attention and focus on this critical security issue.

The paper had three key and related nuclear threat reduction topics for discussion: arms control and nuclear disarmament; strengthening the international nuclear non-proliferation regime; and denying and disrupting illicit trafficking in materials of proliferation concern and securing such materials wherever they might be located.

The paper said: "the summit is intended as an opportunity to build support for fissile material cut-off treaty negotiations; the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) Additional Protocol; ratification of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty; and strategic arms control, including new negotiations over the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START)."

With its goal of strengthening the existing international nuclear non-proliferation regime, the paper said, "the summit can facilitate support for technical assistance and access to peaceful uses of nuclear energy, multilateral approaches to the nuclear fuel cycle and efforts to improve and ensure compliance with non-proliferation and safeguards obligations while preventing abuse of the NPT withdrawal provision. The summit is also an opportunity to explore ways to enhance the abilities of States to counter proliferation financing and eliminate procurement networks while reinforcing implementation of resolution 1540 (2004). It is further intended to underscore the importance of an accelerated effort to secure nuclear weapons materials around the world and to build support for establishing and sharing best practices for nuclear security.'

The following were the remarks made by various leaders after the adoption of the Resolution:

President Barack Obama, recalled that the Council and the United Nations had been established at the dawn of the nuclear age, pointing out, however, that while a nuclear nightmare had been averted during the cold war, today the threat of proliferation was growing in scope and complexity. Just one explosion of a nuclear weapon could kill hundreds of thousands of people. The United Nations had a pivotal role to play in avoiding that.

He said the resolution just adopted had brought agreement on a broad framework for action, which acknowledged that all nations had a right to peaceful energy, and those with nuclear weapons had a responsibility to move towards nuclear disarmament. To that end, the United States would host a summit in April 2010. The resolution would strengthen institutions and initiatives aimed at battling trafficking in proliferation-sensitive materials. It also called for safeguards to prevent the conversion of peaceful nuclear energy programmes into weapons programmes.

The Council had the authority to respond to violations of its resolutions, including on Iran and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, he said, emphasizing: "The world must stand together and demonstrate that international law is not an empty promise." The coming 12 months would be critical to implementation of today's resolution. Meanwhile, the United States would pursue an agreement with the Russian Federation, as well as ratification of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty. It would also make deeper cuts in its nuclear arsenal.

"We harbour no illusions about the difficulty of bringing about a world without nuclear weapons," he said, cautioning that there would be "days like today that push us forward" and that told a different story. "It is the story of a world that understands that no difference or division is worth destroying all that we have built and all that we love." Quoting the words of President Ronald Reagan, he said a nuclear war could not be won and must never be fought. "We must never stop until we see the day that nuclear arms are banished from the face of the earth. That is our task."

BAN KI-MOON, Secretary-General of the United Nations, said he had long advocated a stronger role for the Security Council in nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament. The Council should make the most of this moment to sustain the momentum. "The need for action is clear. Thousands of nuclear weapons remain on hair-trigger alert. More States have sought and acquired them. [...] And every day, we live with the threat that weapons of mass destruction could be stolen, sold or slip away," he said, emphasizing that nuclear disarmament was the only sane path to a safer world.

Calling for new ways to increase transparency with regard to the weapons programmes of the recognized nuclear-weapon States, he pledged the Secretariat's willingness to serve as a repository for information. Member States should make the best use of the United Nations disarmament machinery, including the work of the Conference on Disarmament on a fissile material cut-off treaty.

Disarmament and non-proliferation must proceed together, he continued, stressing the importance of effective verification of disarmament and ensuring that IAEA had the resources and support it needed to implement its growing safeguards responsibility. For too long, a divided international community had lacked the will, vision and confidence to move ahead. "Together we have dreamed about a nuclear-weapon-free world. Now we must act to achieve it".

ÓSCAR ARIAS SÁNCHEZ, President of Costa Rica, said the United Nations had been founded on the promise that all would be able to sleep peacefully. That promise had not been kept. "While we sleep, death is awake. Death keeps watch from the warehouses that store more than 23,000 nuclear warheads, like 23,000 eyes open and waiting for a moment of carelessness." It did not seem plausible to discuss disarmament as long as existing agreements were not even being honoured. Countries resisted ratifying the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty, and rejected international mechanisms for verification as long as the clandestine network of proliferation of nuclear supplies continued.

It did not seem plausible to speak of a safer world as long as weapons proliferation took second place on the international agenda, he continued. "This Council fails in its historic mission every day that it turns a blind eye to the rampant arms race," he said, pointing out that the world spent $3.5 million every day on weapons and soldiers and that each year, more than $42 billion worth of conventional arms were sold to developing nations.

Even in Latin America, which had never been more peaceful or democratic, $60 billion would be assigned to military spending this year, he noted. "That is why I ask that we approve the arms trade treaty that my Government has presented to this Organization, because if it is legitimate for us to worry about the possibility that terrorist networks gain access to a nuclear weapon, it is also legitimate for us to worry about the rifles, grenades and machine guns that are given into their hands."

STJEPAN MESIC, President of Croatia, said there was one action to be taken this very day with regard to limiting nuclear proliferation: reinforce the role of the United Nations in that effort. That would not replace any institution or forum dealing with non-proliferation, but would affirm, unanimously and jointly, that the greatest efforts were needed to stop the proliferation of nuclear weapons while also guaranteeing the right of every country to the peaceful use of nuclear energy. If necessary, more stringent universally accepted international controls would be implemented.

The goal was to affirm or establish principles that would help lead to a world free of nuclear weapons without necessarily entering into debate over concrete issues, he said. A first step would be to support, without any reservation, a contractual multilateral system of treaties on the control of nuclear weapons and disarmament, including strict implementation and verification components. The next step would be to call on Member States to contribute to activities aimed at preventing abuse of existing treaties and strengthening both non-proliferation efforts, as well as resources to support them.

He said the long-standing effort to limit and then reduce nuclear weapons with the end-goal of disarmament had received a strong new impetus from the announcement by the President of the United States that his final objective was a world free of nuclear weapons. As a result of that pronouncement, the task of those present in the Council today should be to send a message to the world which had authorized them to act that there was political will to pursue a policy that would provide for the security of all countries without nuclear weapons. The objective was "peace in security", not the "balance of fear" that had prevailed during the cold war, a time of peace without security.

DMITRY A. MEDVEDEV, President of the Russian Federation, said it was obvious to everyone that issues of security were indivisible and global, and that only on the basis of the principles of equal security, mutual respect and compliance with the norms of international law could present-day threats be fought. "Only in this way can we strengthen the nuclear non-proliferation regime and give additional impetus to the nuclear disarmament process," he said. The measures contained in the resolution were a realistic programme of action for the international community to respond efficiently to common threats in the nuclear sphere.

He said his country and the United States had carried out unprecedented reductions of strategic nuclear arsenals within the framework of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START). The Russian Federation had tabled proposals during negotiations with the United States on a new treaty to replace START. "Our main shared goal is to untie the problem 'knots' in the field of non-proliferation and disarmament." That could not be done overnight, as the level of distrust among nations remained too high. Because one of the most dangerous threats was that of nuclear components falling into the hands of terrorists, the existing "back-up system" needed to be modernized.

Underscoring the importance of paying serious attention to peaceful nuclear energy, he said new nuclear power programmes were a key to resolving many of the problems afflicting developing countries and an incentive for the economic growth of entire regions. However, States that carried out such programmes must abide strictly by non-proliferation agreements. Priorities in that area of international cooperation included strengthening the global non-proliferation and disarmament regime, in particular the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

The system of IAEA safeguards must be universalized, and there was also a need to stimulate the earliest ratification of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty by the countries that would ensure its entry into force, he said. The non-proliferation measures of resolution 1540 (2004) must be used more actively. An effective solution to many of the aforementioned problems depended on an interested and constructive engagement by all parties. The strengthening of the nuclear non-proliferation regime and the intensification of the nuclear disarmament process required, most of all, strategic stability and ensuring security for each and every State.

FELIPE CALDERÓN HINOJOSA, President of Mexico, said world peace and security could not be built on nuclear arsenals. Welcoming the arms-reduction talks between the United States and the Russian Federation, he said their final objective should be the total elimination of nuclear weapons. While efforts to put the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty into effect were also welcome, Mexico could not accept the paralysis on disarmament and non-proliferation, which must end with today's resolution.

He expressed support for the right of every State to avail itself of atomic energy for peaceful uses under IAEA supervision, saying that only through related incentives could proliferation be contained. Mexico had taken steps to join export control regimes in order to keep nuclear materials out of the hands of those who must not have them. He also urged the Security Council to help "put the brakes" on the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons, which also wreaked havoc on the Earth.

HEINZ FISCHER, Federal President of Austria, said the international community should no longer accept complacency about the nuclear shadow hanging over the world, adding that a world without nuclear weapons must be the goal. Meanwhile, the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty must be strengthened and universal, while the nuclear States must reduce their arsenals.

He said his country had worked hard to get the Test-Ban Treaty into force and would also work for a fissile cut-off treaty. IAEA monitoring capabilities and export controls must be strengthened, and confidence should be built through the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones. Today's text was a strong one, but resolutions were not enough. Austria, as well as the European Union, would move forward on non-proliferation and disarmament.

NGUYEN MINH TRIET, President of Viet Nam, said nuclear weapons used up resources that could be used for development. They also threatened mass destruction and were liable to fall into the hands of terrorists. Viet Nam supported all efforts to strengthen international action to prevent those ills, in addition to the total elimination of nuclear weapons, starting with unilateral and multilateral reductions. The countries with the largest arsenals must take leading roles in that area. The strength of IAEA also must be enhanced. Viet Nam supported a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South-East Asia and called for more action on peaceful uses of nuclear energy. The Vietnamese had suffered greatly from wars and therefore pledged their strong efforts to accomplish disarmament and non-proliferation for the purpose of strengthening peace.

YOWERI KAGUTA MUSEVENI, President of Uganda, said it was critical to consider non-proliferation, disarmament and peaceful use of nuclear energy in a balanced way in order to address them effectively. It was imperative that nuclear-weapon States accelerate their engagement so as to achieve complete disarmament. The possession of nuclear weapons by some countries was the sole cause for the desire of others to possess them. Welcoming the desire expressed by the largest nuclear weapons States to reduce their arsenals, he stressed that Africa was not interested in nuclear weapons, but in nuclear energy, which was much cheaper than other alternatives, in order to meet the continent's future needs.

HU JINTAO, President of China, said the threat of nuclear war must be eliminated and, for that to happen, global balance and stability must be maintained. Proliferation should be stopped and the nuclear-weapon States with the largest arsenals should reduce those arsenals, after which the countries with smaller arsenals should also begin to reduce their stocks. In order to maintain the peace, there was a need to renounce the use of nuclear weapons, as well as the threat to use them against non-nuclear-weapon States. Work should then commence on the total elimination of nuclear weapons.

He said the right to the peaceful use of nuclear energy should be actively promoted, and IAEA strengthened with that purpose in mind. All countries should strictly observe international agreements on nuclear materials and work together to keep them out of the hands of terrorists. China had always supported the complete elimination of nuclear weapons. It only held them for defence, having pledge no first use and no use against non-nuclear-weapon States. China would continue to play its role in upholding international non-proliferation and disarmament regimes.

BLAISE COMPAORE, President of Burkina Faso, said international security demanded the elimination of all nuclear weapons and their testing. International norms must be respected and deep thought must be put into keeping countries from seeking nuclear weapons when others continued to build them. Bilateral actions to reduce arms were also needed. Now more than ever, there was a need to support the IAEA in order to allow nuclear energy to become an effective development tool. That was the purpose of having a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa, which should be assisted in its non-proliferation efforts.

GORDON BROWN, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, said that by adopting today's resolution, nuclear-weapon States as well as non-nuclear-weapon States were making a commitment to ridding the world of the danger of nuclear weapons. The global bargain underlying the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty -- based on the obligations of both categories -- must be strengthened through a renewed commitment to ensuring compliance and seeking solutions to technical and policy problems.

The world could not stand by when Iran and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea breached international agreements, he stressed. Far tougher sanctions must be considered, and the onus of proof must be on those who breached the relevant agreements. The United Kingdom welcomed efforts to prevent nuclear weapons and materials to fall into the hands of terrorists. It had already taken major steps towards nuclear disarmament, reducing its nuclear-strike capability by 75 per cent.

Retaining only the absolute minimum needed for national security, Britain would also reduce its nuclear submarine fleet as a way to further disarmament goals.

NICOLAS SARKOZY, President of France, said that while "we are here to secure peace" and say yes to reductions, two countries, "right in front of us", were doing exactly the opposite. What Iran and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea were doing undermined the very rules upon which collective security was based. In violation of five Security Council resolutions, Iran had been pursuing nuclear proliferation activities since 2005, he said. It was amassing centrifuges and enriched uranium, while threatening to wipe a United Nations Member State off the map.

"There comes a moment when stubborn facts will compel us to take a decision," he said. "Let us not accept violations of international rules. We may all be threatened one day by a neighbour endowing itself with nuclear weapons," he warned. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea had acted in defiance of all Council decisions since 1993 and continued to test ballistic missiles. "Here again there will come a moment one has to agree and take sanctions," he said, stressing that Council decisions must be followed by results.

Access to nuclear energy for peaceful uses and the transfer of technology by developed countries would obviate the arguments of those who claimed that they needed nuclear energy but converted their nuclear programmes into weapons programmes. Given the courage to impose sanctions against those violating Council resolutions, efforts towards a world without nuclear weapons would gain credibility. Those who needed civil nuclear energy must be guaranteed sustainable access to technologies and fuel, and the entire international community must be assured that nuclear safety, security and non-proliferation would be respected.

YUKIO HATOYAMA, Prime Minister of Japan, said his country had a special moral responsibility as the only one ever to suffer atomic bombings. Describing a wrenching visit to Hiroshima and Nagasaki, he encouraged all world leaders to experience on their own the cruelty of nuclear weapons by speaking to survivors. Having chosen not to possess nuclear weapons, Japan had signed onto the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty to try to prevent the vicious cycle of a nuclear arms race. He renewed his country's commitment to the three non-nuclear principles no matter what steps neighbouring countries took.

Calling upon nuclear-weapons States to reduce their arsenals and foster a climate for disarmament by ensuring transparency, he urged the pursuit of nuclear-weapons-free zones, the entry into force of the Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty and the immediate start of negotiations on a fissile materials cut-off treaty. Japan would engage in active diplomacy to lead international efforts on nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation. The nuclear development programme of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, in particular, posed a grave threat to the peace and security of Japan and the world as a whole, and must not be tolerated. There was also cause for concern about Iran in that regard and there was a need to strengthen the Council's ability to meet those challenges.

RECEP TAYYIP ERDOGAN, Prime Minister of Turkey, stressed the need to bolster the integrity and credibility of the three pillars of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty -- non-proliferation, disarmament and peaceful use of nuclear energy -- by treating them equally, with universal adherence and implementation as key objectives. The current meeting should re-energize the international community for new initiatives towards the Review Conference next year.

Nuclear disarmament required an incremental but sustained approach in which treaty-based commitments were "absolutely indispensable", he said. One of the treaty's big achievements was the unequivocal undertaking by nuclear-weapons States to eliminate their arsenals. That responsibility must now be upheld, building on article VI of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and the 13 practical steps for disarmament agreed in 2000. It was in that context that Turkey welcomed and encouraged efforts to replace START with a new legally-binding instrument.

Irreversible progress on nuclear disarmament would also reinforce the other two pillars of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, he continued, pointing out that it was with that understanding that his country spared no effort in continuing to promote key non-proliferation issues, including the entry into force of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty; the start of negotiations on a fissile material cut-off treaty; and promotion of IAEA's role in advancing the safe and peaceful use of nuclear technology.

States in compliance with safeguard obligations should enjoy unfettered access to civilian nuclear technology, as enshrined in the NPT, which placed strict obligations on States, he said. The most credible assurance about the peaceful nature of national programmes was implementation of the Additional Protocol now serving as the verification standard. Confidence in nuclear technology depended on the strength and reliability of safety measures while nuclear terrorism and illicit trafficking posed grave security threats. The international community should work towards a comprehensive and mutually reinforcing approach based on already available conventions.

ABDURRAHMAN MOHAMED SHALGHAM ( Libya) said his country had taken an historic initiative by voluntarily ceasing work on the nuclear bomb it had been on the verge of producing. Libya therefore deserved the appreciation of the world and assistance in developing its nuclear energy capability for peaceful purposes. It also deserved a permanent seat on the Security Council.

While all countries had a right to develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, with IAEA oversight, the agency must monitor all States without exception, including the recognized nuclear-weapon States, he stressed. Furthermore, the Middle East must become a nuclear-weapon-free zone, and for that to happen, Israel must open its nuclear facilities to inspection. Otherwise, other States would have a desire to build their own weapons.

MOHAMED ELBARADEI, Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), said the global nuclear non-proliferation regime was fragile and had many shortcomings. The Agency's legal authority was severely limited in some countries because many States had not concluded the required agreements with it. Thus, in more than 90 States, it either had no verification authority at all, or its authority was inadequate and it could not verify whether a country was engaged in clandestine nuclear activities. Moreover, the verification mandate centred on nuclear material. If IAEA was expected to pursue possible weaponization activities, it must be given the corresponding legal authority, he emphasized.

A growing number of States had mastered uranium enrichment or plutonium reprocessing and any one of them could develop nuclear weapons quickly if they decided to withdraw from the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, he warned. To address that, a shift was needed from national to multinational control of the nuclear fuel cycle. He said he had proposed the establishment of a low enriched uranium bank that would ensure that States had a guaranteed supply of nuclear fuel for their reactors and did not need to process their own. Complementary proposals had subsequently been made, but the main goal should be the full multi-nationalization of the fuel cycle towards nuclear disarmament.

Furthermore, efforts to secure vulnerable material must be intensified to prevent extremists from getting hold of nuclear and radioactive material.

He went on to emphasize that the Agency itself must be strengthened. Given its dilapidated infrastructure and lack of state-of-the-art technology, which was key to modern-day verification, it would be unable to fulfil its mission at current funding levels. To provide the agency with the kind of supportive political process it needed, the Council needed to develop a comprehensive compliance mechanism to address consistently and systematically cases of non-compliance with or withdrawal from the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, including giving the Agency additional authority to act in specific cases as needed.

More emphasis should also be placed on addressing the insecurities behind many proliferation cases, including endemic conflicts, security imbalances and lack of trust, he said. By demonstrating their commitment to achieving a world free of nuclear weapons, the nuclear-weapon States would give legitimacy to the non-proliferation regime and gain moral authority in their calls to curb the proliferation of those inhumane weapons.

In his closing remarks President Obama said that the statements heard today affirmed the commitment to a difficult but achievable goal, adding that he had been inspired by the seriousness with which all participants had approached the question and "extraordinarily" encouraged by the unanimous adoption of the resolution. "Words alone will not get the job done, but, having affirmed our stated goal, I am confident that if we are diligent we can in fact move this process forward and provide the sort of peace and security for our children and grandchildren that all of us so desperately want," he said.

142. Inaugural Address of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the International Conference on Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy.

New Delhi, September 29, 2009.

It gives me great pleasure to be present at this inaugural ceremony of the International Conference on Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy. I extend a very warm welcome to all the participants particularly our guests from abroad. I extend a special welcome to Dr. El Baradei, who has made outstanding contributions to furthering the cause of global peace and whom we admire as an old friend of our country.

This Conference commemorates the birth centenary of one of India's greatest nation builders and scientific pioneers, Dr. Homi Bhabha. Dr. Bhabha laid the foundation of our nuclear programme by enunciating the three stage nuclear power programme based on a closed nuclear fuel cycle. We are proud of our national achievements in mastering all aspects of the fuel cycle. The current international interest in closing the fuel cycle is a vindication of Dr. Bhabha's pioneering vision and genius.

Dr. Bhabha was a brilliant scientist and a true visionary. At the first International Conference on Nuclear Energy in Geneva in 1955, Dr. Bhabha in his presidential address had said:

'For the full industrialization of the under-developed countries, for the continuation of our civilization and its further development, atomic energy is not merely an aid, it is an absolute necessity. The acquisition by man of the knowledge of how to release and use atomic energy must be recognized as the third epoch of human history.'

This bold vision of what the peaceful uses of atomic energy meant for humanity at large proved to be prophetic. This Conference is taking place on the crest of a global nuclear renaissance, in which I believe India will be a significant factor.

As a result of the far-sighted plans of our scientists, India emerged as a leader in the developing world in harnessing the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. The first stage of our three stage nuclear programme, involving the setting up of Pressurised Heavy Water Reactors (PHWRs) and associated fuel cycle facilities, has now reached a level of maturity. The technology for the manufacture of various components and equipment for PHWRs in India is now well established and has evolved through active collaboration with Indian industry. The second stage envisages setting up of Fast Breeder Reactors (FBRs) backed by reprocessing plants and plutonium-based fuel fabrication plants. With the construction of the Prototype Fast Breeder Reactor at Kalpakkam we have now entered the second stage of the programme. A facility for reprocessing thorium fuel has also been set up. An Advanced Heavy Water Reactor has been designed and its construction will be launched in the near future. This will expedite the transition to thorium-based systems that will I believe mark the third stage of our programme. We are proud of the achievements of India's nuclear scientists and of our industry.

Dr. Bhabha had famously remarked that "no power is as expensive as no power" to justify his strong advocacy of nuclear power as an instrument of economic development. This is truer than ever before as the developing countries seek new energy sources to sustain high rates of economic growth. There is now a growing consensus that nuclear power is an important energy source that is also clean. In fact the majority of nuclear power plants under construction worldwide are now located in Asia.

A number of agreements and reciprocal commitments were concluded as part of the Civil Nuclear Initiative to allow the resumption of full civil nuclear cooperation between India and the international community and we look forward to their full and effective implementation in the coming months and years. The return of India to the international nuclear global mainstream is of high significance not only for India but for global energy security as well.

In our country, we see nuclear energy as a vital component of our global energy mix. The vast energy potential of the three stage programme allows us really to think big. Our nuclear industry is poised for a major expansion and there will be huge opportunities for the global nuclear industry to participate in the expansion of India's nuclear energy programme.

If we can manage our programme well, our three stage strategy could yield potentially 470,000 MW of power by the year 2050. This will sharply reduce our dependence on fossil fuels and will be a major contribution to global efforts to combat climate change.

The peaceful uses of nuclear energy are not just about power. There are promising applications in the areas of agriculture, food production and preservation, medicine and water desalination. In India, we have successfully developed 37 mutant varieties of seeds for commercial cultivation using nuclear techniques. Use of radiation technology for food preservation is growing. We have built a nuclear desalination plant at Kalpakkam and are working on the use of isotope hydrology techniques for rejuvenation of springs, which is an important source of drinking water. I see a growing role for nuclear energy in these areas in the coming decades.

With this limitless potential, I believe that the international community should reflect more on how international cooperation can multiply the benefits of nuclear energy for all humankind.

The International Project on Innovative Nuclear Reactors and Fuel Cycles is an example of such international cooperation. India is a participant in the International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor, or ITER Project. We are ready to contribute to global research and development into new proliferation-resistant fuel cycles. There are proposals for an international fuel bank and we would support efforts in this direction as a supplier nation.

Another critical area of cooperation is that of nuclear safety. The nuclear industry's safety record over the last few years has been encouraging. It has helped to restore public faith in nuclear power. But the technology and management of nuclear safety must be continuously improved.

This brings me to a vital issue that is fundamental to the safety and security of all humanity - the destructive uses of nuclear energy. Just as we seek to enhance peaceful uses of nuclear energy, we have a pressing and immediate moral obligation to draw down and eventually do away with its destructive use of nuclear energy.

I wish to reaffirm that this collective effort will have no greater proponent than India. India's first Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru had advocated the prohibition and abandonment of all weapons of mass destruction way back in the 1950s. It was a call that went largely unheeded at that time. We should not repeat the mistakes of the past.

In 1988, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi put forward at the General Assembly of United Nations a comprehensive Action Plan for the complete elimination of nuclear weapons. We remain committed to that objective.

In 2006, India put forward a set of proposals at the United Nations General Assembly that outlined specific steps that could lead to the elimination of nuclear weapons. It included the proposal for the negotiation of a Nuclear Weapons Convention that would prohibit the development, production, stockpiling and use of nuclear weapons and providing for their elimination within a specified time frame.

It is a matter of regret that the global non-proliferation regime has not succeeded in preventing nuclear proliferation. Its deficiencies in fact have had an adverse impact on our security. Global non-proliferation, to be successful, should be universal, comprehensive and non-discriminatory and linked to the goal of complete nuclear disarmament. We believe that there is growing international acceptance for this viewpoint.

In this context, we feel encouraged by some recent positive signs. President Barack Obama indicated in a significant speech at Prague in April this year the willingness of the United States to reduce the role of nuclear weapons in its national security strategy and work towards a vision of a world free of nuclear weapons. The United States and Russia are also negotiating further cuts in their nuclear arsenals. States with substantial nuclear arsenals should take meaningful steps on nuclear disarmament.

India is proud of its non-proliferation record and is committed to global efforts for preventing the proliferation of all weapons of mass destruction. We are committed to a voluntary, unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing. As a nuclear weapon state and a responsible member of the international community we will participate constructively in the negotiations of an FMCT in the Conference on Disarmament.

We have an updated, effective and comprehensive export controls system and we are committed to not transferring sensitive technologies and equipment to other countries that do not possess them. The IAEA has a crucial role in promoting the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, while reducing proliferation risks.

The specter of nuclear terrorism is a formidable challenge facing the entire global community. At the United Nations General Assembly India has been sponsoring a resolution calling for measures to address this threat.

We support strengthening international efforts in improving nuclear security and in this context, welcome President Obama's timely initiative to convene a Global Summit on Nuclear Security in 2010.

If we use the power of the atom wisely for the universal good, the possibilities are unbounded. But if we do not, the consequences would also be devastating for the peace and progress that all nations seek for their people. The choices are stark and the challenges are indeed daunting. But it is not beyond the imagination of the human mind to devise solutions and strategies that exploit the vast potential of atomic energy to advance human progress, while assuring global peace and security. This task will require the collective will, wisdom and determination of the world community but it is a task that can no longer be put off.

With these words, I once again welcome all. I wish your deliberations all success.

Kudankulam (Tamil Nadu), Haripur (West Bengal)	Russian Federation
Chhayamithi Virdi (Gujarat), Kovvada (Andhra Pradesh)	United States of America

Manama (Bahrain), December 12, 2009.

Mr. Chairman,

Distinguished participants,

It is indeed a pleasure to participate in the Manama Dialogue which has achieved a well deserved reputation as an International Conference of high standing. I commend the IISS, in particular, Dr. John Chipman, its Director General, for bringing together this extraordinary range of policy makers and experts for this Conference.

I propose to organize my remarks by focusing on the current trends in nuclear power globally, offer some thoughts, as seen from India's perspective, as to future trends and challenges, and nuclear security as also India's firm commitment to universal nuclear disarmament.

Mr. Chairman,

Over the past decade, there has been a major change in perception of nuclear power the world over. Today, the stage seems set for a major expansion in the use of nuclear power. This renewed and more widespread interest in nuclear power, accompanied by steady growth of the global industry, has been referred to as the global nuclear renaissance. Facts suggest that this phenomenon is here to stay.

There are 436 nuclear power plants currently in operation in the world, over 90% of them in OECD countries. Significantly, of the 53 new nuclear power reactors under construction, a large percentage is in non-OECD countries, particularly in Asia.

A significant trend is the interest in nuclear power in our region. In 2006, the GCC announced their interest in a joint nuclear development programme. Bahrain and the US signed an MoU in 2008. UAE has concluded MoUs with US and France. Egypt has said that its first reactor would be operational by 2017. Other countries which have expressed interest include Morocco, Yemen, Tunisia, Jordan and Algeria. There is a similar trend in South East Asia. Indonesia, Vietnam and Thailand all have announced plans for the construction of new nuclear power plants.

There is now greater realization of the value of nuclear power as a clean and sustainable energy source, essential to avoiding green house emission and to address the challenge of Climate Change. It is estimated that the complete nuclear power chain from mining to reactors and waste disposal emits only 3.24 grams of carbon dioxide per kilowatt hour, which compares well with wind and hydro power, and much less than fossil fuels. In the larger energy source basket, nuclear power is thus an increasingly important component. For a number of countries, nuclear power is seen as the energy co-efficient of the future.

Energy is vital to fuel the engine of India's economic growth which has averaged 7 to 9% during the last decade.

It is anticipated that by 2030 India's overall projected energy deficit, if we rely only on domestic fuel resources, would be 150,000 Mw. By 2050, it is expected to go up to 412,000 Mw. Nuclear power is the only effective way to bridge this gap. Our internal studies confirm that, if our plans to expand the use of nuclear power fructify, it should be possible to produce 60,000 Mw of nuclear energy by 2030. This is significant, but still highly inadequate to meet our energy deficit.

We are, however, confident that given India's mastery over key aspects of the three-stage closed nuclear fuel cycle, we can leap-frog into the future. Based on our ongoing research into advanced fuel cycles, nuclear scientists calculate that we could close the energy deficit gap of over 400,000 Mw by 2050.

Many way-stations towards this target have been identified, and several bench-marks achieved. Our 500 Mw prototype fast breeder reactor has reached an advanced stage of construction. We are experimenting with an advanced heavy water reactor which uses thorium fuel, and has inbuilt proliferation resistant characteristics as also advanced safety and security features. India's experience with fast breeder reactors and the use of the thorium cycle could prove extremely useful to ensure energy security in the future.

International cooperation is a vital aspect in progressing peaceful uses of nuclear energy. While the former Director General of the IAEA has often commended India for its very positive role in the development of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, I would like to reaffirm that we are ready to place our proven and wide ranging capabilities in the Civil Nuclear sector at the disposal of those engaged in the emerging global renaissance in nuclear energy.

We are today participants in the International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor [ITER]. We are ready to help countries with small power grids wishing to enter nuclear power generation at low cost. Given our experience with thorium-based nuclear technologies we are ready to contribute to global research and development into new proliferation-resistant fuel cycles.

The peaceful uses of nuclear energy are not just about power. There are promising applications in the area of medicine, agriculture, food production and preservation, and water desalination. India has supplied a Bhabhatron-II Teletherapy unit to Vietnam for Cancer Therapy under a programme initiated by the IAEA. With regard to water management, we have a hybrid Nuclear Desalination Demonstration Plant [NDDP] at Kalpakkam based on Reverse Osmosis, which produces nearly two million litres of water per day and another desalination plant which produces 4.5 million litres water per day. This has greatly helped redress water shortages in some of our coastal areas. Nuclear science has also helped in the rejuvenation of mountain springs that are sources of drinking water in the high Himalayas.

Mr. Chairman,

Last year, a new chapter regarding Civil Nuclear Cooperation internationally was opened as far as India was concerned, following the approval first of an India-Specific Safeguards Agreement by the IAEA, and next, the decision of the Nuclear Suppliers Group to resume Civil Nuclear Cooperation with India. The NSG's decision to recognize India's status as a country with advanced nuclear technology, the clean exemption accorded to India on account of its impeccable record of non-proliferation, and the recognition given to India's responsible use of civil nuclear technology are significant developments. We are now witnessing an explosion in regard to Civil Nuclear Cooperation agreements with countries across the globe.

Mr. Chairman,

India has always been conscious of the possible misuse of sensitive nuclear technologies. India, hence, maintains for this reason, effective export controls on nuclear materials and related technologies. Even though we are not a party to the NPT or a Member of the Nuclear Suppliers Group, we have adhered even more strictly than many NPT signatories, to non-proliferation norms and requirements. We fully endorse IAEA's concerns in this regard and are supportive of its efforts to raise the bar on these issues.

Mr. Chairman,

The task before the international community is to adopt a more inclusive and forward-looking approach to shape the ongoing nuclear renaissance. At the same time, we believe that efforts to promote peaceful uses of atomic energy would be strengthened by a renewed commitment to the universal elimination of nuclear weapons. India has a longstanding commitment to global non-discriminatory and verifiable nuclear disarmament. India was the first country to call for a ban on nuclear testing in 1954, and for a non-discriminatory treaty on non-proliferation in 1965.

In 1988, India re-emphasized this commitment through Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's "Action Plan for Ushering in a Nuclear Weapon Free World and Non-violent Order" at the UN General Assembly. In 2006, India again put forward a set of proposals at the UN General Assembly that outlined specific steps that would lead to the elimination of nuclear weapons. This included a proposal for the negotiation of a Nuclear Weapons Convention that would prohibit the development, production, stockpiling and use of nuclear weapons and providing for their elimination within a specified timeframe.

Mr. Chairman,

It is unfortunate that all these years there has not been much progress in regard to nuclear disarmament. We feel encouraged, however, by some positive signs, of late, of putting nuclear disarmament back on the international agenda. The proposal co-authored by Dr. Kissinger, George Shultz, William Perry and Sam Nunn, leading to the very significant speech made by President Barack Obama at Prague in April this year - wherein he outlines a vision of a world free of nuclear weapons - has gladdened our heads. We also feel greatly encouraged by the willingness of the United States and Russia to negotiate further cuts in their nuclear arsenals.

Mr. Chairman,

I would like to recall here that in the early 1980s, India had tabled a Resolution entitled Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons which calls for the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances. In 1988, India initiated a Resolution calling for immediate steps to reduce the risk of accidental use, including de-alerting and de-targeting of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Chairman,

This brings me to the threat posed by terrorists gaining access to nuclear materials and technologies. In our view, nuclear terrorism possibly poses the gravest threat to global security and mankind to-day. An act of nuclear terrorism could have catastrophic consequences. Preventive measures are vital. The world must acknowledge and admit the possible link between WMDs and international terrorism.

In addition, we believe there is need to put in place an international response. India's resolution on measures to prevent terrorists from gaining access to WMDs, adopted by consensus at the UNGA, aims at strengthening international resolve to prevent terrorists from acquiring weapons of mass destruction. India greatly welcomes President Obama's initiative to host a Summit on Nuclear Security in April next year. India will contribute actively to the success of the Summit.

Mr. Chairman,

In conclusion, I would like to quote from a most recent speech of Indian PM at the International Conference on Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy in September this year. I believe, this aptly summarizes the approach we can follow to ensure access to nuclear energy as well as its security "If we use the power of the atom wisely for the universal good, the possibilities are unbounded. If we do not, the consequences would also be devastating for peace and progress that all nations seek for their people. The choices are stark and the challenges are indeed daunting, but it is not beyond the imagination of the human mind to devise suitable solutions and strategies. This task will require the collective will, wisdom and determination of the world community, but it is a task that can no longer be put off".

145. Information given to the Lok Sabha on Civil Nuclear Cooperation Agreement with Canada.*New Delhi, December 16, 2009.

India has concluded negotiations on a Civil Nuclear Cooperation Agreement with Canada. The Agreement, which is yet to be signed by the two Governments, will provide the basis for cooperation between the two countries for peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

Since the NSG decision on civil nuclear cooperation with India of 6 September 2008, India has reached civil nuclear cooperation agreements with France, USA, Russia, Namibia, Mongolia and Argentina. Prior to this decision, civil nuclear cooperation with India had been hampered by the NSG's Guidelines for nuclear transfers first elaborated in 1978.

(This information was given by Shri S.M.Krishna, Union Minister of External Affairs in reply to a question by Shri Milind Deora in Lok Sabha).

146. Information given to the Rajya Sabha regarding reprocessing of Spent Fuel.*New Delhi, December 17, 2009.

Article 6(iii) of the Agreement for cooperation between the Government of India and the Government of the United States of America concerning Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, inter-alia, states that India agreed to establish a new national reprocessing facility dedicated to reprocessing safeguarded nuclear material under IAEA safeguards. Article 6(iii) of agreement calls for consultations on arrangements and procedures within one year.

In March 2009 the US responded to India's request invoking Article 6 (iii) of the Indo-US Agreement on arrangements and procedures confirming that the first round of formal consultations, would commence not later than 3 August 2009 and that final agreement on arrangement and procedures is to be reached not later than 3 August, 2010. The first round of negotiations between India and the United States had taken place on 21-22 July 2009. The latest round of negotiations took place on 21-22 November 2009. The process of negotiations is a continuous process aimed at arriving at an agreement by August 2010.

ASEAN and EAS*147. Press Release by the Ministry of External Affairs on the meeting of the Nalanda Mentor Group.*Bodh Gaya/Nalanda, February 24, 2009.

The Nalanda Mentor Group (NMG) met in Bodh Gaya on 19 and 20 February, 2009. To date, four meetings of the NMG have been held: July 2007 in Singapore; December 2007 in Tokyo; May 2008 in New York, and August 2008 in New Delhi. NMG has examined and recommended the framework and structure of international cooperation and partnership governing the establishment of Nalanda University (NU) which would facilitate continued international support and engagement and help initiate funding arrangements. It has also made recommendations on the choice of an appropriate academician as the Inaugural Rector to be appointed for NU. A team of experts will work with the Inaugural Rector and advise on academic and administrative aspects of NU. There would be an International Board of Trustees and also an Executive Council.

The on-site meeting of NMG took place in Bodh Gaya on 19 and 20 February, 2009. Members of NMG met the Chief Minister of Bihar and had extensive interaction with local government, during which discussions were held on development of infrastructure and the proposed master plan of the region. They emphasized the importance of ensuring effective coordination among all the concerned authorities so that a comprehensive development of the region takes place as NU starts operating. The NMG also visited the proposed NU site.

The NMG also decided to add the School of Information Sciences and Technology to the already proposed schools that would form part of the forthcoming University. The NMG discussed and favoured the idea of having affiliations with academic institutions of distinction in other countries such as Chulalongkorn University of Thailand and The Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, Singapore.

The Report of the NMG will be presented to the Fifth EAS Summit. It was also clarified that reference to the NU in the EAS Chair's Statement should enable Government of India to initiate suitable steps for the drafting of an international agreement by member countries of EAS, identifying the roles and responsibilities, including funding mechanism, on the establishment of NU. The Government of India would then undertake the internal process of passing a Bill through Parliament to recognize the international status of NU. An agreement between Government of India, the Government of Bihar and NU will also be signed which would clarify roles in administration of NU, including the grant of appropriate privileges for the efficient functioning of the University.

The NMG expressed hopes that the proposed NU will be established at the proposed site in Nalanda in the near future following strict time frame for various activities, including legal and administrative procedures.

148. Press Release by the Ministry of External Affairs on the 7th India - ASEAN and 4th East Asia Summit in Thailand.

New Delhi, April 9, 2009.

The India-ASEAN Summit*, the 7th in the series beginning in 2002, is being held at a crucial time in global affairs. There is a financial crisis of unprecedented dimensions, which is calling into question the economic processes unleashed by globalization.

2. India has in various meetings with ASEAN, broadened and deepened functional cooperation in diverse fields, especially with a focus on the Initiatives for ASEAN Integration (IAI), launched by ASEAN to bridge the intra-ASEAN developmental gap between the four new ASEAN entrants, Cambodia, Lao PDR, Myanmar and Vietnam (CLMV countries), and the other six. Many projects in entrepreneurship development and English Language teaching have been established.

3. The sectors of agriculture, investment, transportation, education, human resource development, science & technology, environment, capacity building and culture offer immense scope for further consolidating our relations with ASEAN.

4. If the India-ASEAN Summit represents the vehicle for India's closer economic integration with an economically dynamic region in our neighbourhood, the East Asia Summit (EAS) mechanism, launched in 2005 in Kuala Lumpur, provides India the forum to exchange views in the larger East Asian context. Participation in a larger regional Asian body also helps deeper engagement for a growing economy like India.

* Prime Minister Manmohan Singh was represented at these two meetings by the Minister of Commerce and Industry Kamal Nath. These summits are held annually and attended by Heads of State/Government of the ten ASEAN member countries and its dialogue partners such as India, China, Japan, Korea etc. A notable feature of the East Asia Summit (Comprising leaders of the ASEAN, India, China, Japan, Korea, Australia and New Zealand) this time was a focus session with Heads of International Agencies as World Bank, IMF, ADB, etc.

5. In the context of the current global economic slowdown, developing regional synergies is imperative for dealing with the recessionary trends.

6. The East Asia Summit is among the first steps in community building in Asia, which would help all nations in the group enabling consideration of a new framework for cooperation in the 21st Century.

149. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna to Phuket (Thailand) for ASEAN, East Asia Summit and ARF Ministerial meetings.

New Delhi, July 21, 2009.

External Affairs Minister, Shri S.M. Krishna is visiting Phuket, Thailand on 21 – 23 July, 2009 to attend India – ASEAN, East Asia Summit (EAS) and ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF) Ministerial Meetings.

India-ASEAN Ministerial meeting will review ASEAN – India Cooperation and will deliberate on its Future Direction and exchange views on Regional and International Issues. East Asia Summit Ministerial Meeting will focus on Regional and International Issues and review the direction of the EAS.

India shares civilizational linkages and deep bonds of friendship with member countries of ASEAN spanning millennia. India's engagement with ASEAN and East Asia Summit is an important element of our 'Look East' policy initiated in the early 90s. Ever since India became a Sectoral Dialogue Partner of ASEAN in 1992, ASEAN-India relationship has registered significant progress. Major areas covered by ASEAN-India engagement include Science & Technology, Human Resource Development, Health and Pharmaceuticals, Space Sciences, Agriculture, Information and Communication Technology, Transport and Infrastructure, Tourism and Culture and Small & Medium enterprises.

Our trade with ASEAN has increased from US $ 6.93 billion in 2001 to US$ 38.36 billion in 2008. In order to further consolidate our growing relationship in the trade and economic area we have finalized the ASEAN-India Agreement on Trade-in-Goods. Agreement on Trade-in-Services and Investment are being negotiated.

The East Asia Summit focuses on five areas of cooperation – energy, education, finance, avian influenza and national disaster mitigation. India has taken many initiatives in these areas and is ready to explore new vistas of engagement. Cooperative framework of East Asia Summit plays an important role in the global economy and international relations.

The ASEAN Regional Forum is a premier dialogue forum on security issues in the Asia Pacific. Apart from confidence building and preventive diplomacy on traditional security concerns, it focuses on issues such as terrorism, maritime security and disaster management. India's participation in the Forum since 1996 underscores our contribution to Asian security. On the sidelines of these meetings, External Affairs Minister is likely to have bilateral discussions with his host – the Foreign Minister of Thailand and his counterparts from other participating member countries, the schedule of which is being worked out.

Phuket, July 22, 2009.

Your Excellency Dr Hassan Wirajuda, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Indonesia, Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

I thank you for your warm words of welcome. I am indeed very happy to join all of you for this important ASEAN - India Ministerial Meeting in this beautiful city of Phuket.

2. I extend my profound gratitude to the Foreign Minister of the Kingdom of Thailand for hosting us in this enchanting city. I also thank him for the warm hospitality extended to my delegation and to me and for the excellent arrangements that have been made for the meeting. I am particularly pleased at the warmth and friendship at this first meeting with my ASEAN colleagues.

3. I would, at the outset, like to place on record our deep appreciations to Indonesia for the focus and dedication with which they are discharging their role as Country Coordinator for ASEAN - India dialogue. We have been able to take forward our interaction with ASEAN to a much higher level during the period of their coordinator-ship.

4. Our engagement with ASEAN is the central element of our "Look East" policy which we initiated in the early 1990s. This relationship has been growing steadily and has acquired qualitatively new dimensions, particularly since 2002, when we began our annual Summit level dialogue with ASEAN.

5. History of India's civilizational linkages and deep bonds of trust and friendship with member countries of ASEAN span millennia. These linkages can be seen today in the many historical monuments, the rich cultural heritage, the religious affiliations and in many other areas.

6. Over the past few decades, India and nations in Southeast Asia recognised the strategic importance of developing ties with one another. The steady diversification of our relationship with ASEAN countries is, therefore, a natural process and for us, a matter of deep satisfaction. We are committed to bringing India and ASEAN even closer to each other through exploring our synergies to realize full potential of our relationship.

7. Enhanced cooperation between India and ASEAN enables and simultaneously empowers our region to play an important role in today's interconnected globalized world. Our participation in the East Asia Summit is a natural corollary of our growing multi-faceted engagement and deepening economic integration with ASEAN as a whole, and with its individual member countries, in particular. Regional cooperation and integration can not only help tap the vast potential of our region and the skills of our peoples but also, particularly in the wake of the ongoing global economic and financial crisis, help our region to craft a coordinated and concerted response to the current crisis. Finalization of the text of ASEAN-India Agreement on Trade-in-Goods is a major step forward in this direction. There is much that Governments can do to accelerate the process and to ensure that all economies irrespective of their size also enjoy the benefits that integration would bring. I look forward to constructive engagement and fruitful exchanges with all of you in the task of fashioning a relationship that would benefit all the peoples of our region.

151. Statement by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at India -ASEAN Ministerial meeting.

Phuket, July 22, 2009.

(Review of ASEAN – India Cooperation and its Future Direction and Exchange of Views on Regional and International Issues)

Mr. Co-chairman,

Excellencies,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I thank you for your statements. I am indeed very happy to have the opportunity to share our perspective of ASEAN-India relationship.

2. The progress ASEAN-India relationship has registered since the last Summit in Singapore in 2007 is encouraging. The productive and comprehensive discussions among our colleagues and Senior Officials from member countries leave no doubt that our “Partnership in Action”, which we forged in 2002 in Phnom Penh at the annual India-ASEAN Summit, is heading in the right direction. The ASEAN-India Summits have provided us with the opportunity to meet and learn more about each other and to give new directions to our cooperation. In order to accelerate the growth in our bilateral relations in all spheres of activity, India has appointed an Ambassador to ASEAN.

3. Our economic complementarities and global developments have added to the close political, economic and security inter-linkages between India and ASEAN. India-ASEAN trade amounted to a little over 38 billion US Dollars in 2007-08. I am sure that the target of 50 billion US Dollars in 2010, as proposed by our Prime Minister at the 2007 Summit in Singapore, is not beyond reach despite the current economic slowdown. We have finalized the text of Agreement on trade-in-Goods and have also commenced negotiations on Services and Investment Agreements in October, 2008.

4. As was mentioned at the last Summit in 2007, India remains committed to the Initiative for ASEAN Integration. I am happy to note the visit of 100 ASEAN students and institutionalization of annual Diplomatic Course for the ASEAN diplomats. India also extends training facilities to nationals of ASEAN member countries in a variety of other disciplines.

5. It is also a matter of great satisfaction that an understanding has been reached for Exchange Programme for parliamentarians of ASEAN countries and India at mutually convenient dates. This will be an important interaction among our Parliamentarians and will afford an opportunity to them to learn from each other.
6. In the area of S&T, I am happy to note that we have fulfilled our commitment of establishment of S&T Fund with initial contribution of US$ 1 million. We are working together to get this Fund operationalized at an early date.
7. In our efforts to significantly improve air connectivity in our region, we should see how close we can get to an “open skies” arrangement, while protecting legitimate concerns. This will have a long term and sustained impact on the economic cooperation in the region.
8. Agriculture is another sector on which we could focus. Hundreds of millions of our peoples are engaged in this sector. It has great economic, political and social significance for all our countries. We have our respective strengths in agro-technology including biotechnology, new and improved farming techniques, human resource development, agro-processing and marketing. I welcome the decision for future cooperation in the area which could develop into a concrete programme of action before the next Summit. Our scientists are ready to cooperate with their ASEAN colleagues in this vital endeavour.
9. We are working together to operationalise the Green Fund which aims to execute pilot projects to promote adaptation and mitigation technologies for sustainable development. We hope that a mutually agreed Final Project Implementation Plan can be drawn soon.
10. ASEAN and India are important source markets for each other from the tourism angle. The cooperation in the field of tourism between India and ASEAN through development of Joint Tourism Packages as recommended by the 11th meeting of Joint Cooperative Committee in April 2009 in New Delhi would help to facilitate seamless travel in the region and would also expand linkages to other sectors. We have together taken several initiatives in the area of tourism which need to be further strengthened to increase flow as well as to reap the benefits from tourism for the economic growth of the region. In this context, the contribution that will be made by the Open Skies Regime needs little emphasis.

11. In the areas of health and traditional medicine, we hope early finalization of concept note on cooperation in Health and Pharmaceuticals and MoU between Indian Department of AYUSH and ASEAN which have been submitted to ASEAN Secretariat and due to come up in the next Senior Officials Meeting in December 2009.

12. I am also happy to convey India's approval for the Digital Science and Technology Library Project at a cost of US $729,753/- in fulfillment of our Prime Minister's offer made at the 2nd ASEAN-India Summit.

13. I would once again urge the ASEAN countries to fully utilize the 50 scholarships in traditional medicine offered by our Department of AYUSH.

14. In working towards the goal of integrating India and ASEAN into one seamless market for goods, services and investment and encouraging the establishment of more production networks in the region, the possibility of a Roadmap for Rationalisation of Logistics Services may be explored.

Excellencies,

15. The threat to our countries from the menace of international terrorism has, unfortunately, increased in recent times. The terrorist attack on our financial capital, Mumbai, in 2008, leading to the loss of hundreds of innocent Indian and foreign lives shook not just our region, but the world as a whole, for the complete disregard of human decency.

16. Terrorism threatens democratic and open societies. International solidarity is necessary in order to combat this scourge effectively. We should unequivocally condemn terrorism; no cause or reasoning can be used to justify such acts. In this context, the early adoption of the Comprehensive Convention on Terrorism being discussed in the United Nations is an immediate imperative.

17. In 2003, we adopted a Joint Declaration in Bali to cooperate in combating international terrorism. In the light of such terrorist attacks, it is appropriate that we exchange information and intelligence and develop more effective counter-terrorism initiatives, to enable sustainable development of our region.

18. The Millennium Development Goals adopted by Heads of States/ Government at the UN Millennium Summit in September 2000 form a minimum core of development objectives that are a must for better quality of life for the human kind. It is particularly important that we do not lose sight of these objectives in the current economic downturn.

Regional structures

19. I may note the progress made by SAARC in bringing South Asian countries together over the last two decades. The SAARC development fund has made a promising beginning. SAARC countries have agreed on moving towards a South Asian Customs Union and Economic Union; established a SAARC Food Bank; are improving physical connectivity; and are establishing a South Asian university.

Excellencies,

20. Looking further ahead, India and ASEAN have prepared a common India-ASEAN Vision 2020 document, with its long-term strategic implications. It provides an excellent road map for realizing the potential of our relationship. Significance of ASEAN – India relationship as an important factor contributing to economic growth and stability of our region could hardly be overemphasized.

Thank you.

152. Statement by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the East Asia Summit Ministerial Meeting.

Phuket, July 22, 2009.

Your Excellency Mr. Kasit Piromya, The Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Kingdom of Thailand

Excellencies,

I would, at the outset, like to express my profound gratitude to our host, the Thai Government, for their warm hospitality extended to me and my delegation.

2. Our countries have historical close and warm ties. We have faced common challenges. East Asia Summit mechanism provides us with a platform to rediscover the complementarities in the areas of our mutually beneficial cooperation.

Global Economic and Financial Crisis

3. Our senior officials have had fruitful discussions at the ad hoc consultations to prepare the ground for our today's meeting. Our meeting is taking place in the backdrop of an ongoing multidimensional and unprecedented global financial and economic crisis.

4. It is clear that a global crisis of such magnitude, dimensions and reach requires coordinated global response. Apart from various national packages implemented by different countries, numerous collective measures are envisaged and discussed most recently within the framework of G8 Outreach interaction at L'Aquila in Italy to arrest recession, expedite recovery and put the world economy on the path of sustainable development.

5. Mr. Chairman, the EAS standalone statement on financial crisis issued by Thailand in June, 2009 aptly demonstrates the consensus we need in Asia to address the crisis through a mix of stimulus packages, enhancement of regional financial cooperation and integration frameworks, efforts to expand domestic demand, support to external credit agencies and international financial institutions and safeguarding social safety programmes while eschewing protectionist and distortionary measures I would like to point out that the present global crisis must have an inclusive approach that is also sensitive and has the consensus of EAS members.

Education

6. Mr. Chairman, the field of education also provides for opportunities for cooperation. We discussed about re-development of the Nalanda University that was established around 5th Century AD. Lord Buddha himself is supposed to have preached many sermons at Nalanda. The University then, attracted a large number of scholars from South East and East Asia. The high level Nalanda Mentor Group's report is being given the final touches and the final report should be ready soon.

Regional/International Developments

7. Let me now share my views on some regional and international developments. Seven and a half years after U.S. troops arrived in Afghanistan following the attacks of September 11, 2001, the war there is more deadly than ever. The forthcoming Presidential and National Assembly elections have added political fluidity to a grave security situation. Ensuring peaceful or credible elections in many parts of Afghanistan is going to be a major challenge. India is ready to play a constructive role as a responsible power in defeating extremism of all kinds.

8. We have attempted to help Afghanistan in its reconstruction efforts as a means to bringing about stability in that country. We have an effective, visible and highly successful assistance programme in Afghanistan. Our developmental assistance to Afghanistan, now over US$ 1.3 billion (pledged -US$ 1.2 billion), spans almost the entire gamut of economic and social developmental activities. Unfortunately our personnel and project have been regularly targeted by the Taliban. The despicable attack on our Embassy in July 2008 in which we lost a number of our people is condemnable but it will not deter us from fulfilling our commitments.

Sri Lanka

9. With armed resistance by the LTTE coming to an end in Sri Lanka, India is working with the people and Government of Sri Lanka to provide relief to those affected by the tragic conflict, and to rapidly rehabilitate all those who have been displaced, bringing their lives to normalcy as soon as possible.

Neighbouring countries

10. Let me now turn to India's neighbourhood. Nepal has undergone democratic transition. India remains committed to support the people and the Government of Nepal in this transition and in its developmental efforts.

11. Successful elections in Bangladesh in late 2008 were a resounding victory for democracy. The people of Bangladesh have given a clear mandate and reposed full faith in the newly elected government under the leadership of Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina. Bhutan has also undergone voluntary and peaceful transition to democracy.

12. Since the inception of the East Asia Summit, in 2005, world has witnessed many global crises in the food, energy, economic and financial and now the health sector in the form of Swine Flu. While it serves as a useful platform for exchange of views, we feel that time is ripe for it to go beyond. We could consider some areas of collaborative action that can take forward our common objective and vision of deepening cooperation in the region. International terrorism, trans-national crime and disaster mitigation are all areas which require cooperative regional approaches and could be considered as part of our common efforts. I would like to point out that the tackling of international terrorism requires concerted and cooperative approach. In this context, the early adoption of the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism by the UNGA, would go a long way to help.

13. Before winding up, I would like to reiterate that India attaches great importance to its interaction in East Asia Summit. We are committed to expanding and developing new linkages within the East Asia Summit comprehensively and to engage constructively with all our partners in EAS.

14. I propose that we entrust our senior officials with the task to identify concrete projects in key areas of our cooperation such as energy security, disaster management and mitigation, food security, etc.

Thank you.

153. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce and Industry on the signing of the India - ASEAN Free Trade Agreement.

New Delhi, August 13, 2009.

Shri Anand Sharma, Union Minister of Commerce & Industry, today signed the ASEAN-India Free Trade Agreement in Goods following the meeting of the ASEAN-India Economic Ministers, held in Bangkok. The meeting was hosted by Thailand, the current Chair of the 10-member Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) grouping that completed four decades of its existence in 2007. As part of the Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement, the Trade in Goods Agreement will integrate the two globally important economic blocks for mutually beneficial economic gains. ASEAN is a major trading partner for India and accounts for about 10% of its global trade. In the last financial year, bilateral trade between India and ASEAN was more than US $ 40 billion. India and ASEAN have set an ambitious target of achieving bilateral trade of US $ 50 billion by 2010. The current Agreement which comes into force from 1st January 2010 would help achieve this target.

The Trade in Goods agreement focuses on tariff liberalization on mutually agreed tariff lines from both the sides and is targeted to eliminate tariffs on 80% of the tariff lines accounting for 75% of the trade in a gradual manner starting from 1st January, 2010. The Agreement has provided flexibilities to India and ASEAN countries to exclude some of the products from the tariff concessions or eliminations to address their respective domestic sensitivity. India on its part has excluded 489 items from the list of tariff concessions and 590 items from the list of tariff elimination to address sensitivities in agriculture, textiles, auto, chemicals, crude and refined palm oil, coffee, tea, pepper etc. ASEAN countries have also maintained similar exclusion list from the proposed tariff concessions or eliminations.

The exchange of tariff concessions between India and the ASEAN Member Countries would lead to growth in bilateral trade and investment resulting in economic benefits to India and the ASEAN Member Countries. Indian exporters of Machinery and machine parts, Steel and steel products, agriculture products such as Oilcake, Wheat and Buffalo Meat, Auto Components, Chemicals and Synthetic Textiles would gain additional market access as a result of tariff liberalisation by ASEAN. Indian manufacturers would also be able to source products at competitive prices from the ASEAN countries.

The Agreement also provides for bilateral safeguard mechanisms to address sudden surge in imports after the Agreement comes into force. In such an eventuality if it hurts a domestic industry, safeguard measures including imposition of safeguard duties may be put in place for a period up to 4 years. The flexibility to invoke the safeguard measures will remain available for both the sides for a period of 7 years to 15 years from the date, the Agreement comes into force. The signing of the Agreement signals India's firm commitment to its 'Look East' policy of building upon its historical links with the countries of the Southeast Asian region and further deepening and widening this partnership.

Earlier, during the day, Mr. Anand Sharma called on the Prime Minister of Thailand Mr. Abhisit Vejjajiva. He also held discussions with the Minister of Commerce, Ms. Porntiva Nakasai and the Minister of Industry, Mr. Charnchai Chairungrueng in separate meetings. The meetings focused on ways to further strengthen bilateral trade and investment linkages. He invited Ms. Porntiva Nakasai to attend the Informal Ministerial Meeting on the Doha Round of WTO to be held in New Delhi on September 3-4, 2009.

Shri Anand Sharma also held substantive bilateral discussions with his counterpart Indonesian trade minister Mari Pangetsu. He invited her to attend the forthcoming WTO ministerial meeting to be held in New Delhi on 3-4 September. He also met the Singapore Trade Minister Lim Hng Kiang and the two ministers discussed a range of bilateral economic relations.

India-ASEAN trade was around US$ 40 billion during 2007-08 making ASEAN the 4th largest trading partner of India (after EU, US and China). The India-ASEAN trade has grown rapidly in recent years (27% CAGR since 2000). The signing of the India-ASEAN Free Trade Agreement will give a further impetus to the trade and investment linkages between India and ASEAN. India and ASEAN are currently negotiating Agreements on Trade in Services and Investment, which are to be concluded by December 2009. India looks forward to access the vast services market of ASEAN. India's total trade in services was US $ 137.50 billion in 2006. The corresponding figure for ASEAN is US$ 280.90 billion. Similarly, Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) attracted by India in 2007-08 was US $ 24.60 billion whereas ASEAN member countries attracted FDI totaling US $ 60.50 billion in the year 2007.

1. Each Party, which is a WTO Member, retains its rights and obligations under Article XIX of GATT 1994 and the Agreement on Safeguards in Annex 1A to the WTO Agreement (Agreement on Safeguards) and Article 5 of the Agreement on Agriculture in Annex 1A to the WTO Agreement (Agreement on Agriculture). Any action taken pursuant to Article XIX of GATT 1994 and the Agreement on Safeguards or Article 5 of the Agreement on Agriculture shall not be subject to the Agreement on Dispute Settlement Mechanism under the Framework Agreement (ASEAN-India DSM Agreement).
2. A Party shall have the right to initiate a safeguard measure under this Article (an AIFTA safeguard measure) on a good within the transition period for that good. The transition period for a good shall begin from the date of entry into force of this Agreement and end five (5) years from the date of completion of tariff reduction/elimination for that good.
3. A Party shall be free to take an AIFTA safeguard measure if, as an effect of the obligations incurred by that Party under this Agreement, a good is being imported from the other Parties to which tariff concession was made for that good in such increased quantities, absolute or relative to domestic production, and under such conditions so as to substantially cause or threaten to cause serious injury to the domestic industry of the importing Party that produces like or directly competitive goods in its territory.

4. If an AIFTA safeguard measure is taken, a Party taking such a measure may:
- (a) suspend the further reduction of any tariff rate under this Agreement for the good; or
  - (b) increase the tariff rate on the good concerned to a level not to exceed the lesser of:
    - (i) the applied MFN tariff rate on the good in effect at the time the action is taken; or
    - (ii) the applied MFN tariff rate on the good in effect on the day immediately preceding the date of entry into force of this Agreement.
5. An AIFTA safeguard measure may be maintained for an initial period of up to three (3) years and may be extended for a period not exceeding one (1) year if it is determined pursuant to the procedures referred to in paragraph 6 that the measure continues to be necessary to prevent or remedy serious injury and to facilitate adjustment and that there is evidence that the domestic industry is adjusting. 6. In applying an AIFTA safeguard measure, the Parties shall adopt and apply, mutatis mutandis, the rules for the application of safeguard measures, including provisional measures, as provided under the Agreement on Safeguards, with the exception of the quantitative restriction measures set out in Articles 5 and 7, and also, Articles 9, 13, and 14 of the Agreement on Safeguards.

8. In seeking compensation under Article 8 of the Agreement on Safeguards for an AIFTA safeguard measure, the Parties concerned shall seek the good offices of the Joint Committee established under Article 17 to determine the substantially equivalent level of concessions to that existing under this Agreement between the Party taking the safeguard measure and the exporting Parties which would be affected by such a measure prior to any suspension of equivalent concessions. Any proceedings arising from such good offices shall be completed within 90 days from the date on which the AIFTA safeguard measure was applied.

9. If no agreement on the compensation is reached within the timeframe specified in paragraph 8, the Parties concerned shall be free to suspend the application of tariff concessions under this Agreement, which is substantially equivalent to the AIFTA safeguard measure on originating goods of the Party applying the AIFTA safeguard measure.

10. On a Party's termination of an AIFTA safeguard measure on a good, the tariff rate for that good shall be the rate that, according to that Party's schedule of tariff reduction and elimination as set out in Annex 1 would have been in effect had the measure not been applied.

11. Notwithstanding the provisions of this Article, no Party may impose an AIFTA safeguard measure on a good to which actions are being applied pursuant to Article XIX of GATT 1994 and the Agreement on Safeguards or Article 5 of the Agreement on Agriculture. When a Party intends to apply, pursuant to Article XIX of GATT 1994 and the Agreement on Safeguards or Article 5 of the Agreement on Agriculture, an action on a good to which an AIFTA safeguard measure is being applied, it shall terminate the AIFTA safeguard measure prior to the imposition of the action to be applied pursuant to Article XIX of GATT 1994 and the Agreement on Safeguards or Article 5 of the Agreement on Agriculture.

12. All official communications and documentations exchanged among the Parties and with the Joint Committee relating to an AIFTA safeguard measure shall be in writing and shall be in the English language.

ARTICLE 11

Measures to Safeguard the Balance of Payments

Nothing in this Agreement shall be construed to prevent a Party from taking any measure for balance of payments purposes. A Party taking such measure shall do so in accordance with the conditions established under Article XII of GATT 1994 and the Understanding on Balance of Payments Provisions of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994 in Annex 1A to the WTO Agreement.

ARTICLE 12

General Exceptions

Each Party retains its rights and obligations under Article XX of GATT 1994, which shall be incorporated, mutatis mutandis, into and form an integral part of this Agreement.

ARTICLE 13*Security Exceptions

Nothing in this Agreement shall be construed:

- (a) to require any Party to furnish any information the disclosure of which it considers contrary to its essential security interests;
- (b) to prevent any Party from taking any action which it considers necessary for the protection of its essential security interests, including:
  - (i) action relating to fissionable materials or the materials from which they are derived;
  - (ii) action relating to the traffic in arms, ammunition and implements of war and to such traffic on other goods and materials as is carried on directly or indirectly for the purpose of supplying a military establishment;
  - (iii) action taken so as to protect critical communications infrastructure from deliberate attempts intended to disable or degrade such infrastructure;
  - (iv) action taken in time of war or other emergency in international relations; or
- (c) to prevent any Party from taking any action in pursuance of its obligations under the United Nations Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security.

Establishment of Arbitral Panels

1. If the consultations under Article 4 fail to settle a dispute within 60 days after the date of receipt of the request for consultations or within 20 days after such date in cases of urgency, including those which concern perishable goods, the Complaining Party may make a written request to the Party Complained Against to establish an arbitral panel. 6. The single arbitral panel shall organise its examination and present its findings in such a manner that the rights which the parties to the dispute would have enjoyed had separate arbitral panels examined the complaints are in no way impaired. If one of the parties to the dispute so requests, the arbitral panel may submit separate reports on the dispute concerned, if the timeframe for writing such reports so permit. The written submissions by a party to the dispute shall be made available to the other parties to the dispute, and each party to the dispute shall have the right to be present when any other party to the dispute presents its views to the arbitral panel.
7. Where more than one arbitral panel is established to examine the same matter, to the greatest extent possible, the same persons shall be appointed by the parties to the disputes to serve on each of the separate arbitral panels and the timetable for the proceedings of each separate arbitral panel shall be harmonised.
8. An arbitral panel shall have the following terms of reference unless the parties to the dispute agree otherwise within ten (10) days from the date of the establishment of an arbitral panel:

If any party to the dispute fails to appoint an arbitrator within such period, then the arbitrator appointed by the other party to the dispute shall act as the sole arbitrator.
3. The parties to the dispute shall endeavour to agree on the third arbitrator within 30 days after the date of appointment of the second arbitrator. The third arbitrator shall serve as the chair. 5. If an arbitrator appointed under this Article resigns or becomes unable to act, a successor arbitrator shall be appointed in the same manner as prescribed for the appointment of the original arbitrator. The successor arbitrator shall have all the powers and duties of the original arbitrator. The work of the arbitral panel shall be suspended until the successor arbitrator is appointed.

These submissions shall also be given to the parties to the dispute and may be reflected in the report of the arbitral panel.

2. A Third Party shall receive the submissions of the parties to the dispute at the first meeting of the arbitral panel.

3. If a Third Party considers that a measure that is already the subject of an arbitral panel proceedings nullifies or impairs benefits accruing to it under the covered agreements, such Party may have recourse to normal dispute settlement procedures under this Agreement.

Suspension and Termination of Proceedings

1. Where the parties to the dispute agree, the arbitral panel may suspend its work at any time for a period not exceeding 12 months from the date of such agreement. Upon the request of any party to the dispute, the arbitral panel proceedings shall be resumed after such suspension. If the work of the arbitral panel has been suspended for more than 12 months, the authority of the arbitral panel shall lapse unless the parties to the dispute otherwise agree.

2. The parties to the dispute may agree to terminate the proceedings of an arbitral panel at any time before the presentation of the final report to them, in the event that a mutually satisfactory solution to the dispute has been found.

3. Before the arbitral panel makes its decision, it may, at any stage of the proceedings, propose to the parties to the dispute that the dispute be settled amicably.

The arbitral panel shall consult regularly with the parties to the dispute and provide them adequate opportunities for the development of a mutually satisfactory resolution. Where the arbitral panel concludes that a measure is in conflict with a provision of any of the covered agreements, it shall recommend that the Party Complained Against bring the measure into conformity with that provision. In addition to its recommendations, the arbitral panel may suggest ways by which the Party Complained Against could implement its recommendations. 4. The parties to the dispute may submit written comments on the interim report within 14 days of its presentation. The arbitral panel shall include in its final report a discussion on the comments of the parties to the dispute.

3. The Party Complained Against shall, within 20 days after the date of issuance of the award, notify the Complaining Party of the period of time required to implement the award. Compensation, if granted, shall be consistent with the covered agreements.
2. 4. If the Party Complained Against considers that the suspension of concessions or benefits under the covered agreements by the Complaining Party is inconsistent with the provisions of paragraph 4 of Article 15, it may refer the matter to an arbitral panel. For the purposes of establishing the arbitral panel under this Article, paragraph 6 of Article 15 shall apply mutatis mutandis.

157. Media Briefing by Secretary (East) of the Ministry of External Affairs on Prime Minister's Visit to Thailand for India-ASEAN and East Asia Summits.

New Delhi, October 21, 2009.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening and a very warm welcome to all of you. Secretary (East) Mr. N. Ravi is here to talk to you about Prime Minister's forthcoming visit to Hua Hin in Thailand for the ASEAN and East Asia Summits. After his opening remarks, he will be happy to take a few questions. Let me also clarify that this briefing is on the subject of Prime Minister's visit to Hua Hin. So, questions, if any, will be taken on that subject only. I have also the pleasure of introducing my colleague Mr. Yogendra Kumar, to the right of Secretary (East), who is our Additional Secretary (Multilateral Economic Relations). Sir, the floor is yours.

Secretary (East) (Shri N. Ravi): Thank you, Vishnu. Good evening to all of you.

As you would be aware, Prime Minister is visiting Thailand from the 23rd to the 25th of this month to attend the Seventh India-ASEAN Summit and also simultaneously attend the Fourth East Asia Summit. The Summits are being held in the town of Hua Hin which is in the Gulf of Thailand, about 200 kilometres south of Bangkok. On the margins of these two multilateral events, our Prime Minister would also have bilateral meetings with the leaders who would be participating in these two summits. The schedule of these meetings is being finalised.

The programme is something like this. The India-ASEAN Summit will be held on the 24th. The Summit itself starts at about 4 p.m. After the Summit is over, later in the evening there is a gala dinner where all the leaders will be hosted by the Prime Minister of Thailand and his spouse. The following day that is on the 25th of October, the Fourth East Asia Summit would be held. This will start at about 9 in the morning. It is in a retreat format. After the retreat format meeting is over and after a break or so, the same leaders will have a working lunch when they would be discussing a variety of topics.

Now to go back, most of you would be aware that the First India-ASEAN Summit was held in 2002 in Phnom Penh in Cambodia. This is the seventh in the series. The assembled leaders of the ten ASEAN countries and our Prime Minister would review the progress in the growth of our relationship which commenced with the launch of our Look East Policy in 1992. Since then we have made major strides in our bilateral relationship. This has been evidenced by the signing of the India-ASEAN Free Trade Agreement in Goods in the middle of August in Bangkok. Presently the two sides are engaged in discussing the Free Trade Agreement in Services and Investment.

Overall our trade has been growing. According to some figures, the India-ASEAN trade amounts to about 10 per cent of our global trade. If you just take the ASEAN, it is a region that comprises of about 600 million people where the nominal GDP is about 1.7 trillion US dollars. These figures are for 2008. Our cooperation with all the ASEAN countries covers the vast array of fields including information and communications technology, human resource development, agriculture and tourism.

We are also active participants in a programme called the Initiative for ASEAN Integration. This was begun in 2004 with a kind of an agreement that was signed among the ASEAN countries to help the recent entrants - that is Cambodia, Laos, Myanmar and Vietnam - to reduce the gap in development in those countries and the original six who had been members from much earlier in the late 1960s itself. Under this Initiative for ASEAN Integration, we have had a tremendous degree of success in all the four countries and we look forward to integrating some of their development process using information technology, entrepreneurship development and English language teaching centres which we have succeeded in establishing in these four countries. There are other countries also who are now interested particularly in IT as well as in English language teaching centres.

Our relations with the ASEAN countries overall have assumed greater salience in the last few years. Particularly, it has assumed a special role after the emergence of the global economic and financial crisis. As most of you would be aware, although all countries in the world have been affected adversely by the crisis, the fact does remain that many among the Asian countries have been able to meet some of these challenges with a significant degree of success starting with India itself. Today the Prime Minister released figures of growth of GDP. About 6.7 per cent is what we expect despite various problems that we are facing. Similarly, a country like China has posted a very high degree of rate of growth, well over 8 per cent and close to 9.

Overall, Asian countries including the ASEAN countries have been able to deal with the after-effects of the global financial crisis with a certain degree of confidence and success. This would be one of the main subjects of discussion in both the Summits, and certainly in the India-ASEAN Summit.

The Fourth East Asia Summit that meets on the 25th of October comprises the ten ASEAN countries and Australia, New Zealand, India, China, Japan and South Korea. These are the 16 members. It was established in 2005 in Kuala Lumpur. It has been able to develop a wider vision of cooperation within Asia encompassing developed, developing, emerging markets and least developed countries. So, it is a mix which gives an opportunity to the members to exchange their expertise in different fields whether it is manufacturing or capacity-building or training. It gives them a tremendous degree of opportunity and this has been utilised in a variety of areas. This includes energy, environment, climate change and sustainable development, financial cooperation, natural disaster mitigation, education and most importantly a Track II study on a Comprehensive Economic Partnership in East Asia. It is called the CEPEA. Till recently, CEPEA was on a Track II where mostly think tanks and representatives including economic experts were examining how to facilitate and expand trade among the East Asia Summit countries that is the ASEAN plus Six. Recently, when the Economic Ministers of the East Asia Summit countries met in Bangkok in August, they decided to enhance the activity of CEPEA from the so-called Track II to Track I in the sense that senior officials of the respective Governments would now meet to discuss how to take this forward.

The ASEAN Summit, independent of India associating with ASEAN or EAS itself, which is currently being held amongst the ASEAN countries has the theme of enhancing connectivity and empowering people. That is very important in the present day context when all countries have to connect with each other so that they can grow, in the difficult circumstances that they face, with a fair degree of confidence and take their economic growth forward.

There will be a Chair's Statement after the East Asia Summit and the leaders will also adopt a statement on disaster management which outlines the elements of future cooperation amongst the participating countries in this particular field. Earlier in June of this year, the Thai Government after consultations with all the concerned governments have issued a statement on global economic and financial crisis. This was to have been issued in April but then because of the fact that the Summit could not be held in April, it was issued in June. Now both Summit meetings are timely because it is just about a year since the global economic crisis broke out and countries have been able to deal with the after-effects with varying degrees of success. But the important thing is these meetings give us an opportunity of exchanging views, exchanging notes as it were and to see how best we can complement each other's strengths so that the future of economic development of all the countries continues at a pace to the satisfaction of the leaders.

I think I will stop here. If there are a couple of questions, I will take them.

Question: Mr. Ravi, is there any confirmation about the Prime Minister meeting the Chinese Premier as well at the ASEAN Summit? If yes, when will that be?

Secretary (East): The meetings with various leaders are under planning. The scheduling is taking place. As soon as a meeting is confirmed, all of you would know.

Question: Is Free Trade Agreement in Services and Investment likely to be finalised during the Summit?

Secretary (East): According to my information, two rounds have already been completed. The information is that the discussions are proceeding in good atmosphere. So, though not by the time of the Summit, certainly before long we should have some degree of common approaches in this sector.

Question: What is latest on the Nalanda project?

Secretary (East): The Nalanda project has been examined by the Nalanda Mentor Group under the chairmanship of Prof. Amartya Sen. It has held five meetings including one meeting on-site in Nalanda in February of this year. Based on their recommendations we are in discussion with all the East Asia Summit countries on how to proceed forward. Within the country we already have the Nalanda University Bill in Bihar which has already been passed. There is a basic plan that they have. But now that it is going to be an internationally agreed project among the different countries. We may have some kind of a common position emerging in the forthcoming summit.

Question: I just wanted to carry forward the question about the expected meeting between the Prime Minister and Chinese Premier. Are we looking forward to express our concern on the recent exchanges of statements by both the Governments and of course the demarches?

Secretary (East): Relations between India and any other country including China cover a very wide range and all subjects of mutual interest and immediate interest would be covered. As soon as the meeting is fixed, I am sure we will inform you and you all will come to know of it. We will inform you of the results of the meeting also. I think before you leave you will know what it is all about.

Question: You said that 10 per cent of our global trade is between India and ASEAN countries. In terms of quantum, how much is the trade between the two. Could you give us the actual figure?

Secretary (East): India-ASEAN trade has reached a figure of about 38 billion dollars in 2007-08. I am running into a bit of a problem here because certain websites give a different data and some figures are provisional. So, anything between 35 to 38 billion dollars last year would be a safe figure.

Question: Sir, two questions. The FTA on goods has already been signed but there are many issues still relating to the negative lists of various countries especially Thailand which has got a very extensive negative list of agricultural and plantation products. Will that be taken up for discussion during these meetings either at the bilateral level or at the ASEAN level? Secondly, what broadly is India's negotiating position with regard to the FTA on services which is being discussed?

Secretary (East): As regards the specific details regarding Thailand, I am sure only the Commerce Ministry can authoritatively answer you. But suffice it to say that any opportunity that we get to discuss matters of interest to us with any other country, in this case as you mentioned Thailand, would be taken up at the appropriate level. As regards the second question, there is no denying the fact that in terms of services India does have a certain degree of advantage vis-a-vis the ASEAN countries. We are keen that we should enter into an agreement as early as possible. Similarly in investments also, it in fact is both ways. Malaysia, Indonesia and to a certain extent Thailand have invested reasonably in India and so have we in Indonesia and in Malaysia. We are keen. The feedback is that the discussions have proceeded quite satisfactorily so far. So, I do not see much problem as we stand now. But I am sure the kinks will have to be ironed out by the experts as they speak.

Question: Sir, when is the FTA on goods going to come into effect?

Secretary (East): As per the agreement that was signed, I think January 1, 2010, subject to correction, is the date of entry into force of the India-ASEAN Trade in Goods Agreement.

Question: Will there be a separate Summit of ASEAN Plus 3 with India, China, Korea or Japan?

Secretary (East): As per the programme that we have got, all the countries - China, Japan, and South Korea - have their own individual summits with ASEAN and a collective ASEAN Plus 3 Summit. We have ASEAN-India Summit and then finally we go on to the East Asia Summit the following day.

Question: But there is no collective ASEAN Plus 3 format?

Secretary (East): There is an ASEAN Plus 3 format also.

Question: Are we looking at a common regional approach towards tackling terrorism? It is getting to be almost one year since Mumbai attacks and international pressure seems to be easing. Is that going to be an issue at this summit?

Secretary (East): It is a little difficult to guess what subject will be discussed there. But one question is sustainable economic development and the need for economic development aided by a peaceful environment is a principle that is understood by all the countries involved. So, it is up to the leaders to really discuss this particular matter.

Question: My question on ASEAN is answered. I have one question on Afghanistan. How is India watching the run-off in Afghanistan?

Official Spokesperson: Sir, can I, with your permission, just take this question?

Secretary (East): Yes.

Official Spokesperson: As you are aware, the Independent Election Commission of Afghanistan has announced the second round of Presidential Elections involving a run-off between President Hamid Karzai and Dr. Abdullah Abdullah on 7 November 2009. It is our hope that the election process will strengthen democracy in Afghanistan and would be conducted peacefully in a violence free atmosphere. Thank you.

158. Statement of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on the eve of departure for Thailand for the 7th India-ASEAN and 4th East Asia Summit.

New Delhi, October 23, 2009.

I am leaving for Thailand today to attend the 7th India-ASEAN Summit and the 4th East Asia Summit that will be held on 24-25 October.

India's enhanced engagement with the ASEAN is at the heart of our 'Look East' Policy. The conclusion of the India-ASEAN Trade-in-Goods Agreement in August 2009 is a major first step in our objective of creating an India-ASEAN Regional Trade and Investment Area. India-ASEAN trade has grown at a healthy rate and stood at about US Dollars 48 billion in 2008. The India-ASEAN Summit is an occasion to review the progress in our relations with ASEAN countries. I will inform ASEAN leaders about the several initiatives that India has taken to qualitatively enhance our partnership in diverse areas of our cooperation.

In pursuance of the theme of the ASEAN Summit of "Enhancing Connectivity, Empowering Peoples", I will discuss with the ASEAN leaders new initiatives to accelerate the process of our engagement in areas such as greater economic integration, people-to-people contacts, agriculture, human resource development, education, science and technology and information and communications technology.

I will also attend the 4th East Asia Summit on October 25. The East Asia Summit will review cooperation in five key areas - energy, education, finance, avian influenza and national disaster mitigation. The Summit will provide an opportunity to discuss regional and international issues of common interest, and future direction for community building and cooperation. Asia's response to the global economic slowdown, food security, energy security and climate change will be important issues of discussion.

I am hopeful that the ASEAN and other countries of the East Asia Summit process will endorse the proposal for the establishment of the Nalanda University in Bihar as an international institution of excellence in education with a continental focus.

On the sidelines of the Summit, I will have bilateral meetings including with the Prime Minister of Cambodia, Premier of the State Council of People's Republic of China, the President of Indonesia, the Prime Minister of Japan, the Prime Minister of Singapore, the Prime Minister of Thailand and the Prime Minister of Vietnam.

I consider India's participation in the India-ASEAN and the East Asia Summits a vital element of India's vision of an Asian economic community that is based on an open and inclusive regional architecture.

159. Statement by the Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the 7th India-ASEAN Summit.

Hua Hin (Thailand), October 24, 2009.

Your Excellency, Mr. Abhisit Vejjajiva,

Prime Minister of the Kingdom of Thailand

Your Excellency, the Heads of State and Government of the member countries of ASEAN

I thank the Prime Minister of Thailand His Excellency Mr. Abhisit Vejjajiva for hosting the 7th India-ASEAN Summit in this beautiful city of Hua Hin. We are grateful to the Government and people of Thailand for the excellent arrangements that have been made, and for their warm hospitality.

I thank Indonesia for serving as the Coordinator for India and welcome Cambodia as the next Coordinator, and assure them of our full support.

I also take this opportunity to extend our deepest condolences over the tragic loss of life and destruction during the recent natural calamities in Indonesia, the Philippines, Laos and Vietnam.

The ASEAN region is synonymous with dynamic economic growth. The adoption of the ASEAN Charter in December 2008 is a manifestation of the growing profile of ASEAN in world affairs. We warmly welcome this important development.

Ladies and Gentlemen"

India's engagement with the ASEAN is at the heart of our 'Look East' Policy. We are convinced that India's future and our economic interests are best served by greater integration with our Asian partners.

The conclusion of the India-ASEAN Trade-in-Goods Agreement in August 2009 is a major first step in our objective of creating an India-ASEAN Regional Trade and Investment Area. The journey was not easy, but we have succeeded in overcoming several difficulties, and this gives us hope for the future.

India-ASEAN trade has grown at a healthy rate despite the recent global economic downturn. The volume of trade stood at US$ 48 billion in 2008. Despite the economic downturn, I am confident that we can achieve our bilateral trade target of US$ 50 billion by 2010. With the conclusion of the Trade-in-Goods Agreement, we should aim for an even higher target for our trade turnover.

We attach high importance to the early conclusion of negotiations on the Trade-in-Services and Investment Agreement, and we should direct our officials accordingly.

I am happy to note that there has been good progress on all other initiatives that have been taken by us, including those discussed at the last Summit in Singapore in 2007. These include the creation of an India-ASEAN Science and Technology Fund, the India-ASEAN Health Care Initiative, cooperation in traditional medicines, the India-ASEAN Network on Climate Change and the establishment of a Green Fund. Several programmes to promote people-to-people contacts are also being implemented.

We look forward to working closely with the ASEAN and other countries of the East Asia Summit process to establish the Nalanda University as an international institution of excellence in education with a continental focus.

In keeping with the theme of the ASEAN Summit of "Enhancing Connectivity, Empowering Peoples", I would propose the following initiatives to further strengthen the links between us:-

- Establishment of an India-ASEAN Round Table comprising think tanks, policy makers, scholars, media and business representatives to bridge the knowledge gap. The Round Table would provide policy inputs to the governments of India and the ASEAN countries on future areas of cooperation.
- Intensification of negotiations on an open skies policy, further simplification of the visa regime to encourage business and tourist travel, a much larger number of youth exchange programmes, and commencement of exchanges of Parliamentarians between India and the ASEAN Inter-Parliamentary Assembly.
- Holding an ASEAN Trade and Industrial Exhibition in India in October 2010 or January 2011.
- Enhanced cooperation in the agriculture sector with a view to meeting the challenges of food security. The forthcoming meeting of our Agriculture Ministries in 2010 in India should identify specific areas of cooperation, including in extension services.
- Cooperation in the application of space technologies. We would be ready to share satellite data for management of natural disasters, launch small satellites and scientific instruments and payloads for experiments in remote sensing and communication for space agencies and academic institutions in ASEAN countries.

India has been privileged to be a partner in the "Initiative for ASEAN Integration" Programme. We have been involved in projects for skills upgradation such as Entrepreneurship Development Centres and Centres for English Language Learning in Cambodia, Myanmar, Lao Peoples Democratic Republic and Vietnam. We would be happy to increase the number of such Centres.

In addition, India would be happy to participate in projects under the ASEAN's Work Plan for 2009-2015 in areas such as education, energy, agriculture and forestry, and small and medium enterprises.

The ASEAN also has plans to develop an ASEAN ICT Master Plan for the period 2010-2015. India would be happy to offer its services for the realisation of this Plan, and to assist in the creation of an e-network in ASEAN which could ultimately be linked up with select Indian institutions in diverse areas.

To support all these initiatives, we are ready to allocate upto 50 million US dollars during the period of the ASEAN Work Plan under the ASEAN-India Cooperation Fund and the ASEAN Development Fund.

In 2012, we will be commemorating the 10th anniversary of India's participation as a summit level partner of ASEAN, and 20 years as a sectoral dialogue partner. These are significant milestones, and deserve careful preparation.

We could jointly consider organising a commemorative ship expedition in 2011-12 on the sea routes developed during the 10th to 12th centuries linking India with South East Asia and East Asia. The sea route could cover modern and ancient ports in ASEAN countries, and other East Asian countries.

India would be privileged to host the India-ASEAN Summit meeting in 2012 in India. To ensure a substantive outcome, I would further propose that we set up a Joint Task Force to prepare a Vision Statement for India-ASEAN relations upto the year 2020.

This should take into account the growing strengths of both the ASEAN countries and India and how we can jointly harness our complementarities and contribute to a more peaceful and prosperous Asia.

Given the steadily expanding range of our cooperation it is important that we put in place effective monitoring and follow-up mechanisms to ensure the effective implementation of the decisions that we take.

Our engagement with the ASEAN countries is a key element of India's vision of an Asian economic community that is based on an open and inclusive architecture. India wishes to partner ASEAN in realizing this vision on the basis of mutual benefit, mutual prosperity and mutual respect.

Thank you

160. Statement by the Chairman at the end of the 7th ASEAN-India Summit.

Hua Hin (Thailand), October 24, 2009.

The 7th ASEAN-India Summit chaired by H.E. Mr. Abhisit Vejjajiva, Prime Minister of the Kingdom of Thailand, was held on 24 October 2009 in Chaam Hua Hin, Thailand. The meeting was attended by the Heads of State/Government of the ASEAN Member States and H.E. Dr. Manmohan Singh, Prime Minister of the Republic of India.

2. The ASEAN leaders expressed their congratulations to H.E. Dr. Manmohan Singh on his re-election as Prime Minister of the Republic of India and also expressed their conviction that his second term would further strengthen and cement the existing close partnership between ASEAN and India.
3. We noted with satisfaction the progress of the ASEAN-India Dialogue Relations which has deepened and broadened over the past years and developed into a multi-faceted and dynamic partnership contributing to regional peace, mutual understanding and closer economic interaction .
4. We appreciated India's "Look East Policy" as reflected in her active role in various regional fora such as the ASEAN Regional Forum, East Asia Summit, Mekong-Ganga Cooperation and BIMSTEC, which help contribute to enhancing regional dialogue and accelerating regional integration.
5. We noted with satisfaction the steady progress of implementation of the ASEAN - India Partnership for Peace, Progress and Shared Prosperity, and agreed that a new and more enhanced phase of the Plan of Action to implement the said Partnership be launched before the next ASEAN-India Summit, in order to seize the opportunities and overcome the challenges arising from the global financial crisis and evolving political and economic landscape.
6. We welcomed the signing of ASEAN- India Trade in Goods Agreement at the 41st ASEAN Economic Ministers Meeting on 13 August this year and encourage its early implementation by January 2010. We are confident that the Agreement will allow our producers and exporters to derive full benefits from the potential of our combined markets. For our people to further reap the benefits of free trade, we entrusted our Ministers and officials to work towards the early conclusion of services and investment agreements.

7. In view of the Trade in Goods Agreement, we agreed to revise our bilateral trade target to 70 billion USD to be achieved in the next two years, noting that the initial target of 50 billion USD set in 2007 may soon be surpassed.

8. We encouraged the re-activation of the ASEAN-India Business Council and the ASEAN-India Business Summits in order to strengthen business networks and opportunities. In this regard, we noted that the proposal has received a positive response from the Indian business community. We therefore tasked our economic officials to work with all parties concerned so that this Council and Business Summit could be convened next year.

9. We emphasized the need to promote connectivity in the region by completing all the missing links between South and Southeast Asia and beyond. We supported India's vision to create an "Arc of Advantage" for our region through further integration of sea, road and rail links .

10. In this regard, we welcomed Thailand's continued support of the development of the India- Myanmar-Thailand Trilateral Highway, and most recently, her pledge to improve the 30 kilometre stretch from Thingannyinaung - Kawkareik which would form part of the westward link of the East -West Economic Corridor.

11. We welcomed the adoption of the ASEAN-India Aviation Cooperation Framework at the 14th ASEAN Transport Ministers Meeting in November 2008 which would lay the foundation for closer aviation cooperation and open skies, to support business growth, tourism and greater interactions between our peoples. In this regard, we noted that an ASEAN-India Air Transport Agreement is under discussion with the implementation timeline set for 2011.

12. The ASEAN Leaders appreciated India's continued efforts in promoting people-to-people contacts and mutual understanding through visits to India of students, members of the media and diplomats, which help to foster ASEAN-India relations at the peoples level. As India is one of the world's largest democracies, we also encouraged exchanges of visits of ASEAN-India parliamentarians with the involvement of the ASEAN Inter- Parliamentary Assembly which would also promote democratic values.

13. The ASEAN Leaders appreciated India's active role in promoting human resource development as a means to narrow the development gap such as establishing Entrepreneur Development Centres, Centres for English Language Training and IT Training Centres in CLMV countries which could also be extended to other ASEAN Member States. We also noted that Entrepreneurship Development Centres would enhance the potentiality of SMEs and ensure their ability to benefit from closer economic integration.

14. We stressed the importance of cooperation in science and technology and environment as a vital factor to promote dynamic and sustainable development in the region. In this regard, we looked forward to the early operationalization of the ASEAN-India Science and Technology Fund and the ASEAN- India Green Fund in order to support cooperation in these areas. Considering recent natural calamities in the region, we suggested that India and ASEAN make use of the funds by developing, among others, a technology programme for disaster management, building upon India's expertise in IT and space technology.

15. We underscored the importance of cooperation and sharing of expertise in the field of pharmaceutical and health care, in view of the region's comparative advantage and the need for greater access for all to affordable medicine. We agreed to develop low cost drugs and traditional medicines and tasked our Ministers and officials to develop a framework as appropriate for cooperation in these areas.

16. The ASEAN Leaders also appreciated the efforts made by India in promoting cooperation in the fields of traditional medicine and ayurveda, including, among other things, through the convening of workshops and the grant of scholarships.

17. We took note with appreciation the initiatives proposed by the Prime Minister of India as follows:

- Establishment of an India-ASEAN round table comprising think tanks, policy makers, scholars, media and business representatives to provide policy inputs on future areas of cooperation;
- Continuation of negotiations on open skies policy and further simplification of the visa regime to encourage business and tourism;
- Holding an ASEAN Trade and Industrial Exhibition in India;
- Enhancing cooperation in the agriculture sector with a view to meeting the challenges of food security; and,

- Cooperation in space technologies including sharing of satellite data for management of natural disaster and launching of small satellites and scientific instruments and payloads for experiments in remote sensing and communication for space agencies and academic institutions.
18. We tasked our officials and the ASEAN Secretariat to consider how to implement these initiatives as soon as possible.
19. The ASEAN Leaders welcomed the announcement made by the Prime Minister of India to allocate, during the period of ASEAN Work Plan, US$ 50 million to the ASEAN-India Cooperation Fund and the ASEAN Development Fund in support of the above initiatives, as well as IAI programme and projects in the areas of education, energy, agriculture and forestry, small and medium enterprises, and implementation of the ASEAN ICT Master Plan.
20. We further welcomed India's proposal to host an ASEAN-India Commemorative Summit in 2012 to mark 20 years of our dialogue relations.
21. We reaffirmed our commitment to cooperate in addressing transboundary issues and global challenges, such as terrorism, transnational crimes, especially in the areas of drug trafficking, food and energy security, natural disasters, new and emerging infectious diseases and climate change. We also encouraged ASEAN and India to undertake activities to implement the Joint Declaration on Cooperation to Combat Terrorism.
22. The ASEAN Leaders suggested that India as a member of G20 can play an important role in coordinating efforts between developed and emerging economies to mitigate the negative impact of the current global economic and financial crisis. India can also work with ASEAN to complement the global efforts in the reform of the international financial architecture and accelerate the early recovery of the global economy. India welcomed ASEAN participation at the London and Pittsburg G20 Summits and expressed its support for the continued participation of ASEAN Chair and Secretary-General of ASEAN at G20 Summits.

161. Media Briefing by Secretary (East) of the Ministry of External Affairs on the 7th India-ASEAN Summit.

Hua Hin (Thailand), October 24, 2009.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening and a very warm welcome to all of you. Secretary (East) Shri N. Ravi is here to brief you on Prime Minister's programme in the afternoon, the 7th India-ASEAN summit and bilateral meetings on the sidelines of the Summit. I have also the pleasure of introducing Ms. Latha Reddy, Ambassador of India to Thailand and Shri Harish Khare, Media Adviser to the Prime Minister. Sir, the floor is yours

Secretary (East) (Shri N. Ravi): Thank you, Vishnu. Good evening to all of you.

This is the 7th India-ASEAN summit, first one was held in 2002 at Phnom Penh, Cambodia. The summit was followed by two bilateral meetings with the Prime Minister of Thailand and Prime Minister of Cambodia. The 7th India-ASEAN summit was categorized by constructive exchange of views between the Prime Minister and his counterparts, Heads of state and Government from 10 ASEAN. The Secretary-General of ASEAN was also present at the meeting. It began by a welcome address by the Prime Minister of Thailand as the Chairman of the India-ASEAN Summit here in Hua Hin. Subsequently Prime Minister read out his statement.

The meeting essentially provided an opportunity to review India-ASEAN cooperation which, most of you are aware, has deepened in a variety of areas and over the last seven years has also expanded into new areas. The ASEAN leaders expressed appreciation for India's Look East Policy. They particularly praised India's increasing interaction across sectors over the last seven years, and how committed India was in enhancing its cooperation with the ASEAN countries.

The ASEAN leaders also praised India's participation in the other regional fora like the ASEAN Regional Forum, BIMSTEC which comprises the countries that are the littoral states of the Bay of Bengal, and the Mekong-Ganga Cooperation. Most of them made a particular point regarding the fact that India's engagement with the ASEAN contributes not only to bilateral economic and commercial development but also to the stability and peace in the region. There was particular recognition of India's role and India's position as a major economic power in the region.

There was also recognition of India's contribution to the growth in trade. Specific mention was made by all the leaders, of India signing the India-ASEAN Free Trade Agreement in Goods especially in circumstances which currently characterize the world economy. The fact that India signed the trade in goods agreement despite the ongoing economic crisis was specifically emphasized by all the leaders. All the leaders then said that they would like to now move forward with the discussions and negotiations on the services and investment sectors so that the FTA is complete in all respects.

We signed with ASEAN a Partnership Programme for Peace, Progress and Shared Prosperity in 2004 at the time of the Vientiane Summit which was held in Laos. That programme has more or less come to end early this year, and a new programme is on the anvil for the period 2009 to 2015. Keeping that in mind our Prime Minister announced a series of initiatives, which was widely welcomed by all the leaders.

These initiatives arose basically out of the theme of the ASEAN Summit - of what I had mentioned in Delhi some of you may recall - about enhancing connectivity and empowering people. Arising from this, the Prime Minister announced a series of initiatives. The first was the establishment of an India-ASEAN Round Table comprising think tanks, policy-makers, scholars, media and business representatives to bridge the knowledge gap. The Round Table would provide necessary inputs to the respective Governments on future areas of cooperation.

Another was intensification of negotiations on Open Skies Policy between India and ASEAN so that people-to-people exchanges at all levels - whether it is business, tourism, youth exchange programmes, commencement of exchange of parliamentarians, which is a new idea that we are pursuing since last year, could really come into effect. Of course, people-to-people exchange programmes do not have to wait for the Open Skies Policy to come into effect.

We have also agreed to hold a specialized ASEAN Trade and Industry Exhibition in late 2010 or early 2011 to promote our cooperation in the commercial area, and enhanced cooperation in the agriculture sector with a view to meeting the challenges of food security. Food security was mentioned as a major challenge by many of the ASEAN leaders. There is a meeting of India-ASEAN Agriculture Ministers which is being scheduled for the first quarter of 2010, which should identify specific areas of cooperation including cooperation in extension services which is one of India's strong points.

Cooperation in the application of space technologies like sharing of satellite data for management of natural disasters, launching of small satellites, scientific payloads for experiments in remote sensing and communication for space agencies, and most importantly space technology for academic institutions in ASEAN countries. This was a major point in the PM's initiatives.

Keeping in mind the success achieved in the last Partnership Programme where we established the English Language Trainings Centres, Entrepreneurship Development Centres, some IT Centres in the Cambodia, Laos, Myanmar and Vietnam, we now go into the next stage for the period 2009 to 2015. In that context the ASEAN itself is developing an information and communication technologies master plan for the period 2010 to 2015. We have agreed to offer our services for the realization of this plan, and this was appreciated by all the leaders present.

In the same context we also offered to assist them in the creation of an E-Network in ASEAN which could ultimately be linked up with Indian institutions in diverse areas whether it is education, commerce, business, or whatever. To support all these initiatives, India's readiness to allocate US$50 million was also conveyed to the leaders so that during the work plan, 2009-2015, these programmes can be implemented in cooperation with them.

One other point, 2012 would be the tenth anniversary of the first Summit India-ASEAN Summit held in 2002, and it is also the 20th anniversary of our initiation of India-ASEAN Sectoral Dialogue in 1992. So, India has offered to host the India-ASEAN Summit in the year 2012 in India at a suitable occasion. This was also very deeply appreciated by all the leaders who were present.

These were the major points in the India-ASEAN Summit. In his Concluding Statement, PM emphasized the fact that cooperation with ASEAN is an article of faith for India, and the success achieved so far has been a major factor in helping us decide what are the areas for future cooperation, some of which I have just now read out.

Earlier in the morning, sorry to go back a little, there was a meeting of ASEAN-India Economic Ministers, which was attended from the Indian side by the Commerce and Industries Minister. In this meeting they reviewed the progress of the services and investment negotiations under the India-ASEAN Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement. Goods, is out of the way; now we have services and investment negotiations. Three rounds have been completed. Our Minister suggested that the negotiations on this should be concluded as early as possible. The ASEAN Economic Ministers also responded favourably to this suggestion.

The ASEAN Ministers also appreciated the need for an early agreement in this regard because it would then help in realizing some objectives, particularly from the point of view of liberalisation of the economy from the Indian side and the operation of the FTA in totality of goods, services, and investment. Vietnam signed the India-ASEAN trade in goods agreement as the last signatory during this meeting, so that all ten members of ASEAN are now on board on the Trade in Goods Agreement, so that its implementation can begin as agreed from 1st January, 2010.

In the two meetings that were held after the India-ASEAN Summit the meeting with Prime Minister of Thailand Mr. Abhisit Vejjajiva covered all issues on bilateral interaction and cooperation within EAS and ASEAN. Bilateral investment and enhancement of bilateral trade was also touched upon. India-Thailand trade has grown by six times over the last nine years. We have investments of just under a billion dollars in Thailand, and Thailand has got investments of just under half a billion dollars in India. They have it in agriculture, aquaculture, fisheries and other areas; our investments are in textiles, steel, carbon black and some chemicals, and other areas. The meeting recognized the need for exchange of high-level visits. Both sides expressed that these high-level visits should continue so that we can now think of new areas of cooperation including identifying new agreements, or new understanding on enhancing bilateral trade and investment.

In respect of Cambodia the visit of the Cambodian Prime Minister to India in December 2007 was recalled. Under the credit agreements that were signed at that time, two of the projects have been implemented. One more is under execution. Our commitment to enhance the infrastructure, particularly in the field of irrigation, water resource management and construction of transmission lines in Cambodia for electric power was emphasized by PM. We assured that the bilateral relations will continue to receive focus through projects on the one hand, through high-level visits, and capacity-building on the other. Presently we are training Cambodians under the ITEC programme in many areas, including industries, SME training, banking, audit, among others. We are also training Cambodians who go on peacekeeping operations.

They are presently in Sudan, Chad and Central African Republic. So, they come to India and get trained - it is the USI that gives the training on peacekeeping operations - and that has also been found successful and they were quite appreciative of the fact. The Archaeological Survey of India is doing a couple of projects in Cambodia and this cooperation was also favourably commented upon by both the leaders.

Overall, the afternoon's events - the Summit and the two bilateral meetings - reiterated our closeness of relations and a certain basic understanding that now has come to mark our bilateral relations, our bilateral exchanges and a certain degree of confidence that has now emerged in the bilateral relations which now makes it easy for both sides to identify and to move into new areas as required with very little expenditure of time.

That is about all I have to say.

Question: Two questions. In any of these ASEAN-India meetings, was there a demand for pruning the negative list which is already there? Secondly, there is the ASEAN Chairman's statement which says that there is an India-ASEAN Business Advisory Council to be formed. There is no mention about that in PM's speech or anywhere else.

Secretary (East): The Business Advisory Council is actually an ASEAN suggestion to which we have agreed. It used to meet quite regularly but after the discussions on the FTA started, there were certain delays in getting all the business people together. But now it will begin again. So, that revival is more or less on the cards. As regards negative list, from what little I have gathered, as against India's one list, ASEAN has ten lists. So, there has to be some degree of coordination. That is why I think some amount of delay is being encountered. But the desire of both sides is to move ahead but some amount of delay perhaps cannot be avoided.

Question: Has there been a rethink on the Dalai Lama's visit to Arunachal Pradesh?

Official Spokesperson: I will interject here. As I said, and please bear with me, this interaction is limited to Prime Minister's engagements post lunch.

Question: In the morning we did not take questions.

Official Spokesperson: In the morning we have already given you a perspective. Tomorrow there is a press conference of the Prime Minister. This interaction is limited to the interactions of the Prime Minister post-lunch. I am sorry.

Question: There is a very pressing reason for us to ask this question because there has been this confusion. One version has been given to us regarding Arunachal and Dalai Lama. There is another version going parallel given by the Chinese agencies. And then this creates confusion.

Official Spokesperson: Our version, we have shared with you. Certainly tomorrow when Prime Minister would be interacting with you he will also be happy to take questions. Question here please.

Question: Prime Minister has talked about the Nalanda University Project. Did it come up in the ASEAN-India meeting and what was the perception and feedback of the ASEAN leaders?

Secretary (East): The ASEAN leaders favourably commented on the revival of the Nalanda University. But all of them also said that Nalanda University is coming under the umbrella of the East Asia Summit in which ASEAN themselves are members, but in order to convey their support they did mention it in their statements. But it will basically be a part of an East Asia Summit initiative because all sixteen countries are involved.

Question: I have a query on the Open Skies Policy. We already have our Open Skies Policy in force in India. What exactly is the subject of negotiation or intensified negotiation?

Secretary (East): The ASEAN countries themselves are negotiating an Open Skies Policy for implementation in the year 2010. We have a kind of a qualified Open Skies Policy with ASEAN already. They can fly to tourist sites; they can fly to capital cities: no restrictions and all. The idea of this intensification of negotiations is that we would like to continue our negotiations with ASEAN in parallel with their own so that when their negotiations are complete, when they have their open skies policy, our position is also ready, and we are not losing any time at that particular moment so that we can also then go ahead and decide on this open skies policy with ASEAN which would be based on their own 2010 or whatever agreement that they reach. But we go on in parallel. The idea is not to lose time. That is it.

Question: What is being negotiated for?

Secretary (East): To increase the number of flights between the two regions with the countries concerned. Basically right now the countries that are deriving advantage out of this qualified open skies policy are Singapore, Thailand, and to a certain extent Malaysia. But after this economic downturn some amount of correction has come about and the number of flights has been rationalised between India and ASEAN. Keeping this in mind the negotiations are continuing, but we have to wait till the 2010 for reaching agreement within ASEAN, so that we are ready with whatever changes are there, then we can immediately continue with. The idea is to save time.

Question: Any timelines as to when the FTA in services and investments will be signed, and what is really holding it back because a number of negotiations have already taken place?

Secretary (East): We have had only three rounds of negotiations so far and certain amount of lists and materials and certain requirements both in terms of services and investment have been exchanged. So, it is difficult to give a timeline right now. These have just begun. But the effort would be to conclude it as early as possible. Now that the goods thing has been concluded it gives us a base, an understanding, a framework on which we can move forward on the services.

Question: Can you enlighten us about the status of the Trilateral Highway Project?

Secretary (East): The Trilateral Highway Project passes through - as you would know - India, Thailand and Myanmar. Thailand has offered to construct a certain portion inside Myanmar so that the connectivity at the border regions can be made a little earlier than what has been planned. This offer is under examination in Myanmar. As far as we are concerned our connection to Myanmar is reasonably okay. Once we enter Myanmar, it should basically end up in Bangkok via Mandalay and Yangon and then coming down.

Question: When do you propose to complete the project?

Secretary (East): It is difficult to say right now because it has been in the works for some time. It is difficult to guess right now.

Question: There is a proposal about connecting the old and modern shipping ports. I find there is some mention about it in the Prime Minister's speech. What is the idea of that? What is it about the old ports?

Secretary (East): It is like this. In the 10th to 12th centuries India did trade with South-East Asian countries, and some of the Indian traders guilds were established even in East Asia. So, an effort would be made to commemorate that during the 2012 event by which the ships can touch those ports, which were trading ports in the olden days, and also the modern ports that must be near those old ports wherever these exist. Historical records exist as to where the old ports were and the new ports are at places where we know they exist. So, a kind of a voyage is being planned.

Question: Regarding the FTA in goods there are some strong protests from some farmers' organisations and political parties in India. Has any of these concerns been mentioned in the discussions between the ASEAN countries today?

Secretary (East): This is a matter that is entirely internal to our country. If I am not mistaken, a Group of Ministers has been set up to look into this particular problem. But it is a problem entirely internal to us at present.

Question: You mentioned that we have signed this agreement with Vietnam and Vietnam becomes the tenth country and this completes the FTA in goods. The demand from Vietnam was that it should be granted what is called the market economy status. Has India granted that status to Vietnam?

Secretary (East): Yes. The Vietnamese Prime Minister also thanked our Prime Minister for this gesture that India is granting Vietnam a market economy status.

Question: Has it happened today or is it going to happen?

Secretary (East): The decision was taken I think last week.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you.

Hua Hin (Thailand), October 25, 2009.

I thank the Prime Minister of Thailand His Excellency Mr. Abhisit Vejjajiva for convening the 4th East Asia Summit and for the excellent arrangements made.

We meet against the backdrop of the global economic and financial slowdown. The G-20 leaders have met thrice, and the coordinated response to address this crisis that has emerged from the G-20 has had some effect. However, it is still too early to say whether we are completely out of trouble. I support PM Rudd's suggestion for a meeting of EAS Finance Ministers to examine sources of growth in the region.

The launching of the EAS process was an act of foresight. It was also an act of faith in our collective potential. Today the world's eyes are on Asia as the region which can lead the global economic revival from the front. The Asian tigers captured the world's attention a few decades ago. Today, six of the twenty members of the G-20 belong to the East Asia Summit.

We must learn lessons from the global economic crisis. One of these is the need to ensure coordination in our growth policies. The other is to keep the real economy strong and sound. We agree with Japan that greater emphasis has to be laid on growth of domestic demand. And the third is to keep the flows of trade, technology and investment open, orderly and predictable. The evolution of the EAS process should conform to our first Declaration issued in Kuala Lumpur which called for the EAS to be an open, inclusive, transparent and outward looking forum. We need to move forward in this direction, and exhibit the requisite political will. Economic integration among us could generate billions of dollars of additional output.

The vision of Asian economic integration by coalescing the Free Trade Agreements among member Asian countries into an Asian Regional Trade Agreement is a pivotal step towards the integration of Asia into a common unit. This can lead to the creation of a broader Asian Economic Community.

Our focus should be on generation of stronger domestic demand in Asian economies through investment in infrastructure, creation and strengthening of the social welfare net, skill development of our workforce and environmentally sustainable and inclusive growth.

India welcomes the recommendations of the Phase II Report on a Comprehensive Economic Partnership in East Asia with regard to the three pillars of economic cooperation, facilitation and liberalisation. An early realisation of its roadmap for economic and financial integration, we believe, would be the right step forward for our grouping.

India is playing its part in this process. We have signed Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreements with Singapore and the Republic of Korea and recently a Trade in Good Agreements with the ASEAN. We are in discussions with Japan, China, Thailand and Malaysia and other countries to conclude agreements of a similar nature.

The proposals generated by the Economic Research Institute of ASEAN and East Asia [ERIA] to develop a blueprint for financial and economic integration of the EAS region, especially in the area of infrastructure development and connectivity, are promising, and deserve our encouragement. India would be happy to contribute 1 million US dollars over a period of ten years for enlarging the activities of ERIA.

We are greatly encouraged that the Summit will adopt a Statement on the establishment of the Nalanda University in the State of Bihar in India. This has been the product of many months of hard work put in by the Nalanda Mentor Group, and will be a shining example of cooperative action in the field of education. I thank our Singapore colleague for his pioneering zeal in pursuit of this idea.

Climate change is a major challenge facing the world, but it is particularly so for the developing and fast growing economies in Asia. The EAS process should come up with a workable model of sustainable development. Financing and technology transfers are its key elements. The challenge before us is to find a global mechanism which, while safeguarding the incentives for innovation and development of environment friendly technologies in the private sector, also simultaneously ensures the availability of such technology to developing countries at an affordable cost.

Many of our countries face the spectre of terrorism. There are growing threats from non-traditional sources, such as piracy, transnational groups and extremist ideologies. I agree with the President of Indonesia. This will increasingly require a concerted and cooperative response in the coming period. We will have to play greater attention to issues of social exclusion, and regional imbalances in development. The fight against pandemics and collaboration in disaster management are other areas which will need our attention.

The East Asia Summit holds great potential. If we pool our collective wisdom and resources, there is little doubt that the EAS will emerge as an oasis of peace, stability and prosperity in a fast changing world.

Thank you.

163. Joint Press Statement of the 4th East Asia Summit on the revival of Nalanda University.

Hua Hin (Thailand), October 25, 2009.

The Heads of State/Government of the ASEAN Member States, Australia, the People's Republic of China, the Republic of India, Japan, the Republic of Korea, and New Zealand met in Cha-am Hua Hin, Thailand, on the occasion of the 4th East Asia Summit.

2. They recalled their decision at the 2nd East Asia Summit in Cebu, the Philippines, on 15 January 2007, to strengthen regional educational cooperation by tapping the region's centers of excellence in education. In this connection, they welcomed India's initiative to revive the Nalanda University located in the State of Bihar in India.

3. They noted that the Nalanda University was a great ancient centre of intellectual activity in Buddhist philosophy, mathematics, medicine and other disciplines.

4. They were deeply impressed with the sanctity and significance of the great ancient centre of learning in Nalanda that attracted many scholars from South, South-East and East Asia.

5. They appreciated the contribution and recommendations made by the members of the Nalanda Mentor Group headed by Nobel Laureate Professor Amartya Sen towards the establishment of the Nalanda University.

6. They supported the establishment of the Nalanda University as a non-state, non-profit, secular, and self governing international institution with a continental focus that will bring together the brightest and the most dedicated students from all countries of Asia - irrespective of gender, caste, creed, disability, ethnicity or social-economic background - to enable them to acquire liberal and human education and to give them the means needed for pursuit of intellectual, philosophical, historical and spiritual studies and thus achieve qualities of tolerance and accommodation.

7. They encouraged the networking and collaboration between the Nalanda University and existing centers of excellence in the EAS participating countries to build a community of learning where students, scholars, researchers and academicians can work together symbolizing the spirituality that unites all mankind.

8. They encouraged appropriate funding arrangements on voluntary basis from governments and other sources including public-private partnership as may be decided by the Governing Body which will be composed of members nominated by interested EAS participating countries.

164. Press Conference of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh following 7th India-ASEAN Summit and 4th East Asia Summit.

Hua Hin, October 25, 2009.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good evening to you all and warm welcome to the press conference by the Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh. Prime Minister will be making an opening statement, and thereafter he will be happy to take a few questions. Prime Minister is joined to his right by the Commerce and Industry Minister of India Mr. Anand Sharma; and to his left by Principal Secretary to Prime Minister Mr. T.K.A. Nair.

Sir, the floor is yours.

Prime Minister (Dr. Manmohan Singh): Ladies and gentlemen, I have completed two very productive days of meetings at the 7th India-ASEAN Summit and the 4th East Asia Summit.

I am extremely satisfied with the outcome of the India-ASEAN Summit. I found a strong desire among the ASEAN countries to substantially strengthen their links with India in all areas. This includes not only economic cooperation and trade but also science and technology, human resource development, protection of the environment, and deeper political and security cooperation.

The conclusion of the India-ASEAN Trade in Goods Agreement is a concrete step forward in the process of India's integration with South East Asia. As a follow up to this Agreement, we have agreed to expedite the finalization of the Agreement on Trade in Services and Investment.

The ASEAN countries were deeply appreciative of the fresh initiatives announced by India, notably the establishment of an India-ASEAN Round Table, the preparation of a Vision Statement for our relations till the year 2020, marking of commemorative events in 2012, and our offer of assistance of up to 50 million US dollars to fund various projects under the ASEAN Work Plan for the period 2009-2015.

At the East Asia Summit, I shared our vision of an Asian Economic Community that is based on an open and inclusive regional architecture. The EAS countries recognize the impact of India's socio-economic transformation on the reshaping of the global economic order and the opportunities this has for accelerating Asia's own growth. I reiterated India's commitment to the success of international efforts to combat climate change, the urgent need to collaborate in the research and development of renewable energy technologies, the need for Asia to focus on food and energy security and disaster management, all of which are key to finding a path to sustainable development. There was agreement that the issues of terrorism and non-traditional threats to security have to be addressed with resolve and firmness.

The EAS Leaders' endorsement of the Nalanda University Project which is to be located in Bihar is a matter of deep satisfaction. We intend to move forward with the next steps to establish the Nalanda University as a centre of excellence in education and international understanding.

I had very useful meetings with the leaders of China, Japan, Thailand, Cambodia, Singapore and Vietnam; and I will shortly be meeting the President of Indonesia after this press conference. These meetings reflect our desire to build a set of cooperative partnerships in the Asia-Pacific region, and to play our rightful role in establishing peace, prosperity and stability in Asia.

I return to India convinced that there is tremendous goodwill for India in South East and East Asia, and therefore the sky is the limit for our engagement with this region.

Question: Mr. Prime Minister, what happened in your meeting with the Chinese Premier? Did we raise the issue of Chinese incursions into Indian territory?

Prime Minister: I had a frank and constructive exchange of views with Premier Wen both during our formal meetings and at the gala dinner last night. We discussed all these issues and agreed that existing mechanisms for bilateral cooperation should be used to resolve all issues amicably in the spirit of the strategic and cooperative partnerships. As you know, the Chinese Foreign Minister will be visiting India in two days' time and the Foreign Ministers will have an opportunity to discuss all issues which have bearing on our relationship. The Premier and I reaffirmed the need to maintain peace and tranquillity on the border pending a resolution of the boundary question. Both of us agreed that we should continue and strengthen efforts to build political trust and understanding.

Question: After the global crisis, like Indonesia India is one of the few countries that still have a positive growth in economy. And that makes us a potential market for world trade. With FTA, is India still going to open its market or will you keep some protection on certain goods such as palm oil?

Prime Minister: Madam, we have welcomed the negotiation of the Free Trade Agreement in Goods with ASEAN countries. The President of Indonesia and I in 2005 had laid the target of 10 billion dollars trade turnover by the year 2010. I am glad to report that target has already been reached. India has a vast unsatisfied demand for vegetable oils. Therefore, there is a ready market for Indonesian palm oil in our country, and that will remain so.

Question: Mr. Prime Minister, one of the issues that the Chinese side agreed publicly prior to their meeting with you was their objections to the planned visit to Arunachal Pradesh by the Dalai Lama. In your view do you think this proposed visit will complicate India's relations with China and make resolution of the boundary issue more difficult?

Prime Minister: All I can say is that I explained to Premier Wen that the Dalai Lama is our honoured guest; he is a religious leader; we do not allow the Tibetan refugees to indulge in political activities; and that as proof of that last year we took resolute action at the time of Olympics when there were reports that some Tibetan refugees might disrupt the process. That is the position that I explained to Premier Wen.

Interjection: Last night?

Prime Minister: Yes

Question: I would like to ask about Indian policy towards Burma. At the moment we are seeing re-engagement by the US in South East Asia including Burma; we are seeing problems between Burma and China; and a possibility of civil war with the ethnic groups on ceasefire agreements collapsing; we are seeing tension now on the border with Bangladesh. I wonder what the Indian Government's reflection on these issues is.

Prime Minister: These are matters which figured at the East Asian leaders' Summit. In fact there was an atmosphere of hope that the Myanmar leadership is moving towards normalising its relations with the United States; that they were working towards national reconciliation; and that is what we all welcome. The next year's election should see a reconciliation of the various segments of the Myanmar society.

Question: Just going back to Sidharth's question, you did mention that you explained your position to the Chinese side but were they convinced enough? And is there any change of plan as of now in the Dalai Lama's planned tour to Arunachal Pradesh?

Prime Minister: I am not aware of the plans of the Dalai Lama. I have explained this position to the Chinese leadership. We have also agreed that whatever outstanding issues there may be between us - and there is the complex boundary question which cannot be wished away - there are established Government channels to exchange views on all these issues, and one does not have therefore to go to the media to accentuate or exaggerate the amount of differences that prevail. We both agreed that the boundary question is a complex question; that pending a resolution of the boundary question we both have an obligation to maintain peace and tranquillity along the border.

Question: Sir, I will ask a question in Hindi and I would like you to reply in Hindi. My question is related to the problems of India. Sir, there is a lot of commotion in Delhi with regard to the Commonwealth Games. The question now arises whether it will be possible to organize the games in the right way or not. A faction of the Congress including a good number of Members of Parliament, have demanded that this responsibility should be entrusted to Rahul Gandhi, so that as Rajiv Gandhi handled the Asiad successfully, the same way Rahul Gandhi could handle it. Are you also in agreement with this suggestion?

Prime Minister: There has been some delay in the implementation of some projects, But I am confident that the mechanism that we have now put in place, will remove all those hurdles, that would cause any problem in the holding of games. I am fully confident that the games will be held smoothly, and in great style and all those who will come to watch the games they are going to see a spectacular show.

Question: Sir, the North-Eastern States have expressed concern about reports of China trying to build dams on upper reaches of Brahmaputra. Did you raise this issue with the Chinese Premier?

Prime Minister: I did raise this issue with Premier Wen Jiabao yesterday. I conveyed to him that cooperation in the area of trans-border rivers is of mutual benefit. Premier Wen said that keeping in mind the overall friendly relations and the humanitarian aspects, the Chinese side has been providing hydrological data during the flood season. He said that relevant discussion on trans-border river issues could be held through the expert level mechanism that we have constituted. So, the answer to your question is, I did raise the issue of trans-border river systems.

Question: Sir, My question is: have you raised the question of Chinese discriminating with our Kashmiri citizens in grant of Chinese visa? (original in Hindi)

Prime Minister: There was a general discussion of all bilateral issues. I did not specifically raise this issue because I thought the position is quite clear as far as we are concerned. Whether it is Arunachal Pradesh or Jammu and Kashmir, they are integral parts of our country. I did not raise this and it was not raised on their side.

Question: There is information that the Negative List of India relating to the India-ASEAN FTA is not yet finalised. So, what will be the measures to protect our sensitive products in India?

Prime Minister: I would ask the Minister of Commerce and Industry to answer this question.

Minister of Commerce and Industry (Shri Anand Sharma): While we negotiated India-ASEAN FTA, it was very clear that India negotiated keeping in mind the sensitivities and the concerns of the Indian farmers and the plantation sector. Unlike the other major economies of the region which have the FTA with ASEAN, we have negotiated a Negative List as well as a Highly Sensitive List. The Negative List has 489 tariff lines which include the plantation sector, which include the marine products. It is disinformation which has been deliberately spread that India has not negotiated. After the Chief Minister, in fact in one case, of the State of Kerala had met with the honourable Prime Minister, we had committed to send after the signing all the details with the Negative List and the Highly Sensitive List. They are in public domain available on the Commerce and Industry Ministry's website, and also with the concerned State Governments.

Prime Minister: The answer to your question is that the Negative List is in place.

Question: Sir, my question pertains to India. There is a growing demand by the Opposition that your Cabinet colleague the Telecom Minister must quit, since a CBI inquiry is going on in the matter related to spectrum allocation. What is your reaction?

Prime Minister: I think Cabinet changes or Cabinet reshuffles are not discussed in public. So, it will be very inappropriate for me to answer that question, more so on the foreign soil.

Question: Mr. Prime Minister my question also relates to the country. There are several problems in Bihar, Jharkhand and Chhatisgarh because of the Naxals. Otherwise also there is a climate of agrarian and industrial unrest for a number of years, and because of that there is the problem of starvation.

How serious are to taking it and do you have in mind any special package to tackle this problem?

Prime Minister: I have said several times that the Naxal problem has come to face us as a major problem of internal security. We have to make every effort to tackle it. The law and order machinery has to be strengthened. Along with that whatever there are social and economic causes, which have increased alienation, we have to think for their elimination too.

Question: Sir, my question also relates to the Maoist problem. Recently West Bengal Chief Minister Buddhadeb Bhattacharjee met you. But there is a perception that the State Administration has completely failed to contain this menace despite Union Government's help. You have given the Central forces there. What have you discussed with the Chief Minister? What is his perception on how to tackle this problem?

Prime Minister: I would not like to disclose what I discuss in confidence with the Chief Ministers of our States. But I have stated it publicly that both the Central and the State Governments have an obligation to take effective steps to control the Naxalite problem.

Question: A very good afternoon, Sir. India has strongly objected to Chinese involvement in infrastructural projects in Pakistan-occupied Kashmir. Was that issue raised?

Prime Minister: I did not raise specifically this issue but we both agreed that whatever issues are outstanding should be discussed two days later when the Foreign Ministers of our two countries are going to meet. As you know, the Chinese Foreign Minister is coming to India on 27th of this month to participate in India-China-Russia Summit at Foreign Ministers level. Therefore, there will be opportunities for the two Foreign Ministers to exchange views on all relevant issues.

Question: Good afternoon, Sir. There was a consensus at the G20 meeting that the time is not right to exit the stimulus right now. Has there been any talk of this at any of the two Summits that you attended? Also, the RBI Governor stating quite clearly that India will have to exhibit easy monetary stance sooner than other economies, with the Fed Policy two days away, do you think the time is right for India to look at exiting the easy policy and raising interest rates?

Prime Minister: There was a good deal of discussion about the global economy, the performance of the real economy, the role of stimulus packages, and there was general agreement that stimulus packages should not be withdrawn in haste or phased out prematurely. Therefore, I think there has to be a delicate balance between the adoption of stimulus packages and their modification or removal. I think this has to be a subject matter of detailed investigation. Multilateral fora like this can deal with these issues only in general terms. Yes, there was a general discussion about the stimulus, about whether the time is right to withdraw it. I think there was a fair amount of agreement that probably the time is not right to withdraw the stimulus.

Question: On interest rates, Sir, the RBI Governor saying that we may need to exit sooner than others.

Prime Minister: Monetary policy is the preserve of the Reserve Bank of India. I would not like to, in public, join issues with the Governor. The Governor is a high dignitary. Therefore, I think these questions about interest rates, the tightening of money supply and all these related issues are best addressed to the Governor or to the Finance Minister.

Question: Mr. Prime Minister, you have raised at the East Asia Summit many countries raising the spectre of terrorism. Was there a serious discussion on this and what was the reaction from the other countries on this?

Prime Minister: There are countries which are affected by terrorism like Thailand, Philippines, Indonesia. So, there is general agreement that there should be cooperation in counter-terror measures; that there should be exchange of information and intelligence. On this all countries are agreed.

Question: Sir, Mr. Raja has said that whatever he has done was done with the knowledge of the Prime Minister. Your comments please.

Prime Minister: I do not want to comment on Cabinet matters, or what happens in the Cabinet, or what happens between me and Ministers, in public. It is not proper for me to join issue with a Cabinet colleague in public.

Question: My question relates to trade agreements. You have repeatedly stressed your satisfaction at the conclusion of the FTA with ASEAN. We already have some trade agreements in place specifically with Thailand, but the experience so far has not been very advantageous for India. The trade balance has swung towards Thailand's favour. In this context, what is your personal evaluation as far as the specific benefits to India are concerned through these FTAs? Secondly, where does this leave our multilateral agreement ... where talks are still deadlocked?

Prime Minister: We are living in a world where nearly 50 per cent of the global trade is conducted in the framework of various regional arrangements. So long as these arrangements exist we have to take advantage of these regional arrangements. My own view is that India's destiny lies in working very closely with the economies of South-East Asia. Even fifteen sixteen years ago when I was Finance Minister I emphasised the importance of the Look East Policy to find practical, pragmatic solutions to accelerated growth in our country. I do believe that these temporary imbalances should not blind us to the longer term vision that India's destiny lies in close integration with countries of South-East Asia.

Question: Sir, do you propose to visit Kashmir and whether you propose to hold talks with the separatist groups also?

Prime Minister: I have plans to go to Kashmir in a few days' time to inaugurate railway projects. As far as negotiations with any separatist groups are concerned, well my specific purpose is not to start negotiations or to engage in negotiation myself. But I have always maintained that it is our sincere desire to engage all sections of political opinion in Jammu and Kashmir to find practical, pragmatic solutions to the problems facing the State. I recognise that there are some political groups who are outside the mainstream. We would like them also to engage in a constructive dialogue with us. I have already had two-three meetings with the Hurriyat people. They had promised to come back with specific suggestions. I am still waiting for them.

Question: Sir, bank credit growth continues to be at 10 per cent. What should be the course of monetary action?

Prime Minister: As I said, monetary policy is the exclusive domain of the Reserve Bank. It is not proper for me to comment on the monetary policy stance that should be adopted. These are matters which the Governor is competent to take decisions. He does come and brief me from time to time and I am satisfied that both monetary and fiscal policies in our country are in line with our requirements.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you, Sir.

The press conference now draws to a close. Thank you very much for joining the Prime Minister.

BIMSETEC*165. Remarks of External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna to the Media on the eve of 12th BIMSTEC Ministerial Meeting.*Nay Pyi Taw (Myanmar), December 10, 2009.

I am pleased to be headed for Myanmar to participate in the 12th BIMSTEC Ministerial Meeting. We attach the highest importance to BIMSTEC and regard it as an integral part of our "Look East Policy".

BIMSTEC, which is home to some 1.4 billion people and accounts for 1.7 trillion dollars in GDP, is the bridge between South and South-East Asia. The second Summit held in New Delhi in November last year, provided a significant momentum to our cooperation, which we propose to build upon during the Ministerial Meeting.

We have already identified fourteen areas of cooperation, vital to our people, including health, energy, technology, HRD, trade, tourism and counter-terrorism. A FTA in goods is already under active discussion.

During the Plenary tomorrow, India will handover the Chairmanship of BIMSTEC to Myanmar. I also look forward to my call on the Prime Minister of Myanmar and interactions with my counterparts from fellow BIMSTEC nations.

We are pleased that BIMSTEC is steadily enhancing mutual connectivity and deepening synergies.

166. Statement made by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna while passing on Chairmanship of BIMSTEC to Myanmar.

Nay Pyi Taw (Myanmar), December 11, 2009.

H.E. Mr. Nyan Win,
Excellencies,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

India has been highly privileged to have been the Chair of BIMSTEC during the last three years. We attach great importance to our engagement with our partners within the BIMSTEC framework. We all strive towards promoting economic growth and stability, enhancing energy and food security, lifting the poorer sections of our people out of abject poverty, strengthening infrastructure in our region, linking our people through sustained and collaborative efforts, with the aim of overall development of our region.

2. We see BIMSTEC as an important vehicle to promote regional cooperation and economic integration in a range of areas. We also see BIMSTEC as a bridge linking South and South East Asia with the North East region of our country.

3. BIMSTEC has, over the years, identified wide and diverse range sectors for cooperation. Considerable progress has been achieved in some of the focus areas of cooperation. While we can take satisfaction from this, much needs to be done. BIMSTEC is a grouping with immense potential. We need to work more closely for fuller realisation of its potential. India remains committed to continue our full engagement with our BIMSTEC partners for strengthening the grouping and realising its goals.

4. We would like to see BIMSTEC develop as a vibrant organisation. For the last three years of our Chairmanship of BIMSTEC, we have been striving towards this goal. I would like to thank each one of my colleagues for their full and willing support that was extended to us in the course of our endeavour.

5. I am sure our cooperation within BIMSTEC will consolidate further under the vision and leadership of Myanmar. Excellency, you will always get unfailing support from India towards this cause. It gives me great pleasure to now formally hand over the Chairmanship of BIMSTEC to my distinguished colleague, the Foreign Minister of Myanmar, His Excellency U Nyan Win.

Thank you.

167. Statement by External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna at the Plenary of the 12th BIMSTEC Ministerial Meeting. Nay Pyi Taw (Myanmar), December 11, 2009.

H.E. Mr. Nyan Win,
Excellencies,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

At the outset I would like to express my profound gratitude to our host, the Foreign Minister of Myanmar, H.E. Mr. Nyan Win, for making excellent arrangements for the 12th BIMSTEC Ministerial Meeting and the warm hospitality extended to me and my delegation.

2. The people of BIMSTEC countries are linked by the waters that flow down the Himalayas as well as the waters of the Bay of Bengal. There exist complementarities amidst diversities with regard to our potential of economic-commercial cooperation. We need to tap our myriad synergies to consolidate our cooperation.

3. The second Summit held in New Delhi last year was an important milestone and an opportunity to reflect about the achievements so far and the future path. Our Leaders have given concrete ideas to build upon our cooperation for the coming years. These will guide us in shaping the future of our grouping collectively.

4. BIMSTEC has made sure and steady progress. 13 areas of cooperation were identified where considerable progress has been made. We look forward to close consultations in the area of Climate Change which has been identified as the 14th area of cooperation.

5. The signing of the Convention on Cooperation in Combating International Terrorism, Trans-National Organized Crime and Illicit Drug Trafficking is a major achievement of this BIMSTEC Ministerial Meeting. This would provide a legal framework for our law enforcement agencies to cooperate in combating the scourge of terrorism, organized crime and drug trafficking. The Convention would send a strong message to the perpetrators of such crimes that the BIMSTEC region can no longer be used as a safe haven and the Governments and the people of the region are united in their response to the threat posed by terrorism, organized crime and drug trafficking.

Mr. Chairman,

6. Today we are meeting in the backdrop of the global economic and financial scenario where the crisis may be bottoming out, but the global economy is not expected to reach 3% growth until the end of 2010. However, to make growth sustainable, and to make good the losses of developmental gains made by the developing countries as a result of the crisis, much remains to be done. The steps which need to be taken to lift millions of people in the developing world, should be brought into focus in the global discourse. We need to pay special attention to this aspect under BIMSTEC.

7. We have been facing an increasing challenge from emerging and re-emerging diseases. No country in the world is immune to this challenge. This century has witnessed global pandemics of SARS, Influenza A H1N1, Chickunguniya and epizootic of avian influenza. BIMSTEC members have to work together in communities, at the national level and the international level, for mitigating these diseases. India can collaborate with our BIMSTEC partner countries in many areas to address the above issues.

8. Agriculture remains the mainstay of economies of the BIMSTEC member countries. The member countries share a unique "unity in diversity" as far as ecology and resources are concerned and this would in fact facilitate high synergism in this endeavour. Given that the challenges being faced by BIMSTEC members in the area of Agriculture are quite similar, we can all put in concerted efforts through development and execution of common programmes aiming at tackling these challenges. Cooperation in seed development is another vital area in this context as seeds play a seminal role in effecting productive agriculture. We would be sharing concept papers on cooperation in these areas shortly.

9. We also need to focus on various areas of connectivity among the member-countries, particularly in the area of transport and communication linkages. Constraints and bottlenecks in this area need to be tackled on a priority basis for enhancing overall cooperation as connectivity in the areas of transport and communication is the basic building block to build on any form of cooperation. We are happy that all members have endorsed the BIMSTEC Transport Infrastructure and Logistics Study conducted by ADB, and further steps would be taken for its implementation.

10. Intra-BIMSTEC trade is another area in which we should make all efforts to move ahead. Our trade is still quite modest. Implementation of the Trade-in-Goods Agreement which was finalised at the last meeting of the TNC in Phuket in June this year will help fully exploit our natural synergies in strengthening trade and economic ties amongst our countries and would provide a fresh impetus to intra-regional trade flows. Similarly, there is considerable scope for enhancing intra-regional investments. We look forward to an agreement in the area of investment and services as the next stage of the FTA.

11. Enhancing people-to-people contacts should also be one of our overarching priorities. I am happy to note that India's think tank, the Research and Information System, will host a meeting of BIMSTEC think tanks in February next year. This meeting will bring our experts and scholars together. I am sure they will come up with suggestions to further consolidate our cooperation.

12. Tourism is an important and growing sector in our economies. BIMSTEC countries may consider creating tourism packages by identifying one tourist destination from each country. These can be then jointly promoted and popularized and other innovative tourism packages can be worked out jointly by our tourism boards. Direct contacts between the tourism stakeholders of BIMSTEC countries should also be encouraged.

13. India is already in the process of establishing the Nalanda University as an international university of excellence. We would be happy to have BIMSTEC closely associated with it.

14. India remains committed to her engagement with BIMSTEC partners in furthering our cooperation in this regional framework. Under our Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation Programme, which is well known as ITEC, we are offering 450 scholarships to BIMSTEC countries to encourage greater exchange of technical know-how in areas of mutual benefit. This includes additional 150 training slots offered by our Prime Minister at the last Summit in New Delhi. I am happy to mention that utilization rate of these training slots has been more than 80%.

15. While BIMSTEC is still a young and growing grouping, in the fast changing global economic scenario we need to make all efforts to make BIMSTEC an effective and enabling platform for further consolidation of our multifaceted cooperation and tap the new emerging opportunities. Establishment of a Permanent Secretariat for BIMSTEC will help coordinate our efforts in an effective way.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

168. Joint Statement issued at the end of the Twelfth BIMSTEC Ministerial Meeting.

We noted with deep concern the critical challenges that climate change poses for the world at large, and for our region in particular. Climate change threatens human security in areas as diverse as food, energy and livelihood security; it also poses existential challenges such as climate change induced large scale displacement.

We welcomed the inclusion of Climate Change as the 14th priority area of cooperation, as recommended by the 13th BIMSTEC SOM and endorsed by the 11th Ministerial Meeting held in New Delhi in November 2008. We accepted with appreciation the initiative by Bangladesh to be the lead country for Climate Change. We are confident that the inclusion of this new area of cooperation will contribute significantly to the joint efforts on the mitigation and adaptation to climate change in the BIMSTEC region.

We recalled with appreciation the finalization of the following four documents by the 10th Ministerial Meeting.

- i. BIMSTEC Convention on Cooperation in Combating International Terrorism, Transnational Organized Crime and Illicit Drug Trafficking.

We encouraged the Member States to sign the remaining three documents at the earliest.

We reviewed the ongoing progress in the following priority areas of cooperation in BIMSTEC.

We took note of the ongoing negotiations on the Agreements on Services and Investment under BIMSTEC FTA, and urged the Member States to conclude them as soon as possible.

Transport and Communication

We agreed that improved transportation and communication linkages and greater connectivity between our Member States are important elements for the BIMSTEC process that will provide direct benefits to our peoples. We expressed our satisfaction at the endorsement by all Member States of the BIMSTEC Transport Infrastructure and Logistics Study (BTILS) conducted by the Asian Development Bank (ADB) and requested the Chair of BIMSTEC to formally communicate the decision to the ADB. We advised the BIMSTEC Working Group in Bangkok to liaise with ADB to initiate further steps with regard to the implementation of the recommendations of the Study.

We expressed confidence that the joint promotion and marketing of tourism destinations will promote the tourism industries of the Member States and also create tourism awareness and better understanding among the peoples of the Member States.

Energy

We stressed the importance of strengthening cooperation amongst Member States in the fields of grid connectivity, gas pipelines, hydro power, renewable sources of energy, energy efficiency and energy sector reforms and regulations, and sharing of experiences and best practices with a view to ensuring energy security in the BIMSTEC region. We took note of Thailand's proposal to sign the MoA for the Establishment of the BIMSTEC Energy Centre during the Second BIMSTEC Energy Ministers Meeting to be held in Thailand in 2010.

Technology

We welcomed the progress in terms of the Joint Survey undertaken during 2007 followed by the relevant workshop in 2008.

We also considered that more workshops should be conducted to further promote cooperation in this sector.

Poverty Alleviation

We welcomed the progress made at the first Ministerial Meeting on Poverty Alleviation held in Dhaka in July 2008 and particularly noted the observations of the Ministerial meeting.

We focused on discussions on poverty alleviation in the context of ensuring food security in the BIMSTEC region. We also welcomed the kind offer of Nepal to host the 2nd BIMSTEC Ministerial Meeting on Poverty Alleviation in 2010.

We reiterated our commitment to expand cooperation in culture to include cultural values, diversity and heritage and agreed to extend cultural exchanges among Member States.

We looked forward to the early signing of the MoU on the Establishment of the BIMSTEC Cultural Industries Commission and BIMSTEC Cultural Industries Observatory in Bhutan by the Member States. We expressed the hope that the BIMSTEC Cultural Industries Observatory (BCIO) would be operational as soon as possible.

Agriculture

We welcomed the progress made during the 2nd Expert Group Meeting held in India and a wide range of cooperation activities. We expressed hope that these concrete activities and projects would be implemented expeditiously. We felt the need to address the issues relating to agricultural productivity, post harvest technologies and management, and competitiveness in the region. In this regard, we emphasized the importance of further collaboration in research and development, technology transfer and private sector participation among the Member States.

Counter-Terrorism & Transnational Crime

We welcomed the signing of the BIMSTEC Convention on Cooperation in Combating International Terrorism, Transnational Organized Crime and Illicit Drug Trafficking by the Member States which reflects the resolve of our Governments and peoples to combat the menace posed by terrorism, organized crime and drug trafficking. We reiterated the significance of the work done in the Joint Working Group on Counter Terrorism and Transnational Crime and its four sub-groups covering Intelligence Sharing; Legal and Law Enforcement Issues; Combating the Financing of Terrorism and Prevention of Illicit Trafficking in Narcotic Drugs, Psychotropic Substances and Precursor Chemicals.

Public Health

We took note of the efforts in enhancing cooperation in the area of traditional medicine and welcomed Thailand's offer to host the 2nd BIMSTEC Meeting on the Network of National Centres of Coordination in

We expressed appreciation for initiatives taken by India to set up a BIMSTEC Network of Policy Think Tanks. We expressed our hope that the forthcoming meeting of the Network to be organized by the Research & Information System for Developing Countries (RIS), India, in 2010, would significantly enhance mutual understanding and goodwill through people-to-people contact in the BIMSTEC region.

We also expressed appreciation for Thailand's hosting the 12th Anniversary of BIMSTEC to promote people-to-people contact and interaction among Member States.

We encouraged the Member States to observe the BIMSTEC Day (6 June) to create greater public awareness about BIMSTEC.

Permanent Secretariat

We stressed the need for early establishment of the BIMSTEC Secretariat to impart greater dynamism and added momentum to cooperation among Member States in the BIMSTEC region. We agreed that the Chair, in consultation with Member States, will devise the mechanism in order to decide the venue for the Permanent Secretariat.

In this context, we directed the Chair of BIMSTEC Joint Working Group to conclude its assigned tasks as decided at the 11th Ministerial Meeting in November 2008, at the earliest.

BRIC-RIC AND SCO*169. Address by Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon on "BRICs in the New World Order" at the Observer Research Foundation Conference.*New Delhi, May 13, 2009.*Ambassador Rasgotra, Chairman of the Observer Research Foundation;*Distinguished Participants;*Ladies and Gentlemen

Thank you for asking me to speak at your conference on 'BRICs in the new world order'. Once again ORF is serving as a leader of intellectual opinion, and not just in India. Your choice of a subject for this conference is also extremely topical. The number of eminent experts and scholars that you have attracted from the BRIC countries is therefore no surprise.

The BRIC countries as a group have come a long way since the concept was first enunciated in 2001. We have maintained our high rates of growth and increased our integration with the world, in good economic times and bad. We have also moved to institutionalize our meetings and interactions. Last year, in 2008, we held the first stand alone meeting of BRIC foreign ministers. This year we look forward to the first summit meeting of our leaders next month in Russia.

BRIC was originally an economic concept. When first enunciated it was a grouping of economies which were growing faster than others. We continue to do so. Already BRIC accounts for 40% of the world's population, 25.9% of its total geographic area, and 40% of global GDP. This proportion is rapidly increasing and Goldman Sachs envisages it growing* until "BRIC can become collectively bigger than the G-7 by 2035".

* Global consultancy firm KPMG on May 14 said the confidence of service sector firms in BRIC countries witnessed a sharp rise in April on expectations of faster growth in business activity, revenues and recruitment in the next 12 months.

According to the 2009 BRIC Services Business Outlook survey by KPMG, and quoted by The Hindu in its issue of May 15, 2009, all indicators signal an improvement in confidence in April after a sharp drop seen in October, 2008, amid the global economic crisis. "Optimism is highest in Brazil, while confidence has also rebounded strongly in Russia and India. However,

As the global economy evolves and works its way through the present global financial and economic crisis, the BRIC are a factor of stability and growth. This was already evident in our role during the G-20 deliberations. It seems to me that the role of the BRIC countries in the global economy will only increase. I am, therefore, happy to see that you are considering the contribution that our countries can make to restoring financial stability, and to finding solutions to the global problems of our time such as poverty, hunger and disease, through food security and energy security and sustainable development.

Increasingly the world itself is coming to espouse views that we share among the BRIC countries. For instance, it is now widely appreciated that globalization, development and economic processes cannot be left solely to the mercies of an unregulated free market. It is also now generally accepted that larger considerations of public good require both globalization and growth to be inclusive. In addition, it is becoming clearer and clearer that international decision-making on global economic issues must necessarily be democratized to reflect present realities.

As we look outwards at the world, we also look inwards among ourselves at the complementarities between our economies. These are considerable thanks to the differing patterns of growth and the stages of development that we find ourselves in. We are richly endowed collectively in terms of natural resources and other factors of production, and are today in a position to sustain our higher growth rates. Combined with our growing middle classes and the young populations that most of us enjoy, the BRIC can hope to be a factor of growth and stability in the world economy for decades to come.

sentiment in China has eased a little compared with the previous survey, although it remains highly positive," the survey said. The BRIC Business Outlook Survey shows that India's service sector is set to grow solidly in the proceeding 12 months. "Improved sentiment is encouraging and reflects fact that many sectors have a significant dependency on domestic market and have been positively impacted by lower interest rates, lower inflation and improved liquidity. Outcome of national elections and monsoons will in the next few months determine how this trend develops," KPMG India CEO Russell Parera said.

With business activity expected to rise in the next 12 months, BRIC service providers will also step up their recruitment, the survey revealed. Confidence on staffing levels is up in all nations, with Brazilian firms particularly confident of a rise. Further, revenues and profits at Indian service firms are set to expand in 12 months, according to the findings. In India, staffing numbers are forecast to grow during the coming year, in line with expectations for higher activity.

Similarly, capital expenditure at Indian service firms is anticipated to rise solidly in year ahead with 43 per cent reporting they were looking to hike spending on fixed assets.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

When we look at the world around us, to some of us it seems that the world is today at a moment that does not come often, when fundamental shifts occur in the distribution of power within the international system. When these shifts happen, they are rapid, and result in a transformed balance of economic, political and, ultimately, soft power.

We are probably too close and too involved in the present transition to see the wood for the trees. But I would guess that the world is today on the cusp of a new type of multipolarity. As a result of several decades of globalization, we are in an interdependent world. Global flows of goods, people and capital, and the development and dissemination of technology have eroded the autonomy and authority of the state, the old order and old geopolitical realities. What we see is a situation where the major powers simultaneously compete and cooperate with each other, each with all the others, to a greater or lesser degree.

The shift that we are witnessing is probably towards a flatter distribution of power in the world. And this shift is hastened by the geopolitical consequences of the global economic crisis. Unlike previous financial crises which were handled within the closed shop of the G-7 industrialised countries, this crisis is sought to be addressed in the G-20 which includes all the BRIC countries. Existing power holders are always reluctant to share or lose power. This fact alone therefore shows that an unavoidable shift in the balance of economic power is underway, and that the international role of the BRIC countries will increase further.

Politically speaking, the BRIC are far from an alliance or even an organization in the traditional sense. There is, however, increasing congruence in our approach to international issues. Our bilateral relationships have steadily acquired depth and significance and have evolved into strategic partnerships. The sum of our interactions is certainly greater than the parts. The meeting of our Foreign Ministers gave us an opportunity to find common positions on issues of interest to us in the global arena. Today, two of the BRIC countries are permanent members of the United Nations Security Council while the two others have their aspirations. One is in the G-8 and the others are members of the Outreach Five. One or several BRIC members have global competence in manufacturing, knowledge-based economic activity, high-end science and technology and in various aspects of national capabilities. It is the divergences among us that create the complementarities that give us the confidence to work together economically. I am sure that the same complementarities and the evolution of the world situation will lead to increasing political congruence among us in the future.

I do hope that your deliberations in this Conference will consider some of these themes and suggest ways forward for the BRIC.

With these few words, allow me to felicitate you again. With such impressive expertise present, I am sure that your conference will make a major contribution to preparations for the summit meeting of our leaders in June in Russia. Please do be as imaginative and open-minded as possible in looking at the new world order that is being created even as we speak, and in making suggestions for new forms of cooperation amongst our countries.

Thank you.

170. Briefing by Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon on Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh's visit to Yekaterinburg to attend Shanghai Cooperation Organization(SCO) and BRIC Summits.

New Delhi, June 12, 2009.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening and welcome back as usual. Foreign Secretary is here to brief you about Prime Minister's visit to Yekaterinburg for the SCO and BRIC summits. To Foreign Secretary's right is my colleague Additional Secretary (Eurasia) Mr. Divyabh Manchanda. Foreign Secretary would be making some opening remarks and thereafter he will be very happy to take questions. Thank you.

Foreign Secretary: Thank you and to begin with apologies for being a little late. I think it is the first time, so I feel especially guilty.

We thought we would brief you about Prime Minister's visit to Yekaterinburg in Russia on the 15th to the 17th of June. As you know, he will be going for the SCO Summit meetings which will be in the morning of the 16th, and then for the BRIC Summit - Brazil, Russia, India, China - which will be in the afternoon and evening of the 16th of June. He will be arriving there late in the evening on the 15th and coming back to India on the 17th. It is his first visit abroad in the new term of office. He will be accompanied by a delegation which includes National Security Advisor, Principal Secretary, and some of us.

As far as SCO is concerned India has participated in all the Heads of State and Heads of Government meetings of the SCO since 2005. But this is the first time that Prime Minister will be leading the delegation himself. At the last Summit in 2008 in Dushanbe, the SCO had decided to lift the involvement of Observer States to a qualitative new level. And this time for the first time the Observer States and the Member States will be meeting together in both a restricted format and then in an expanded plenary where they will be considering all the issues together.

It is a measure of how important we think the SCO is that Prime Minister is going himself, also because we think it is particularly important that regional cooperation in Asia should be encouraged at a time when the world economy is under considerable stress and when there are major issues which need to be discussed at the summit level.

In the afternoon of the 16th June there will be a meeting of the BRIC leaders - Brazil, Russia, India and China - where again there will be a restricted meeting of the leaders followed by delegation-level talks, after which I believe the media will be addressed by the BRIC leaders themselves. The BRIC leaders are supposed to, are anticipated to, exchange views on a range of views such as the global financial and economic crisis; its implications for the world economy, for security; progress in the G-20 summits; food and energy security; development and climate change issues; and on regional developments.

As you know, the term BRIC actually came into existence because of the combined economic strength of these four countries. If you look at it today, the BRIC constitutes about 25.9 per cent of the total land area of the world; 40 per cent of global population; and about 40 per cent of global GDP as well. So, it is a sizeable grouping in any sense of the word. These also have been, for some time, among the fastest growing economies in the world with tremendous potential. So, I think it is natural that the leaders of these four countries should sit together. It is the first time we are doing a summit level meeting. We have had other level meetings of the BRIC, ministerial and other levels. And BRIC leaders have also met on the sidelines of other meetings but now they are doing a stand-alone summit. So, in that sense it is a progression on what we have had in the past.

Maybe I will leave the rest to questions, if there is any that you would like to ask about this.

Question: Foreign Secretary, since you have said that he will be attending the SCO meeting, would there be any chance that he would meet the Pakistani Prime Minister or President during this meeting?

Foreign Secretary: Well, they will be in the same room, same place, same time. I am sure there will be a meeting. But what sort of meeting, it is very difficult to say. The time is very limited. PM is arriving there only on the evening of the 15th. The 16th, as you can see, is taken up with the meetings. They will I am sure meet, shake hands, but more than that it is hard to predict at this stage.

I think he has the same question. This is why I did not go through a list of bilaterals. There are several leaders who will be there at the same time and there will be, I am sure, opportunities for meetings. But it would not I think be easy to organize a structured programme in quite the same way.

Question : Mr. Menon, are we looking at more bilateral meetings, say with Chinese President?

Foreign Secretary: As I said, PM essentially has one day there and that day, the 16th, has the SCO in the morning, the BRIC through the afternoon and evening. So, there will certainly be meetings. At this meeting together they will have social occasions to meet. But we cannot give you a list of scheduled bilateral meetings. They will meet certainly. They will have a conversation. But more than that, I cannot tell you at this stage.

Question: Just one follow-up question. Talking about Zardari-PM meeting, they will meet you say?

Foreign Secretary: They will be in the same room at the same time.

Question: Does our position on resumption of the dialogue stay the same? Is there no change in our position, or there would not be any?

Foreign Secretary: I think there can be nothing more authoritative than what Prime Minister said on the floor of Parliament earlier this week.

Question: There are reports emanating from Islamabad, even from India and from Washington, that resumption of talks between the two countries is around the corner. What is your response?

Foreign Secretary: That we do not negotiate or discuss these things through the media. What we had to say Prime Minister has said on the floor of the House. As I said, you cannot be more authoritative than that.

Question : From now onwards will India be attending the SCO summit on a regular basis?

Foreign Secretary: This particular Summit is an important Summit not only because of the importance that we attach to the efforts that Russia has made to make it possible for Observers to also participate in all the meetings - in the restricted meetings, in the regular meetings, in the delegation-level talks as well - but it is also important because for the first time the SCO has structured the meetings, the members have chosen to structure the meetings like this. So, we are very happy to participate. It is also, as I said, discussing a very important agenda, a list of issues which matter to us, to the region, to the world. So, that is why Prime Minister is going this time.

Question: What about next time?

Foreign Secretary: I cannot predict the future.

Question: I would like to ask you whether you are expecting anything tangible as an outcome of the BRIC summit? What are you really looking for in terms of the BRIC talks? Are there specific issues that India wants to build consensus with the other parties that India is looking to get out of this? What do you think can come out of this? What is India's agenda?

Foreign Secretary: Three things. One is, certainly there is value in the leaders actually discussing the world economic situation, the crisis, what they see as the prospects. There is value just in the exchange of views and opinions on that and assessments. Secondly, there has been a preparatory process which is involved - not just Track-II but scholars, economists, various meetings. We had one in India last month at the ORF where they had called scholars from all four countries. And we have gone through a set of ideas of what leaders might do to promote regional economic cooperation or cooperation between the BRIC countries themselves. So, there is a very strong economic cooperation component which we hope will emerge from the discussions. Thirdly, there is also - and you would have noticed last year when the Foreign Ministers had their stand-alone meeting of the BRIC - some congruence of views on international issues, on political issues that face us. We will be discussing those as well. That is more in the nature of a discussion rather than any policy coordination and so on. But we do think it would be useful to have that discussion as well.

Question: Sir, just a few days ago Mr. Gilani had said that a special message was being sent to the Indian Government. He had said that the last thing that both countries want is a war, and so on and so forth. Has the message arrived and what is the message all about? Does it relate to discussions and beginning of talks all over again?

Foreign Secretary: I am not sure I have understood the question. We are in constant touch with each other - India and Pakistan. They have a High Commissioner here; we have a High Commissioner there. We have established channels of communicating with each other, apart from through you, the gentlemen of the press, through the media. So, I am not quite sure when you say 'special message'. I am sure we both watch each other's statements carefully. In the last few days you had a series of public authoritative statements from the Government of India from the leadership at the highest level. We have seen Pakistani statements as well. So, I am not sure what you mean when you say 'a special message'.

Question: He had said that the message would be sent to the Government of India....

Foreign Secretary: I think you should ask him on this.

Question: Have we received a formal offer from Pakistan to resume dialogue as early as at this meeting?

Foreign Secretary: I think it has been clear for some time that Pakistan has said that they would like to resume the dialogue. I think we have also said that we would like to, but that it is necessary before that that we see certain steps being taken, and that we need an atmosphere in which a dialogue can actually bear fruit. For that, we have made it clear what we think is necessary.

Question: Could the BRIC meeting lead to some common positions between the four countries in the G-20, for instance with common policies being pushed forward by the four of you?

Foreign Secretary: There is a great deal of overlap in the agendas. It is true. We have had BRIC meetings just before G-20 meetings. For instance, we had a meeting of BRIC Finance Ministers in Sao Paolo just before the Washington G-20 Summit. We did the same before the London G-20 Summit. I think that level of exchange of opinion and of coordination will continue in the future as well. For the outcome of this particular BRIC Summit, I do not want to prejudge what the leaders do. I think the outcome will be clear by the 16th evening and we will give it to you. I do not want to start guessing what they are going to do when they meet on the 16th afternoon.

Question: Could you spell out a little bit in more detail what you think of the convergence of views on international issues that would be discussed at the BRIC Summit? In addition to that, I think there is some fear that BRIC could sort of devolve into a kind of America-bashing with Russia is pushing some discussions around the dollar and things of that nature. So, what is India's position going to be in that context?

Foreign Secretary: I think that is an extreme word, what you said. If you look at what the BRIC has done so far, there is absolutely no reason whatsoever to categorise what BRIC has done as bashing in any form. As far as I can, I would expect more of the same in the given situation. These are four economies which were among the fastest growing economies in the world over the last decade, which have an enormous stake in the success of the world economy, in its staying open, and in it continuing to grow, and in a rapid and full recovery from the situation that it finds itself in today. So, what you will see coming out of the BRIC will be positive, constructive. And we will try and contribute to this end, which I think frankly is an objective that everybody shares. I do not see this as being, therefore, in any way directed at anyone else. No. I see it as contributing to the greater good of us all.

Question: What do we think about SCO membership? Is it a closed club? Who are the Ministers and senior officers accompanying the Prime Minister?

Foreign Secretary: The senior officers are the NSA, the Principal Secretary and I, I do not know if I count as senior. On the membership of the SCO, that is really for the members to decide. We do not anticipate movement on that issue in this summit. I know they have had some discussions among themselves, but I think that is really for them to do. Our position has been quite clear, and we find it useful to work with them functionally whether it is on counter-terrorism, whether it is on the economic issues, whether it is on economic integration issues, on all these questions; and we will continue to do so.

Question: I just wanted to follow up. You also said that there was congruence in international political issues. I just wanted if you could elaborate on precisely what that means?

Foreign Secretary: One is Afghanistan for instance where I think we all would like to see the defeat of terrorism, of extremism; return of stability and economic growth and development. That is an issue which the SCO and among the BRIC as well we have discussed in the past. If you need a list of the issues, it is best to look at what the Foreign Ministers did when the BRIC Foreign Ministers met and issued a communiqué. You can see which are the issues. I do not want to go through the whole list.

Question: Sir, despite repeated assurances from the Australian authorities, and even India has said that we have spoken to the authorities, there has been another attack today taking the total number of victims to twelve. I would like to know your reaction to that.

Foreign Secretary: I think it is a terrible thing that the attacks are continuing. Frankly, we would hope that everybody who is in a position to do something about it, primarily the Australian Government, will succeed in their efforts to try and stop this.

Question: Mr. Menon, do you see a shift in US policy on Kashmir? How do you respond to Burn's statement that US wants resolution of Kashmir issue as per Kashmiri's aspirations?

Foreign Secretary: The simple fact is, I do not see a shift. No. I think we have seen statements like this in the past and I am sure we will see them in the future.

Question: Mr. Menon, as the Prime Minister goes for his first foreign trip in his new tenure, would you spell out what would you think would be the three-four foreign policy priorities for the new Government? The last tenure was taken up for a considerable extent by the nuclear deal. As India looks ahead for the next five years, what would you say are our three-four priorities?

Foreign Secretary: I think one is a peaceful periphery and relations with our neighbours. The second I think would be to continue the improvement in the transformation of our relations with the major powers. The third, and this is actually the threat that joins all the other priorities, is to work with the international community to see a rapid recovery in the world economy. All three of these for us really are important because they help us to achieve our domestic goals of transforming India, of bringing our growth rate up to a level where we can achieve our basic goal of abolishing mass poverty by 2020 for which we need inclusive growth. So, to my mind that is the touchstone by which we will deal with events, deal with the rest of the world is how it helps us to transform India itself.

Question: Mr. Menon, you will be going for the SCO right after the Iranian elections today. Is the new Head of State of Iran expected to be there as well?

Foreign Secretary: It depends on what happens. I am not sure that the Iranian procedures for having a Head of State in place will be completed by then. So, the expectation is that President Ahmadinejad will be there. I think that is the basis on which the planning has been done.

Question: A small follow-up question, Mr. Menon, on what you said about Australia. When we had trouble in Iraq, we stopped our workers from going to Iraq. There was an official ban that the Government of India imposed. If these attacks continue on our students in Australia, would the Government consider imposing a ban on sending students to Australia?

Foreign Secretary: I think that is a matter of judgment. If you look at the size of the population and the number of people involved, I think you have to take a call depending on whether or not the level of threat and danger to our people is so high that it justifies a ban. There have been other cases where we have chosen just to issue an advisory, say. There are a whole series of steps that we could take depending on our judgment of how grave the danger is. In the case of Australia, we have not made any such judgment. We have a cooperative, helpful government which is in authority, in power, which is doing what it can to try and stop this. There will be guidelines being issued today for students, which we will make available to you.

Question: Is the Indian Government happy with the kind of effort the Australian Government is making so far?

Foreign Secretary: We think they are doing what they can.

Question: I wanted to push you a little bit on this question of the dollar. President Medvedev has been very clear that he wants to use the BRIC summit meeting to talk about moving the world away from the dollar as a reserve currency. What is India's position on the global reserve currency?

Foreign Secretary: I am sure we will discuss the issue. If anyone wants to raise an issue, we will all discuss it. We ourselves in the past have spoken of the need to increase SDRs and their role. But there are several possible solutions to this issue, and I am sure we will discuss it. So far, frankly, it has been an academic discussion of possibilities rather than any coordinated policy decisions by states. That is the level at which it is now. So, I would rather not get ahead of ourselves here.

Question: Has there been an official request from the Pakistani Government for a meeting between their President and Prime Minister Manmohan Singh? Not just a handshake, a proper, formal meeting.

Foreign Secretary: No.

Question: Sir, yesterday we heard the American version of William Burns meeting with Indian Prime Minister and other leaders. He said that US emphasized on resuming dialogue between India and Pakistan. More specifically I want to ask whether the nonproliferation issue has figured in the discussion? And when are we beginning negotiations on reprocessing agreement?

Foreign Secretary: Nonproliferation did not figure in the meeting with Prime Minister.

Question: Or otherwise in the discussions.

Foreign Secretary: It did. We spent four hours together in our talks and that is one of the subjects which we covered. Yes, we did discuss nonproliferation. In fact, we found that we had very similar approaches on many questions on nonproliferation and that it was not a particularly difficult discussion at all. On what you said there about the resumption of dialogue, he was quite clear. What he said was they would welcome it, but that the pace, timing, content of it is up to us. I think that is what he said and not some of the exaggerated versions that we have seen out there on the ether. On reprocessing, as you know, both sides have agreed that the clock has started under article 6.3 of the 123 Agreement for discussion of reprocessing procedures and arrangements. And we hope to start those discussions before the end of next month.

Question: One element of the nonproliferation agenda that the Obama people have carried over from the Bush days is the Proliferation Security Initiative (PSI). We know that they are very keen that India join it. Gol in the past and the Prime Minister in particular in Parliament had spelt out India's objections to the PSI. Is this a question that is being actively re-examined right now? Is there a possibility that India may join the PSI at some point soon?

Foreign Secretary: I think we are looking at PSI again. As you know, we have no problems with the purposes of PSI. In fact, many of those we have carried out and implemented ourselves. I think what we have difficulty with is some of the language in the Suva which makes an artificial distinction about the rights and responsibilities of nuclear-weapon states and non-weapon states, and uses a definition of nuclear-weapon states, non-weapon states which does not conform to reality today. I think that is the source of the difficulty. On the objects of the PSI, on what it does, how it tries to prevent proliferation of sensitive technologies and material, I do not think we have any difficulty with that.

Question: What about the various defence agreements that India and US have been discussing like End-user Verification Agreement and Logistics Support Agreement? What is the progress on that?

Foreign Secretary: We continue to discuss them. We are closer than we ever have been before on finding language on the end-use monitoring which could be used generically. But do not forget, this is not an issue that is brand new. It is an issue we have solved repeatedly in the past. So, I am fairly confident that at some stage we will be able to do so.

Question: What about India's concerns over on-site verification?

Foreign Secretary: I am confident that we will be able to solve those problems, all the issues involved. I am confident that we will because we have solved them in the past.

Thank you.

171. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh before his departure for Yekaterinburg to attend the BRIC and SCO Summits.

New Delhi, June 15, 2009.

At the invitation of the President of the Russian Federation, His Excellency Mr. Dmitry Medvedev, I am leaving today to attend the BRIC and SCO Summits being hosted by Russia in Yekaterinburg.

The countries of Brazil, Russia, India and China (BRIC) together account for 40% of the world's population and 40% of global Gross Domestic Product. The BRIC grouping has the potential to lead global economic growth. In fact, global economic recovery is closely linked to the success of the BRIC economies. India is among the fastest growing BRIC economies, and we are ready to play our part in coordinating international efforts to overcome the ongoing financial and economic slowdown. BRIC countries also have a role to play in promoting the principle of multilateralism in international affairs, and in the reform of institutions of global governance, including the United Nations, to reflect contemporary realities. From these points of view, the convening of the first stand-alone summit of BRIC countries is a significant development.

I will also be attending the Summit meeting of the Shanghai Cooperation Organization (SCO) for the first time. India has been an observer of the SCO since 2005. My decision to attend the Summit is a reflection of the high regard we have for Russia's Presidency of the SCO, and our desire to intensify our engagement with countries of our extended neighbourhood in Central Asia. There are issues which concern both of us, such as the fight against terrorism and extremism and cooperation in areas of energy security, infrastructure development, agriculture, transportation, science and technology and education. India and the SCO stand to gain considerably from each other through such cooperation.

During my visit, I look forward to meeting and exchanging views with the other world leaders who will be present in Yekaterinburg.

Yekaterinburg, June 16, 2009.

I wish to take this opportunity to once again thank His Excellency President Medvedev for hosting the first BRIC Summit.

We have just concluded useful discussions in the restricted format on some of the major issues before us.

When we review the global financial and economic situation, it is worth recalling that when we met at the Second G-20 Leaders' Summit in April this year we realised that the global downturn was much more severe than what we had anticipated in Washington D.C. in November last year.

In London we were successful in agreeing on several short term measures to infuse greater liquidity, make good the decline that has taken place in capital flows to developing countries by providing adequate resources to the international financial institutions, and agreeing on a broad direction for improvement in the regulatory and supervisory structure for the world's financial system. We also agreed on the need to develop an effective early warning system which can identify the build up of risks which may threaten global financial stability.

There was a unanimous view that protectionism or restrictions on the free flow of trade and persons are counterproductive, and pose a particular threat to recovery in the developing world. The stark collapse in world trade has heightened the importance of an early completion of the Doha Round of talks keeping in mind its development dimension.

We also recognised the continuing need to redefining the role of institutions of global economic and financial governance to deal with the problems of today and to reflect contemporary realities. The broadening of representation in the Financial Stability Forum and the Basle Committee on Banking Supervision, the two key standard setting bodies, has been a useful development in this context.

We were able to identify areas for further improvement in the functioning of multilateral institutions. In the case of the IMF, these related to its surveillance function, its lending role, augmentation of the IMF's resources and governance reforms. In the case of the World Bank, three specific points of action were identified - (i) a substantial increase in lending, (ii) a review of the Bank's lending capacity and capital adequacy and (iii) enabling large developing countries to access required levels of finance through increased lending limits so that they can support recovery in their regions.

The important issue today is to implement the decisions that we have taken. Finance Ministers and Central Bank representatives of BRIC countries have met and identified the areas where our efforts should be focused. Our countries should also keep in contact with each other in the run up to the next G-20 Leaders Summit in Pittsburgh.

Our cooperation in the G-20 process must be backed up by cooperation in the real economy. The volume of trade among BRIC countries has grown rapidly in recent years. Intra-BRIC investments have also grown. We should consider the establishment of a BRIC Joint Business Forum which can identify areas for cooperation such as science and technology, energy, agriculture, aviation, pharmaceuticals and services.

In India, we have launched a number of fiscal stimulus packages including additional public spending, amounting to over 3% of our GDP. Our monetary policy initiatives have been targeted towards maintaining a comfortable liquidity position and ensuring that credit delivery remains on track. Our banking system remains well regulated, capitalized and profitable.

The Joint Statement and the Statement on Global Food Security that we will be adopting later today provide a road-map for our future work.

I wish to congratulate His Excellency President Medvedev for his guidance and leadership during this Summit, and for the successful outcomes that we have reached today.

Thank you.

173. Press conference of Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon at Yekaterinburg.

Yekaterinburg, June 16, 2009.

Thank you for waiting. I will talk to you about Prime Minister's engagements today and yesterday.

As you know the day started with a meeting with President of Kazakhstan, Nursultan Nazarbayev, where they had detailed discussion on bilateral relations. You may remember that the President Nazarbayev was the chief guest of Republic day in Delhi this year, when several ideas of cooperation were discussed, many of them in the energy sector both in civil nuclear and in the oil and gas sector which are now in the process of fructifying -- so they discussed that briefly. They also discussed the other areas of cooperation which they have been agreed upon earlier.

There is considerable interest in amongst Indian companies in setting up petrochemical complex in Kazakhstan also in Pharma cooperation with Kazakhstan because there is raw material. So they reviewed the progress which has been quite rapid since January when there was a ministerial meeting and lot of detailing happened. It was decided to set a joint working group under the foreign ministers. Both sides have agreed to set a time frame and to make sure there is movement on all fronts as quickly as possible.

There after the Prime Minister went to the SCO meeting which began with the restricted session where each of the leader was accompanied by one person. They spoke really openly and frankly about the SCO and its future. Most people agreed that the SCO really works its way forward on three legs. One is of course security in the broader sense. Secondly economic cooperation and thirdly people to people contacts, cultural exchanges and that there is unanimity around the table that all the members and observers would cooperate in practical ways.

On the issue of expansion of membership I think they have a committee which will draft out a criteria for the expansion and which is supposed to report back to the leaders. But quite rightly our interest as PM then subsequently said in the preliminary meeting which I think you must have got the text that we will concentrate on our specific concrete interests in cooperating with the SCO. You can take a look at the listed areas in which we can work together and I won't go over that all over again. Also this time the summit has been structured quite differently. That is why the Prime Minister participated in the restricted meeting, he participated fully in the plenary as well.

Thereafter PM had a meeting with the President of Pakistan. They met for about 40 min most of it alone. As PM mentioned to him right at the beginning I think, when the ladies and gentlemen of the media were still in the room. He said that he was happy to meet but that his mandate was clear that he wished to see how Pakistan could fulfill its assurance that the Pakistani territory is not used for terrorist attacks on India - the assurance which has been given several times.

They had a detailed discussion where they reviewed the India - Pakistan relations, which has you know remained under considerable stress. The primary cause of which is the terrorist attacks on India from Pakistani territory. Prime Minister conveyed to President Zardari full extent of our expectation that the Government of Pakistan takes strong and effective action to prevent the use of Pakistani territory for terrorists attack on India. That it acts against the perpetrators of the past attacks and it dismantles the infrastructure of terrorism in Pakistan. The President of Pakistan explained to Prime Minister some of Pakistan's efforts to deal with it in this manner and also explained the problems that they faced in this regard.

After considerable discussion they have agreed that the primary issues of terrorism to be addressed will be discussed by the two foreign secretaries of the two countries before the two leaders meet again at Sharm-el-Sheikh, on the sidelines of the NAM meeting in the mid of July. The Foreign Secretaries will discuss what Pakistan is doing and what it can do. And we will then take stock of the situation again.

The two leaders also spoke briefly about the potential of India - Pakistan relations. And there is no question which has not been taken up in dialogue process in the past. For the rest, I think, the Prime Minister will speak to you tomorrow and let you know and you can be ask questions also.

The other thing I want to mention was that the Prime Minister had a meeting with President Hu of China quite late last night. The meeting finally broke up at about just before midnight. It must have lasted for about 45 - 50 minutes. I will give you a brief read out. Of course they discussed bilateral relations. President congratulated Prime Minister on his re-election as Prime Minister. Both of them stressed our strategic and cooperative partnership and the determination to carry it forward and to see our relations develop even better in the future. The Prime Minister made it clear that both India and China were playing an increasingly important role in promoting stability in the international system. He described the immense scope that he sees for bilateral relations and the congruence that is emerging on global issues which face us both.

They both felt that we should have an early meeting of the Joint Economic Group which is led by the Commerce Ministers of both sides. They stressed satisfaction at the defence exchanges which have been growing between us both which have been built from level of trust between the armed forces. We have held two joint military exercises so far and we will be holding another one during this year. On a number of global issues we share common concerns and aspirations such as the creation of a new global architecture, climate change, strategies which support development in other words sustainable development and the new global financial order. They agreed that the sides should stay in touch and that both countries would work closely together and keep consulting. We also recognized that we have differences with each other and they expressed satisfaction with what the special representatives have done so far. The SRs will be meeting in the 7th - 8th of August in India. Our President will be visiting China and we also expect high level visits from China. Foreign Offices are working out the details.

It was a good and positive meeting and we covered I think a whole series of questions which we will now start implementing very seriously now that we have clear indication of leadership's of both sides carry this relationship forward. For me the fact of the meeting in itself, that we managed to squeeze these meetings in when Prime Minister himself has 24 hour working time, really one day if we look at it.

Now for the rest of the day he will be at the Summit where there will be restricted meeting with BRIC leaders followed by BRIC Plenary and a Joint Press Conference by the leaders. And after the dinner, I think there is a meeting between Prime Minister and President Medvedev. So he has, as you can see, full and busy time at Yekaterinburg. I will take few questions as we have to go to the BRIC but I thought I owe you this much.

Question: Prime Minister's opening remarks*, would you consider unprecedented? Leaders make remarks once you know the cameras left the room but you started these remarks when...(inaudible) --- was PM trying to address his constituency in India or what? How will you explain this? I think last year.....

* The reference was to introductory remarks made by Dr. Singh when he met the Pakistan President Asif Ali Zardari at Yekaterinburg. The Prime Minister began what was meant to be a one-on-one meeting with Mr. Zardari in the full glare of journalists who had gathered to capture the photo-op. "I am very happy to meet you," he told the Pakistani President after the two delegations had greeted each other, "but I must tell you quite frankly that I have come with the limited mandate of discussing how Pakistan can deliver on its assurances that its territory would not be used for terrorist attacks on India."

FS: I think it is clear that he wanted to say something and he said it. I think you don't need too much to read into this. He meant what he said.

Question: You said Pakistan Government explained some of the steps Pakistan Government has taken...

FS: He also described that. I can't say because I was not in the room. I can tell only what I know. Tomorrow, you will get a chance to ask PM.....

Question: There was talk of the Foreign Secretary's meeting. Are we moving towards some type of dialogue?

FS: I was very careful with my words. I said the Prime Minister met with the President. The Foreign Secretaries will discuss the primary issue - terrorism, what Pakistan has done about it. I was very careful with words. Then the leaders will take stock when they meet again at Sharm-al-Sheikh. That's it. The rest is astrology.

Question: What is your sense of what our markers will be? What is that we want Pakistan to do?

FS: First we would like to hear what they have done. We will tell them what we expect. Then, we will see what they come back with. Then we will see what will be done.

Question: When the leaders meet at Sharm-al-Sheikh, can we expect resumption of dialogue?

FS: I told you that the rest is astrology. I was very clear in what I have said. This is a meeting between the leaders. Foreign Secretaries will meet to discuss the primary issue of terrorism. Then, the leaders will take stock. That's it. Rest is all speculation. What will happen, what could happen is all speculation.

Question: Where will the Foreign Secretaries meeting take place?

FS: Nothing is decided as yet. We have just been told, like you, two minutes ago.

Question: How will this dialogue be different from the previous one decided in Colombo?

FS: We have a very clear mandate now agreed by the leaders. We know exactly what we are supposed to do..the mandate that I just spoke to you about. Thereafter the rest we will report to our leaders. Then they will decide what happens after that.

Question: They explained the steps taken by Pakistan as also the problems faced by Pakistan? Can you explain what were these?

FS: I can't. As I said I was not in the room and I can only tell what I know.

Question: Can we assume that the Foreign Secretaries will look at what Pakistan has done to address terrorism?

FS: I think that's what we are supposed to do. They will tell us what they have done. We will tell them what our expectations are. We will then report to our leaders. They will then see what to do with it. They will take stock. There is very specific clear mandate for us.

Question: In the meeting with the Chinese President, did they discuss restructuring International Monetary Fund (IMF)?

FS: They discussed only in the general sense restructuring the international financial system. That we do in the G20. We coordinate very carefully. We also discuss in some detail in BRIC. The Finance Ministers meet before every round of G20 Meeting and we have coordinated that in some detail among ourselves. We have a separate channel to do that. At this level, they spoke of our common aspirations and our common concerns about the restructuring of the International Financial Order.

Question: Did Pakistan agree that terrorism is the primary issue?

FS: I don't want to put words on their mouth? I don't want to say that yes they agreed or they did not agree and so on. I am telling you the outcome agreed by the two leaders and what they told us themselves exactly in the words that I told you. I don't want to overload this with interpretation.

Question: To what extent do we agree that Pakistan is also a victim suffering from terrorism?

FS: There is terrorism in Pakistan. But that's not the issue here. What has paused our dialogue is terrorism from Pakistan against India. Our mandate is clear. We are supposed to discuss what Pakistan has done on terrorism, whether it is Mumbai or previous attacks. We will tell them our concerns. We will then report to our leaders who will take stock when they meet. I am trying to be very precise in what I say. We have a clear mandate, a clear job to perform here. I don't want to get into larger philosophical questions where it could lead, what it could mean, whether Pakistan is a victim, I don't think that is relevant to what we have been told to do. And I think that is what is relevant to India-Pakistan relations and that's what needs to be addressed. We have made it quite clear that we too would like a dialogue. PM said this that we must make an attempt at peace again. He said this in Parliament. But the primary issue and this is the way we are trying to address it. And we have agreed today with Pakistan that the two Foreign Secretaries will do it, will discuss that.

Question: How did you find Mr. Zardari after ...

Foreign Secretary: They are all leaders, they are quite relaxed. I did not see any difference between 'before' and 'after'. But that is not what I was looking for. I was more interested in getting my orders from the leader.

Question (Mr. Vijay): ..(inaudible)..

Foreign Secretary: That is why I am telling you; I have not used the word 'dialogue'. (free translation from the Hindi original)

Question: ... that from here and there.....(free translation) ...

Foreign Secretary: ... Talks have resumed. They have met. But dialogue process has not commenced. And what are we talking about? Just on one issue. Terrorism! We have never said that we will not talk. But the issue of concern for us is terrorism. (free translation of Original Hindi)

Question: Did you take any assurance?

Foreign Secretary: No, no assurance ... we said you first tell us what have you done and then we shall see.(Free translation from Hindi)

Question: ...(inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: We have received many assurances. On 6 January 2004, on 24 September 08 in New York --- (Free translation from Hindi)

Question: You have given an assurance now? (Free translation)

Foreign Secretary: if they give just an empty assurance, we shall see what we have to do. What have we said? (free translation of Hindi) We will take stock of those discussions.

Question: Did Prime Minister specifically talk about Hafiz Sayeed's release?

Foreign Secretary: As I said, we were not informed. You ask him tomorrow, he will tell you. I do not want to say yes or no. I would assume that all this came up. But I do not want to put it on record categorically.

174. Joint Statement issued by the Leaders of the BRIC Countries after their Summit meeting.

Yekaterinburg, June 16, 2009.

We, the leaders of the Federative Republic of Brazil, the Russian Federation, the Republic of India and the People's Republic of China, have discussed the current situation in global economy and other pressing issues of global development, and also prospects for further strengthening collaboration within the BRIC, at our meeting in Yekaterinburg on 16 June, 2009.

We have arrived at the following conclusions:

1. We stress the central role played by the G20 Summits in dealing with the financial crisis. They have fostered cooperation, policy coordination and political dialogue regarding international economic and financial matters.
2. We call upon all states and relevant international bodies to act vigorously to implement the decisions adopted at the G20 Summit in London on 2 April, 2009. We shall cooperate closely among ourselves and with other partners to ensure further progress of collective action at the next G20 Summit to be held in Pittsburgh in September 2009. We look forward to a successful outcome of the United Nations Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and its Impact on Development to be held in New York on 24-26 June 2009.
3. We are committed to advance the reform of international financial institutions, so as to reflect changes in the world economy. The emerging and developing economies must have greater voice and representation in international financial institutions, and their heads and senior leadership should be appointed through an open, transparent, and merit-based selection process. We also believe that there is a strong need for a stable, predictable and more diversified international monetary system.
4. We are convinced that a reformed financial and economic architecture should be based, inter alia, on the following principles:
  - democratic and transparent decision-making and implementation process at the international financial organizations;
  - solid legal basis;
  - compatibility of activities of effective national regulatory institutions and international standard-setting bodies;
  - strengthening of risk management and supervisory practices.

5. We recognize the important role played by international trade and foreign direct investments in the world economic recovery. We call upon all parties to work together to improve the international trade and investment environment. We urge the international community to keep the multilateral trading system stable, curb trade protectionism, and push for comprehensive and balanced results of the WTO's Doha Development Agenda.

6. The poorest countries have been hit hardest by the financial crisis. The international community needs to step up efforts to provide liquidity for these countries. The international community should also strive to minimize the impact of the crisis on development and ensure the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals. Developed countries should fulfill their commitment of 0.7% of Gross National Income for the Official Development Assistance and make further efforts in increasing assistance, debt relief, market access and technology transfer for developing countries.

7. The implementation of the concept of sustainable development, comprising, inter alia, the Rio Declaration, Agenda for the 21st Century and multilateral environmental agreements, should be a major vector in the change of paradigm of economic development.

8. We stand for strengthening coordination and cooperation among states in the energy field, including amongst producers and consumers of energy and transit states, in an effort to decreasing uncertainty and ensuring stability and sustainability. We support diversification of energy resources and supply, including renewable energy, security of energy transit routes and creation of new energy investments and infrastructure.

9. We support international cooperation in the field of energy efficiency. We stand ready for a constructive dialogue on how to deal with climate change based on the principle of common but differentiated responsibility, given the need to combine measures to protect the climate with steps to fulfill our socio-economic development tasks.

10. We reaffirm to enhance cooperation among our countries in socially vital areas and to strengthen the efforts for the provision of international humanitarian assistance and for the reduction of natural disaster risks. We take note of the statement on global food security issued today as a major contribution of the BRIC countries to the multilateral efforts to set up the sustainable conditions for this goal.

11. We reaffirm to advance cooperation among our countries in science and education with the aim, inter alia, to engage in fundamental research and development of advanced technologies.

12. We underline our support for a more democratic and just multi-polar world order based on the rule of international law, equality, mutual respect, cooperation, coordinated action and collective decision-making of all states. We reiterate our support for political and diplomatic efforts to peacefully resolve disputes in international relations.

13. We strongly condemn terrorism in all its forms and manifestations and reiterate that there can be no justification for any act of terrorism anywhere or for whatever reasons. We note that the draft Comprehensive Convention against International Terrorism is currently under the consideration of the UN General Assembly and call for its urgent adoption.

14. We express our strong commitment to multilateral diplomacy with the United Nations playing the central role in dealing with global challenges and threats. In this respect, we reaffirm the need for a comprehensive reform of the UN with a view to making it more efficient so that it can deal with today's global challenges more effectively. We reiterate the importance we attach to the status of India and Brazil in international affairs, and understand and support their aspirations to play a greater role in the United Nations.

15. We have agreed upon steps to promote dialogue and cooperation among our countries in an incremental, proactive, pragmatic, open and transparent way. The dialogue and cooperation of the BRIC countries is conducive not only to serving common interests of emerging market economies and developing countries, but also to building a harmonious world of lasting peace and common prosperity.

16. Russia, India and China welcome the kind invitation of Brazil to host the next BRIC summit in 2010.

Yekaterinburg, June 16, 2009.

The fluctuations of global food prices coupled with the global financial crisis is threatening global food security. As a result, the number of people suffering from hunger and malnutrition grows and the progress towards the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals may be reversed. This challenge should be addressed without delay in a comprehensive manner through resolute action by all Governments and the relevant international agencies.

The developed and developing countries should address the food security issue according to the principle of common but differentiated responsibility. The developed countries should provide financial and technology support for developing countries in the field of food production capacity. The BRIC countries welcome various initiatives in this field by the UN and its special agencies. The BRIC countries renew their commitment to contribute to the efforts to overcome the global food crisis.

Countering effectively the global food crisis is impossible without a clear and full understanding of its causes. Attempts to explain food price hikes by an increase in consumption in developing countries obscure the true causes which have a complex and multifaceted nature. Global Climate Change and natural disasters have direct implications on food security through changes in agro-ecological conditions. Current global economic and financial crisis also has negative impact on food security through shrinking financial resources available to agriculture sector. Restricted market access and trade-distorting subsidies in developed countries have also hampered the development of food production capacity in developing countries over the last thirty years. Further, global market conditions have not created adequate incentives for the expansion of agricultural production in developing and least developed countries that have become main importers of food products.

It is also important to assess the challenges and opportunities posed by the biofuels production and use in view not only of the world's food security, but also of the energy security and sustainable development needs. An international cooperation mechanism needs to be established to review and reevaluate the long-term implications of the development of biomass energy, and develop relevant policy guidance accordingly. The BRIC countries welcome, therefore, the exchange of experiences on biofuels technologies, norms and regulations, in order to ensure that production and use of biofuels is sustainable, in accordance with the three pillars of sustainable development - social, economic and environmental - and that it takes into account the need to achieve and maintain global food security. Sustainable biofuels can constitute a driving force for social inclusion and income distribution mainly in the impoverished rural areas of developing and least developed countries, where most of the world's famine problems are located.

Tackling effectively the food crisis requires a fully coordinated international response and should include both short-term and long-term measures. The international community needs to work out and consistently implement a comprehensive strategy to resolve this global problem. In this respect, the BRIC countries welcome the outcomes of relevant international fora, including the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) High-Level Conference on World Food Security in Rome.

The BRIC countries also welcome the results of the World Grain Forum which was held in Saint Petersburg and call on all interested states and international organizations to take necessary steps to implement the measures agreed upon at the Forum.

Ensuring food security requires a well-functioning world market and trade system for food and agriculture based on the principles of fairness and non-discrimination. In this regard, it is of paramount importance to accelerate the Doha round of talks at the World Trade Organization (WTO) in order to find compromise solutions for radical reductions of multibillion subsidies in the agricultural sector, which distort terms of trade and prevent developing countries from increasing their agricultural production. We are committed to opposing protectionism, establishing a just and reasonable international trade regime for agricultural products, and giving farmers from developing countries incentives to engage in agricultural production.

The BRIC countries support the adoption of a wide range of mid- to long-term measures in order to provide for a solution to the issue of food security. Such measures may include:

- a) rendering additional resources and assistance to the agricultural sector through the channels of respective national budgets and international development institutions, mainly to household agriculture, which is the main source for food production;

- b) joint technological innovations and international cooperation to introduce advanced technologies in the agricultural sector of developing countries to significantly increase agricultural productivity. Intellectual property rights in the agricultural domain should strike a balance between the common good of humankind and incentives to innovation;
- c) upgrading agricultural infrastructure, including irrigation, transportation, supply, storage and distribution systems and promoting technical assistance, access to credit and crop insurance policies. In this context public-private partnerships could play a significant role;
- d) improving the exchange of knowledge and commercialisation of sustainable biofuels;
- e) ensuring wider access to food at the national and international level through appropriate policies and well functioning distribution systems especially for the poor and most vulnerable people in developing countries;
- f) sharing of best practices of operating successful public distribution programmes; and
- g) equipping developing countries with financial and technological means to fully implement adaptation measures to minimize the adverse impacts of climate change on food security.

Agreed by the national authorities in advance of the BRIC Summit and issued in Yekaterinburg, Russia, on June 16, 2009.

Yekaterinburg, June 16, 2009.

I am delighted to be here today at the Summit meeting of the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation. I bring to you the greetings of the government and people of India.

I have had the honour of visiting the great country of Russia on several occasions in the past. On each occasion I have been overwhelmed by the warmth and hospitality that has been extended to me. This is however a special occasion. It is my first visit overseas after our Government was re-elected to office following the recent general elections in India.

The Shanghai Cooperation Organisation represents a vast land mass rich in cultural diversity, creativity and resources. India has the privilege of having excellent bilateral relations with each of the Members of the Organisation. Our relations with them go back in time. They rest on solid civilisational, cultural and economic linkages that have flourished over centuries.

As an Observer State*, we have been following the evolution of the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation with keen interest. We wish to see peace, prosperity and stability in the region that the Organisation represents. We have many complementarities and have a lot to gain and learn from each other. It is in this spirit that we approach our engagement with the Organisation and its different organs and bodies.

The growth of the Indian economy at an average rate of 8 percent over the last five years has enabled us to generate higher investible resources to cater to the needs of our rural economy, the social sector and infrastructure. It has also opened up opportunities to intensify our interaction with the outside world in the areas of trade and investment, science and technology, and in the revival of the global economy.

We seek an external environment that is conducive to meeting the aspirations of our people. Against this background, the Russian Presidency's initiative to focus on the themes of regional security and sustainable development is most appropriate.

The threats we face to our security are global in nature, and require a global response. The prevalence of poverty and under-development in large parts of the world continues to threaten global stability. We believe that with the resources available with us, the SCO and India can mutually reinforce each other's efforts towards the economic emancipation of our region. We would be happy to share with our friends in the SCO the experiences we have gained over the years in various sectors of nation-building.

There is a lot to be gained through strengthening connectivity between the SCO and India. We would like to cooperate in finding innovative means to strengthen people-to-people contacts, exchanges of businesspersons and scholars, and trade, investment and technology flows. We would welcome closer cooperation in the fields of energy and food security, and infrastructure development.

The spectre of terrorism, extremist ideologies and illicit drug trafficking haunts our region. Terrorist crimes committed today are transnational in nature. No country is immune from them. It is imperative that we genuinely cooperate with one another and on a global scale to resolutely defeat international terrorism.

The issue of stability in Afghanistan is one that is engaging all of us keenly. I wish to congratulate the Russian Presidency of the SCO for organizing a successful conference on Afghanistan in March this year. India is committed to contributing to international efforts for the economic reconstruction of Afghanistan, and promoting stability in that country.

The economic gains that we have made in the past are today threatened by the global financial and economic crisis. We should convert this crisis into an opportunity for much greater economic cooperation between the Members of the SCO and India. Between us we have a vast market, a large industrial base, a talented human resource base and above all, the political will. We should also work together to reform the institutions of global governance, including financial institutions, to bring them in tune with present and emerging economic realities.

We can no longer delay giving concrete shape to the concept of sustainable development. The developing world needs access to financial resources and environment friendly technologies, especially in energy, transportation, manufacturing and agriculture. We need technology innovations for reduction of energy use by industry and other sectors. We need massive action for afforestation, drought proofing and flood protection. We need action to protect the glaciers that feed our river systems.

In conclusion, let me say that as a close neighbour, we wish the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation all success in its multi-faceted activities.

I also wish to convey our deep appreciation to His Excellency President Medvedev for conducting this meeting in an exemplary manner and for the excellent arrangements made by the Government of the Russian Federation for the Summit.

177. Remarks of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to the Media on board his flight to Delhi after his visit to Yekaterinburg to attend the BRIC and SCO Summits.

June 17, 2009.

I have had an intense and productive visit to Russia to participate in the Summit of the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation and in the first ever standalone summit meeting of the leaders of Brazil, Russia, India and China yesterday. This has been my first visit abroad in the new term of the Government. The visit has reinforced my sense of the significance of India's engagement with the world, particularly at this time of economic crisis and political change.

In the short time that I was in Yekaterinburg, I had also had bilateral meetings with President Hu Jintao of China, President Nazarbayev of Kazakhstan, President Zardari of Pakistan and President Medvedev of Russia.

As you know, India is an observer in the SCO and has primarily attended Summits at the Ministerial level. I chose to attend this Summit because of President Medvedev's personal invitation and as the format this time provided for full participation by Observers in the restricted and plenary sessions with the other leaders. Central Asia, where the SCO is active, is part of India's extended neighbourhood. We look forward to increased functional cooperation with the SCO.

At the BRIC Summit, we discussed the need to intensify cooperation among ourselves and discussed the international economic downturn, and how we can prepare for the forthcoming G-8 and G-20 Summits. We live in times of rapid economic change when the BRIC economies are a factor of stability and growth. India has borne the global economic crisis well, though we have not been unaffected. There was general agreement on the need to continue our coordination in BRIC on economic matters, to seek implementation of G-20 decisions of interest to developing countries, and reform of present systems of global governance and the international financial system. We have agreed that our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors will meet, and with the help of experts, examine the further steps we should take in this regard.

In my meeting with President Hu Jintao of China, we reviewed the progress in our bilateral relations and recommitted ourselves to carrying forward the Strategic and Cooperative Partnership that we established in 2005.

President Nazarbayev of Kazakhstan was our honoured guest at our Republic Day earlier this year. We both expressed satisfaction at the rapid expansion of proposals for bilateral cooperation in diverse fields including energy, petrochemicals and pharmaceuticals. Our Foreign Ministers will lay out a road map with timelines for implementing these proposals.

When I met President Zardari of Pakistan, we discussed India-Pakistan relations, which remain under considerable stress. The primary cause of this, as everyone knows, is the terrorist attacks against India from Pakistani territory. I conveyed to President Zardari the full extent of our expectation that the Government of Pakistan take strong and effective action to prevent the use of Pakistan's territory for terrorist attacks against India, act against the perpetrators of past attacks and dismantle the infrastructure of terrorism in Pakistan. The President of Pakistan told me of Pakistan's efforts to deal with this menace and the difficulties that they face.

We agreed that our Foreign Secretaries will discuss what Pakistan is doing and can do to prevent terrorism from Pakistan against India and to bring those responsible for these attacks to justice including the horrendous crime of the attacks in Mumbai. They will report to us and we will take stock of the situation when we are at Sharm el Sheikh for the Nonaligned Summit in mid-July.

I have spoken before of my vision of a cooperative subcontinent, and of the vital interest that India and the people of the subcontinent have in peace. For this we must try again to make peace with Pakistan. It also requires effective and strong action against the enemies of peace. If the leaders of Pakistan have the courage, determination and statesmanship to take the high road to peace, India will meet them more than half-way. These were the ideas and sentiments that I shared with the President of Pakistan.

With President Medvedev, I exchanged views on the unique and close strategic partnership that we enjoy with Russia. We are both looking forward to its rapid development in the future.

I return to India satisfied with the results of my visit. International developments and the economic crisis will pose fresh challenges to Indian diplomacy. I am, however, confident that we will be able to convert challenge into opportunity for India.

Q. 1 Talks with President Zardari

Let us wait for the outcome of the meeting of the Foreign Secretaries. As I said the purpose of this meeting is to learn from Pakistan what it has done to control terrorist activities directed against India and what they claim to do and in the process President Zardari mentioned to me the problems that they face. I explained to him that whereas Pakistan has now taken effective action against Taliban and Al Qaeda, we have a feeling that those elements who are actively engaged in perpetrating terrorists acts in our country, they are not being brought to justice. So my expectation is that this meeting of Foreign Secretaries will tell us whether Pakistan has taken effective action , if it plans to take effective action against these perpetrators of terrorism.

Q.2. Any Discussion on Kashmir ?

No discussion on Kashmir took place. He did not raise it nor did I raise it. He did mention to me the difficulties that Pakistan is facing in containing terrorism and asked us to bear with him, give him some more time. But there was no mention of Kashmir at anytime in our discussions

Q.3. - (Not audible )

I have often said we can choose our friends but we have to live with our neighbours. It is necessary not to close our channels of communication with neighbours. I think that's what we should do.

Q.4. Any tangible outcome of the talks with Pakistan? Did you raise the issue of release of Hafeez Sayeed?

I did raise with him what tangible things we would like to see.

Q...? (not audible)

I think that's better not said.

Q.5. Any timelines ?

We have said that the meeting of Foreign Secretaries should take place before the NAM Summit, that is in July.

Q.6.What will be the policy agenda for next 5 years? Will BRIC be useful or be a talk shop?

I hope it goes beyond shop talk. We are responsible for 40 % of the population. If all the nations join together, I think their voices will be heard in the global councils.

As for India 's relations (policy agenda) we will pursue the path that has been outlined by the Hon'ble President in the address to parliament a few days ago.

Q.7. Comments on the situation in BJP.

Well I am not in favour of gloating over the difficulties of other political parties. I wish them well.

Q.8. Spat with Mr. Advani ?

Well I was compelled to reply and I did say a few things which Advaniji said had hurt him. Then he rang me up on 16th May and he expressed regret. In exchange , I apologized to him if I had said anything to hurt his feelings. I look forward to a close relationship with the leader of the opposition.

Q.9. What are your priorities ? Pakistan ?

You must have read the President's address. I think those are our priorities. We wish Pakistan well in dealing with the Talebans, the Al Qaedas. But I would also like Pakistan to show the same determination in dealing with terrorists who operate from Pakistan's soil and conduct acts of terror against our country.

Q.10. Alternate Global Currency

Those were the ideas that were aired but no concrete conclusion emerged. It was agreed that these are highly complex issues , Replacing dollar by other currency -National or SDRs. And it was felt that this matter required proper examination by our Foreign Ministers and Governors of Central Banks.

Q.10. What difficulties were expressed by Zardari ?

President Zardari's point was that he is fighting a grim battle and there are difficulties in fighting on all fronts and therefore he said, while I am absolutely sincere in controlling terrorism from what ever source it emanates and at which ever country it is directed you must bear with me.

Q.11. Presidents address and the budget ?

I would not like to disclose what's going to be in the budget. I think that would be improper.

Q.12. Any reduction of troops along the border by India and Pakistan?

Troop deployment is a matter of functional necessity and I won't like to speculate on that in public on what we should do or what they will be doing.

Q.13.Situation in Kashmir.

As regards Jammu & Kashmir , the Home Minister was there. The Home Minister made some important statements of the deployment of forces. And it is very unfortunate that these incidents have taken place. If there were any violation of human rights we will take effective action and I have also promised the Jammu and Kashmir Chief Minister that once the new Government settles down, we will look at the problems of developing Jammu and Kashmir, update our development and reconstructive plans. I have always said that we would be happy to engage in a dialogue with any groups and I mean any groups in talking to us that option is open and we would welcome even those groups who are not in the political mainstream . If they have any views ,we are quite willing to discuss with them. In the past also I have invited the Hurriyat .They said they would send us proposals, they never sent us any proposals. They said there are too many people detained. I asked them to give me a list of people who they felt had been detained without purpose, they never gave any list. I am not complaining. We are willing to engage in dialogue with anyone who is willing to shun the use of gun.

Q -14 BRIC has no Secretariat who will coordinate ?

This is the first meeting at Summit level of BRIC Countries. It is an evolving situation. As we grapple with the challenges that lie ahead, what modalities there would be in place to enable us to play an effective role. As I said, it is not a one time operation and we will be meeting again next year in Brazil to take stock.

Q.15.Membership of SCO?

I believe it is for others. If they feel India will be useful as a member we would welcome it. But I am not lobbying for it. Central Asia is our extended neighbour .We are expanding our contacts with the countries of Central Asia. I had a very good meeting with the President of Kazakhstan when he was in Delhi for 26 th January celebrations. We had very extensive agenda of cooperation in diverse fields. We will do more of this with other countries of Central Asia. I had on the sidelines a very good discussion with the President of Tajikistan who is very keen I visit Tajikistan as early as I can.

Q.16.Election results - Coalition Politics on way out - Are the days of single party governments coming back.

I am not an astrologer.

Q... (not audible)?

If wishes were horses beggars would ride.

Q.17.Kerala Governor Issue.

The Governor is a constitutional head of state and it would not be proper to comment.

Q.18. Naxal menace in India.

I had said many times that Naxalism is a great danger to our polity. The Home Minister has good ideas. We will take effective action and we have plans. Would not be able to go in public what we propose to deal with the menace. But its seriousness is fully appreciated and recognized by our Government.

Q.19. West Bengal- politics of aid?

Mamta Banerjee is an honoured member of my cabinet and we will work together as colleagues. But the relationship between the Govt. Of West Bengal or for that matter State and the Central Government are governed by constitutional norms. We will fully abide by constitutional norms which should guide the conduct of Center-State relations.

178. Statement of Head of the Indian Delegation and Minister of Petroleum and Natural Gas Murli Deora at the meeting of the Heads of the Government of the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation.

Beijing, October 14, 2009.

Let me begin by extending felicitations from the people and Government of India on the momentous occasion of 60 years of the establishment of the People's Republic of China. I am pleased to participate in this Meeting, taking the Shanghai Cooperation process forward. We deeply appreciate the arrangements and hospitality extended by our hosts.

We are now into the fifth year of our association with the Shanghai Cooperation Organization as an Observer* state and these years have been eventful and satisfying. We are happy that engagement of Observer states is progressively on the increase and hope that this continues to the mutual advantage of both Member and Observer states.

The recent Summit in Pittsburgh underlined the fact that a collective and inclusive approach is the best and probably only way of addressing these challenges.

Excellencies, most of us represent developing countries, and in varying degrees, have been adversely affected by the global financial and economic crisis. The crisis began in the heart of capitalist world but its effects have been felt across the globe. However, thanks to the policies and programmes adopted by the Government with the support of the people, the effect was marginal in India. The need to revive the global economy is a complex challenge, requiring efforts from all of us.

In such a scenario, the Shanghai Cooperation Organization can play an important role. On the economic front, we can strengthen the linkages between us in the areas of trade, business exchanges and investment, as well as adopt mutually reinforcing monetary and fiscal policies. Sectors like energy, infrastructure, agriculture, banking, transportation, science and technology and education offer opportunities for substantive cooperation. India will be happy to participate in these activities.

In addition to this, terrorism and the ideologies of exclusion and intolerance threaten to undo whatever we have achieved. All of us who have gathered here take pride in our civilisational values and cultural diversity. The terrorist attack in Mumbai was a grim reminder of the transnational nature of terrorism. It evoked widespread condemnation from the world community. The time has come to adopt a policy of zero tolerance to terrorism. The need of the hour is to have greater cooperation, exchange of information and coordination. The SCO has made progress in the area of counter-terrorism and anti-drug trafficking measures. We have sought a mutually beneficial association with the Regional Counter Terrorism Structure based in Tashkent and are ready to complete the required formalities. We should also move towards early adoption of a Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism.

As a Minister dealing with energy matters in the Government of India, I would also like to mention energy security which figures very high on each of our national agendas. We need to ensure stability and predictability of world energy markets. As SCO is a unique forum which has a mix of both energy producing and energy consuming countries, SCO countries can make an effective contribution towards a cooperative framework for ensuring energy security. In this context, we hope to see the SCO Energy Club take concrete shape and become a forum of discussion among SCO countries in this critical area.

As a close neighbour, we wish the Shanghai Cooperation Organization all success in its diverse activities. There is a lot to be gained through strengthening connectivity between the SCO and India..

In conclusion, I wish to convey our deep appreciation to His Excellency Premier Wen Jiabao for the excellent arrangements made by the Government of the People's Republic of China for the Meeting.

* Media report from Bengaluru where the Foreign Ministers of Russia, China and India met on October 27 for their stand-alone RIC conference, quoted the External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna to tell his two counterparts that New Delhi was keen on participating in several of the SCO's sectoral deliberations, especially those on economic activities, counter-terrorism and Afghanistan. It may be recalled that at the Yekaterinburg Summit in June Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh had said: "As an Observer State, we have been following the evolution of the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation with keen interest. We wish to see peace, prosperity and stability in the region that the Organisation represents. We have many complementarities and have a lot to gain and learn from each other. It is in this spirit that we approach our engagement with the Organisation and its different organs and bodies." Russia has been quite keen on India joining the SCO and it was because of this that the Prime Minister had responded in attending the Yekaterinburg Summit then. Russian has promised to expedite the finalization of procedure for the admission of new members to facilitate India's entry.

Bengaluru (India), October 27, 2009.

1. The Ninth Meeting of the Foreign Ministers of Republic of India, the Russian Federation and the People's Republic of China was held on 27 October 2009 in Bengaluru.
2. The Ministers noted the ongoing trilateral cooperation between India, Russia and China and explored new avenues for deepening and strengthening this interaction on various issues for the benefit of the people of the three countries and peace and stability in the region.
3. Despite the impact of the international financial crisis, the pace of development of the three countries has improved contributing to faster growth among them. Enhanced engagement among them strengthens their influence on the process of democratisation of international relations and development of multipolar world order reflecting the diversity of world cultures and civilizations.
4. While reviewing the implementation of the Trilateral initiatives, the Ministers noted with satisfaction the holding of the trilateral meeting of experts of India, Russia & China in the area of Disaster Mitigation and Relief held in Samara, Russia on 28 July 2008. The prospective areas of cooperation in this important area were identified as - interaction between research institutes; exchange of experts/specialists; exchange of experience in practical response to major disasters; exchange of information between the National Disaster Management Authorities on major emergencies; training of instructors/specialists; and holding joint conferences and seminars. The next meeting of this group of experts is due to be held in China in 2009.
5. The Ministers welcomed the holding of the next meeting of the India-Russia-China trilateral expert group on agricultural cooperation, scheduled to be held in November/December 2009 in New Delhi.
6. The Ministers noted that according to the understanding arrived at in the first meeting of trilateral group of experts on Health and Medicine held in India in September 2008, the next meeting of the trilateral group of experts on Health and Medicine would be held in 2010 in Russia.
7. The Ministers reviewed the trilateral interaction among the business communities of the three countries and discussed the 2nd Trilateral Business Conference held on 17-19 September 2009 in Changchun, China. They noted that interaction among business communities was increasing and areas like pharmaceuticals, infrastructure, IT and energy have been the focus areas. The Ministers discussed ways in which the meetings of this forum could be more meaningful to the business communities in the time ahead so that new opportunities may be grasped to expand trade and investment. They looked forward to the next meeting in Russia.

8. The Ministers discussed ways of enhancing interaction in the trilateral format. India, Russia and China, which together stretch over 20% of the total global landmass and represent 39% of the global population, are important members of the international community playing a significant role in world affairs. The Ministers agreed that trilateral dialogue in areas such as global economic governance architecture, climate change, trade policy and development cooperation would contribute greatly to global peace and prosperity and that concerted trilateral action against international terrorism, trans-national crime and drug-trafficking would promote stability and all-round development in today's inter-dependent world.

9. The international situation was reviewed by the Ministers and the major global developments were discussed. The Ministers welcomed the decision made at the Pittsburgh Summit to designate G20 as the premier forum for international economic cooperation. They stressed that the future global economic governance should feature in balanced representation, equality and result-orientedness, and ensure the voice and representation of emerging market and developing countries. The three countries advocated that future G20 summits should be held in developed countries and emerging market and developing countries by rotation based on the principle of transparency and equity. The Ministers emphasized that one of the ultimate goals of governance structure reform for international financial institutions is equitable distribution of voting power between developed countries and developing ones. The Ministers called for early implementation of the quantified targets on the governance structure reform of the international financial institutions endorsed by the G20 Pittsburgh Summit, speedy shift in IMF quota share of at least 5% to emerging market and developing countries and a significant increase of at least 3% of voting power in the World Bank for developing and transition countries, while avoiding erosion in voting shares of developing countries.

10. The three countries reiterated that they take the issue of climate change very seriously and that they are ready to strengthen international cooperation and make active effort to jointly tackle climate change. The three countries stressed that the UN Climate Change Conference in Copenhagen presents an important opportunity for strengthening international cooperation in addressing climate change in accordance with the principles and provisions of the UNFCCC and the Bali Action Plan, taking into account the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities. The Ministers reiterated the willingness of the three countries to contribute to the success of the Conference.

11. The Ministers reiterated that there was a need for a comprehensive reform of the United Nations with a view to make it more efficient so that it can deal with the current global challenges more effectively. The Ministers of India, Russia and China reiterated that their countries attach importance to the status of India in international affairs, and understand and support India's aspirations to play a greater role in the United Nations.

12. The Ministers strongly condemned terrorism in all its forms and manifestations and reiterated that there can be no justification for any act of terrorism anywhere. They underlined that the fight against terrorism needs strong international cooperation, particularly within the framework of the United Nations. The Ministers stressed that all concerned must implement relevant resolutions of the UN General Assembly and the UN Security Council, particularly UNSC Resolution 1267, 1373 and 1540 and international conventions and protocols against terrorism as well as contribute to implementation of the UN Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy. In the context of strengthening international cooperation against terrorism, the Ministers urged all UN member states to urgently conclude and adopt the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism.

13. The Ministers agreed that there exists a natural complementarity between India, China and Russia in the energy sector. Russia is a dominant supplier of oil and gas; India and China are energy deficit, but significant suppliers of manufactured products and services. Trilateral relations can be further reinforced by establishing mutually advantageous relations in the energy sector. India, China and Russia welcome the growing trend of discussing energy security issues in multilateral fora. Energy matters are best addressed in a framework that reconciles the long-term interests of both energy-consuming and energy-producing nations. India, Russia and China look to intensifying international cooperation in the energy sector on a new basis to promote openness, transparency and competition in the energy market and reflect in a balanced manner the interest of all parties concerned.

14. The Ministers noted that the Afghan presidential and provincial council elections were held on August 20, 2009, and a second round of the presidential elections is due to be held on November 7, 2009. The Ministers expressed the hope that the election process will be conducted peacefully and with the active participation of the Afghan people. The Ministers emphasised the necessity of the international community maintaining its commitment to render assistance to the government and people of Afghanistan in ensuring security and development, and restoring peace and stability and building a democratic, pluralistic and prosperous Afghanistan. The Ministers agreed that terrorism must be combated firmly by the international community and expressed concern at the continuing deterioration of the security situation there due to continued terrorist attacks. The Ministers condemned the terrorist attack on the Indian Embassy in Kabul on October 8, 2009. The Ministers highlighted the need to bring the perpetrators of all terrorist attacks to justice and the need for strict observance of the sanctions regime against persons and entities listed by the UNSC Committee 1267.

15. The Ministers stressed the need for sustained international efforts to effectively combat production and trafficking of narcotics in the region. In this regard, they called for close cooperation between the International Security Assistance Force and the coalition forces and the Government of Afghanistan in fighting this threat to regional stability and security.

16. The Ministers welcomed the recent talks between Iran and representatives of the P5+1 and the EU in Geneva and emphasised the need to continue efforts to achieve a political and diplomatic settlement of the Iran nuclear issue. They shared the view that Iran is entitled to the right to use nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and at the same time should fulfill its due international obligations. The Ministers emphasized that all possible efforts should be made to address the Iran nuclear issue by peaceful means through dialogue and negotiation and that the IAEA should play an important role in resolving outstanding issues.

17. The Ministers noted that the Shanghai Cooperation Organization (SCO) is steadily becoming an important factor of emerging architecture of security, economy, culture, people-to-people contacts and cooperation in Asia. They spoke in favour of further enhancement of interaction of the SCO Member-States with Observer-States and dialogue partners and other states and international organizations concerned for the benefit of strengthening security and stability in the region.

18. The Foreign Ministers of China and Russia expressed satisfaction that the Indian delegation to the SCO Summit was led by the Prime Minister for the first time and at Indian participation at appropriate levels in other SCO meetings held in 2009. The External Affairs Minister of India reiterated India's interest in participating in SCO activities particularly economic activities (SCO Business Forum, SCO Energy Club and Inter Banking Consortium), counter-terrorism (Regional Counter Terrorism Structure) and SCO Contact Group on Afghanistan. The Foreign Ministers of China and Russia welcomed India's constructive engagement in SCO activities.

19. The Foreign Ministers of India and China expressed support to Russia's efforts to maintain peace and stability in the Caucasus region.

20. The Foreign Ministers of India and China welcomed the decision that Russia would officially join the mechanism of Asia-Europe Meetings (ASEM) at the 8th ASEM Summit in Brussels.

21. The Ministers reiterated their support for the Six Party talks to achieve the objective of full denuclearization of the Korean peninsula and called upon all parties concerned to work towards bringing about peace and stability in the region.

22. The Ministers expressed satisfaction with the outcome of the meeting and decided to hold the next trilateral meeting in China.

COMMONWEALTH

180. Communiqué issued on the Commonwealth Finance Ministers Meeting 2009.

Limassol (Cyprus), October 2, 2009.

Commonwealth Finance Ministers met at Limassol, Cyprus on 30 September to 2 October, 2009 under the Chairmanship of Charilaos Stavrakis, Finance Minister of Cyprus.

Global Economy

2. Ministers considered the unprecedented global economic and financial crisis over the past year and its impact on the economies of the Commonwealth. They noted that growth in the overwhelming majority of countries in the Commonwealth had been below its potential level and in many countries living standards had fallen. They welcomed policy measures undertaken to maintain global demand and stabilise capital markets, especially by member countries of the G20, and stressed the need for continued concerted international action to end the global recession. Ministers emphasised the importance of the interests of all countries being recognised within global multilateral processes. They urged consideration of the role the Commonwealth could play to achieve this.

3. In some Commonwealth countries growth was now returning to trend levels. However, Ministers found that the impact of the crisis had been felt very strongly and persistently in the poorest and smallest developing members as well as resource dependent and less diversified economies. These economies are especially vulnerable to lower trade levels and capital flows and restricted in their ability to use domestic policy to alleviate the impact of exogenous economic shocks. Ministers stressed the need for greater international support for these countries to build greater resilience in the face of these shocks.

4. Ministers discussed the policy choices which countries face in working towards high and sustainable growth in the context of continuing global challenges. They recognised the opportunities as well as the risks posed to Commonwealth countries by the effects of climate change and resource shortages. They noted that short term policy responses to individual challenges need to be consistent with each other and sustainable over time. They urged that these issues should be addressed coherently, comprehensively and consistently at the national, regional and international levels. They noted that the Commonwealth could provide a forum for discussing these global challenges and supporting members by providing analysis of emerging trends in the global economy.

5. Commonwealth countries called for:

- Continued global macroeconomic coordination including monetary and fiscal policy stimulus to avoid a return to global recession and to ensure that global growth is well established in all countries and regions before the stimulus is withdrawn;
- Greater future coordination in global economic policy making to support sustainable and balanced growth within and between countries;
- Continued global commitment to an open trading system and the rejection of protectionism. They reiterated their call for a rapid, fair and equitable conclusion to the Doha Round of trade negotiations;
- Greater international support for social protection and investment in infrastructure to support growth in developing countries. In this context they called for continuing regional integration;
- A stronger focus on boosting levels of trade finance.

6. To address the specific challenges facing small states they:

- Reaffirmed that small states face a number of new and enduring challenges as set out in the 2006 Review of 2000 Commonwealth Secretariat/ World Bank Joint Task Force Report on small states;
- Welcomed the Secretariat's continuing work to assist small states to cope with their inherent vulnerability, build economic resilience and integrate into the changing global economy; and
- Urged the Secretariat to collaborate with development partners to convene a biennial conference of small states representatives to promote discussion and sharing of experience amongst small states.

7. Ministers strongly reaffirmed their commitment to achieving the Millennium Development Goals and discussed the appalling human cost of the current economic crisis in many low income countries. Despite the greater resilience provided in these countries through strengthened policy frameworks, many millions of Commonwealth citizens have fallen into poverty as a result of the crisis. In many other developing countries, the crisis has worsened development indicators and increased future vulnerabilities. Ministers noted the substantial shortfall in financing facing developing countries as a result of the crisis. They urged donors to meet all their commitments to provide additional resources to developing countries. They repeated their call for early attention to be given to relieving the debt burden of poor countries excluded from the MDRI and HIPC processes and of other developing countries with unsustainable debts and urged the Secretariat to support this objective actively. They also agreed to give consideration to the needs of middle income countries with no or limited access to concessional finance.

8. Recognising that even after these measures financing would remain inadequate, Ministers emphasised the role the Commonwealth can play in promoting innovative international measures to meet the needs of developing countries in access to finance. They called for further development of measures to be considered by Commonwealth Heads of Government at their meeting in November 2009.

International Financial Centres

9. Ministers reviewed the role of International Financial Centres (IFCs) in the global financial system. They noted concerns about the operation of some of these centres. They also noted the important role hosting IFCs can play in many Commonwealth countries economic development, especially in small states. In this context they discussed recent initiatives, such as the G20 supported OECD listing. They agreed on the need for enhanced transparency of IFCs and cooperation between countries in the sharing of tax information in accordance with the internationally agreed standard on the exchange of information. Ministers stressed the need for continuing adherence to the agreed principle of consistency of treatment amongst countries. The Ministers took note of the concerns of a number of countries in ensuring a level playing field and reciprocity of benefit in pursuing these initiatives. They also noted the outcomes of the latest Global Forum Meeting, especially the commitment to integrating further developing countries into the Forum's work, including within the newly established Global Forum peer review process.

10. Ministers recognised the need to make progress in these areas based on consensus and for all parties to strive to complete Tax Information and Exchange Agreements and/or Double Taxation Agreements. Recognising the different capacities of, and constraints on, countries with IFCs to achieve these agreements, Ministers called for consideration of less resource intensive means for negotiating and concluding these agreements to allow the targeted threshold of 12 information exchange agreements to be met quickly, including encouraging options for multilateral agreements. They urged the development of partnerships across the Commonwealth to support the exchange of experience in the negotiation of agreements to increase transparency in this area. They called on the Secretariat to take this forward and consider how to support members further with advocacy, technical assistance and research.

The Governance of Global Financial Sector Regulation

11. Ministers noted the crisis highlighted the importance of effective and well designed systems of global financial sector regulation. They welcomed the reforms undertaken to strengthen the system of governance of global financial regulation through greater developing country participation. This should lead to better designed international rules more tailored to the needs of developing countries. Ministers recognised the need for continued reform to the system of international financial regulation. They stressed the need for future regulation to be comprehensive in scope and counter cyclical in effect. They also called for options to be drawn up within the relevant bodies for addressing continued developing country under-representation. They noted that greater accountability of the institutions and openness to stakeholders representative of all economic interests would strengthen these institutions. Ministers welcomed the contribution of the Commonwealth Business Council on this item.

12. To support developing countries in their efforts to engage fully with international financial regulation, Ministers supported the further development of the Commonwealth Secretariat's work on these issues. They noted developing member governments' needs for technical assistance to implement internationally agreed standards and support in analysing the impacts of the international system on their financial sectors. They urged the Secretariat to give particular consideration to developing linkages between Commonwealth regulators for the benefit of all members.

The Commonwealth and the International Financial Institutions

13. Ministers recognised the important role international institutions play in supporting effective multilateralism. They reviewed the reforms which have taken place in the Bretton Woods Institutions over the past year. They reaffirmed that the principles of legitimacy, fair representation, responsiveness, flexibility, transparency and accountability and effectiveness should guide reform. They welcomed the role played by the Bretton Woods Institutions in the response to the economic and financial crisis, especially the flexibility shown in the development of new instruments and facilities in both institutions. These instruments should provide support to all members. They stressed the importance of ensuring that the resources of both institutions as well as the Regional Development Banks are adequate to meet the needs of their members and emphasised that the steps needed to allow higher levels of concessional and non concessional lending should be implemented rapidly. They also emphasised that changes in policies needed to be consistently translated into greater flexibility for borrowing members.

14. Ministers called for further efforts to strengthen legitimacy and fair voice in both institutions. They noted the proposals to reform governance of the World Bank currently under discussion. They welcomed the prospect of significant governance reform in the IMF. To ensure legitimacy and fair representation in the Fund and the World Bank they stressed the importance of at least protecting the voting shares of both low income and developing country small states. They reiterated their call for Heads and for Senior Management positions in the Bretton Woods Institutions to be filled through an open, transparent and merit based process with no regard to nationality or gender. Ministers agreed that the Secretariat should examine ways in which the Commonwealth can be used to bring attention to the views of its members on reform issues in this area.

Debt Sustainability

15. Ministers recognised the increased challenge of maintaining debt sustainability in the face of the pressures created by the economic and financial crisis. They received the report of the Chair of the Commonwealth Ministerial Debt Sustainability Forum (CMDSF) <http://www.thecommonwealth.org/cmdsfcyprus2009> and welcomed steps taken to strengthen the effectiveness of the Forum. They noted the call by the CMDSF for more explicit consideration of vulnerability to exogenous shocks in the determination of the thresholds of the joint IMF/World Bank Debt Sustainability Framework and the call for all IDA-only countries to receive a greater proportion of grant financing in their IDA allocation. They noted that the crisis had also put debt sustainability at risk in a number of non CMDSF Commonwealth countries.

Senior Officials Meeting

16. Ministers received a report from Senior Officials. They endorsed the recommendations of Senior Officials on the future conduct of Secretariat work on Aid and Aid Effectiveness; Gender Responsive Budgeting and Public Financial Management. In addition, they affirmed their commitment to the concerted effort required to meet the specific objectives of the Accra Agenda for Action on Aid Effectiveness. They also reiterated their continued commitment to the implementation of Gender Responsive Budgeting and looked forward to receiving a further report on progress in two years time. They also affirmed their commitment to conduct a further round of self assessments of public financial management in 2011.

Next meeting

17. To further strengthen participation and the efficiency of future annual Commonwealth Finance Ministers Meetings, Ministers reflected on the timing, duration and venue of these meetings. They agreed, subject to confirmation through further consultation, to hold one-day annual meetings, in the period 2010 to 2012, at the location of, and immediately prior to, the IMF and World Bank Annual Meetings.

18. Ministers thanked the Government of Cyprus for the excellent arrangements made for the meeting.

181. Press Briefing by the Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh's visit to Port of Spain for the CHOGM Summit.

(For Briefing on Prime Minister's visit to the United States please see Document No.613)

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): Thank you, Vishnu. Good afternoon.

I will now speak of the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting at Port of Spain in Trinidad and Tobago.

The Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (CHOGM) is being held in Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago from 27th to 29th November, 2009. It will be preceded by the Pre-CHOGM Foreign Ministers Meeting from 25th to 26th November 2009.

Hon'ble Prime Minister will be leading the Indian Delegation to the CHOGM. He will attend the Summit on 27th and 28th November. External Affairs Minister will be heading the Indian Delegation to the Pre-CHOGM Foreign Ministers meeting. He will represent Prime Minister at the Summit on the last day, that is 29th November, 2009.

The CHOGM Summit takes place in Executive Sessions and in Retreats where Heads of States and Governments interact informally with their counterparts. The theme of this year's summit is "Partnering for a more Equitable and Sustainable Future". Other than discussions on this theme, the Heads of Governments will review global developments including the political and economic situation. Two major issues of discussion will be youth issues and climate change.

The host country Trinidad and Tobago has circulated a Concept Paper entitled "Partnering for a more Equitable and Sustainable Future". The Paper urges Commonwealth members to forge partnerships for a more sustainable future. India fully supports sustainable development and understands the concerns of Small Island States regarding global warming. However, we believe that the historical responsibility of the current situation has to be addressed under the principle of Common but Differentiated Responsibilities.

A number of Commonwealth-affiliated organizations such as the Commonwealth Business Forum, Commonwealth Youth Forum will also hold their meetings in Port of Spain during this period. Their reports on their activities will be presented at the CHOGM.

At the end of the CHOGM Summit, Heads of Governments will issue a Joint Communiqué laying down the position of the Commonwealth on major international issues. It is anticipated that a separate statement on climate change will also be issued. This would highlight the common concerns of the Commonwealth member states.

The Commonwealth Business Forum will meet in Port of Spain from 23rd to 26th November, 2009. A high-level Indian Business Delegation organized by CII is expected to participate in the Business Forum.

In the 60 years since its foundation, the Commonwealth has come a long way from an initial association of six former colonies of Great Britain and Canada to an organization where non-British colonial countries are today expressing interest in its membership. Today the Commonwealth has grown to a membership of 53 nations and still has the potential to grow.

The Commonwealth has emerged in past years as an active organization with strengthened capacity to deal with economic, social, environmental and governance issues. It is doing important work in the areas of human rights advocacy, gender equality and education. It has progressively gained a greater say in the multilateral world because of its innate strength in social, economic and governance issues, particularly in executing programmes. As an organization, we believe, it has the potential to play an even greater role in relation to contemporary challenges facing the world.

Within the Commonwealth India has played a leadership role. We are the fourth largest contributor to Commonwealth budgets. India provides the largest number of technical experts funded by the Commonwealth Fund for Technical Cooperation (CFTC) extending assistance to developing Commonwealth countries, after the UK. We have consistently and significantly contributed to various Commonwealth activities and have stepped up our engagement in recent times.

We have increased our contribution to the CFTC to reach £ 1 million in 2009-10. We are contributing Euro 1 million to the Commonwealth Connects Programme, the Commonwealth Action Programme for Digital Divide. India is a member of key Commonwealth bodies on IT, education, and counter-terrorism. Among other areas, India has offered 50 to 75 ITEC slots in various training courses for participants from Commonwealth countries in addition to the sizeable number of slots given to them bilaterally.

We would like to encourage the Commonwealth to tackle or pronounce itself on a larger number of contemporary challenges, for example the reform of inter-governmental bodies like the United Nations, strengthening cooperation in combating terrorism in a more cogent manner and development related matters. On the global economic situation, we stress that reform of the international governance architecture needs full support of all member states of the Commonwealth so that sustainable development is achieved.

India has a natural partnership with the Commonwealth. It is a community of English-speaking countries. It is an association which puts a premium on democracy and good governance where India has so much to share with others. It provides a platform to interact and build consensus with a very diverse group of countries including G8 countries like the UK and Canada, developing countries, as well as Small States who form bulk of its membership. There are 32 Small States in the Commonwealth. There is appreciation among these States for India as the largest and a vibrant democracy, for the high-tech advancement and economic progress India has achieved in the past decade and a half. India has a growing profile of development cooperation with these states. Many of the Commonwealth countries also have sizeable Indian populations.

Though the United Nations remains the principal forum for multilateral action, the Commonwealth is eminently placed to address many issues through its unique style of functioning which is based on consensus-building, informality and goodwill. The informal ways in which dialogue is conducted and decisions arrived at in the Commonwealth bodies provide a very good basis for addressing common concerns.

182. Statement by the Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on his departure to USA and Trinidad & Tobago.

New Delhi, November 21, 2009.

Please see Document No.614.

183. Address by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the Commonwealth Business Forum.

Port of Spain, November 26, 2009.

Mr. Chairman,

Distinguished participants,

Excellencies,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am delighted and honoured to have this opportunity to address this meeting of the Commonwealth Business Forum focusing on "Trading for a More Equitable and Sustainable Future".

The Commonwealth Business Council is doing a commendable job of bringing together the private sector and governments, in order to foster a conducive environment for business and investments in the Commonwealth and beyond. It provides valuable inputs to the CHOGM deliberations, both at the policy level and in finding practical ways to enhance trade and investment. I am also happy to note that it is working closely with Indian institutions, to find ways and means to tap the emerging business opportunities in India.

Distinguished participants, Ladies and Gentlemen,

The theme of this Session is apt, particularly in the context of global economic and financial crisis. Today, international trade is key to promoting long term sustainable, global economic growth. The world has come a long way from the mercantilist thinking of 16th-18th centuries. It is now widely accepted that international trade is not a zero-sum game and the benefits of trade accrue to all partners in the game - albeit in varying degrees. The challenge today is to find ways to ensure equitable distribution of these fruits.

Furthermore, almost all the major challenges the world faces today are trans-national in nature. Be it the financial crisis, food and energy shortages, terrorism, drug-trafficking, pandemics or climate change, the situation in one part of the world deeply affects another. We can face these challenges successfully only if we cooperate closely, and ensure sustainable and fair development for everyone, thereby reducing disparities of income and wealth. Development should also respect pluralism and diversity.

Let me briefly touch upon the global financial crisis in particular. It is now well known that developing countries were in no way responsible for it, but in many ways, they are the hardest hit. About 90 million people in the developing world are likely to be pushed below the poverty line due to the erosion of the gains made under their poverty eradication programmes over nearly a decade. Lower revenues will result in lower spend on rural infrastructure, health and education, hampering future growth. Also, the global economic downturn has caused a very substantial loss of export demand, particularly for non-oil developing countries. Their exports will remain well below the trajectory earlier projected for several years.

Distinguished guests, Ladies and gentlemen,

The past quarter century has witnessed an unprecedented level of activity on trade liberalization. In many respects, this most recent phase of global economic integration stands out when compared with any other in human history. It is for the first time that more than 180 nation states have engaged in the multilateral economic process. The WTO has provided an invaluable institutional forum for countries to find ways of expanding trade and investment. The WTO efforts have also been supplemented by bilateral and/or regional free trade agreements (FTAs). In recent years, the FTAs have increasingly taken the form of comprehensive economic partnership agreements (CEPAs) that cover not only goods, but also services and investment.

Notwithstanding the above, trade liberalization efforts seem to have been set within fundamentally narrow limits. Sufficient efforts have not been made to ensure "inclusive" outcomes. WTO's laudable objectives - raising living standards, full employment and sustainable development - remain unrealized. Negotiations under the Doha Round - called the "Doha Development Agenda" - have not come to fruition more than eight years after its launch, primarily due to lack of commitment. There is a lack of agreement on issues that would help make the multilateral trading system more "development" friendly. The G-20 leaders have, in unison, emphasised the need early conclusion of the Doha Round, a step that would not only go a long way towards re-balancing the global trading regime, but would also reinforce the need to keep markets open.

I am happy to note that the WTO Ministerial in New Delhi in September this year succeeded in reviving momentum for the Doha Round negotiations. The Delhi Ministerial meeting brought together a wide spectrum of interests and positions, with the objective of developing a broad-based consensus and providing clear directions to negotiators to re-energise the process. There was a unanimous affirmation on the need to conclude the Doha Round in 2010. On their part, India and other developing countries are making significant contribution to the Round. Other members, especially the developed countries, must show the same degree of flexibility so that the Doha Round reaches a successful conclusion. India is ready to engage with all WTO Members to complete the modalities and address any outstanding issues.

Distinguished guests, Ladies and gentlemen,

Let me now outline some of our specific concerns.

First, easy access to trade finance at reasonable rates is an important lubricant for trade. Increase in the cost of trade finance impacts the emerging and poorer economies proportionately more than the developed ones. Appropriate monetary and risk mitigating policies need to be designed to tackle these challenges.

Second, the assistance provided to developing countries, particularly LDCs, for strengthening their trade-related capacities, i.e., 'Aid-for-Trade', should help these countries build supply-side capacity and trade-related infrastructure, in order to implement and benefit from WTO agreements. The principles enshrined in the 2005 Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness should be rigorously implemented. It should be kept in mind that the process of building internationally competitive economies takes time and is highly country specific.

Lastly, protectionism is a major barrier. The history of economic development has shown that the erection of trade barriers diminishes economic growth and creates instability. Shrinking demand in export markets makes it all the more important that the market access of developing countries is not further constrained by protectionism. We also need to be cautious about new protectionist measures that impact on trade prospects, either in the name of protecting jobs or introducing environmental standards.

I would like to point out here that equitable access to natural resources is seriously hampered by unsustainable patterns of production and consumption in the developed world. Developed countries must shoulder the main responsibility for preventing and reversing environmental degradation. It is equally important to provide access to developing countries to environmentally sound technologies on preferential terms and to support capacity building for inducting these technologies. Environmental protection cannot be isolated from the general issues of development.

Distinguished guests, Ladies and gentlemen,

Let me now touch upon some aspects of the role that the Commonwealth can play in promoting more equitable and sustainable growth. The Commonwealth currently generates an annual intra-Commonwealth trade turnover of about US$ 225 billion, of which India's share alone accounts for about US$ 80 billion. Like many of its Commonwealth partners, India too has benefitted immensely from opening up of world trade. For some of the smaller Commonwealth countries, bulk (70%) of their global trade is with other Commonwealth countries.

In order to sustain growth, developing countries have to overcome a set of challenges, that are thrown up in the wake of economic development. One such challenge is capacity building. India and Indian industry can set up such capacity building centres in needy Commonwealth countries. There is need to invest in skills and it is here that industry can play a major role. For instance, Indian industry is running successful skill development programmes in the African region. Another challenge before the developing countries is 'climate change'. India's national action plan on climate change accords over-riding priority to maintaining high growth rates for raising living standards while also yielding co-benefits for climate change. Developing countries including India can benefit from technology transfer in this area from the developed Commonwealth countries.

In conclusion, let me emphasize that the Commonwealth governments and businesses should work closer together to ensure positive outcomes of international inter-governmental mechanisms on pressing issues of the day including climate change, food and energy security and pandemics. Let us resolve to make full use of the Commonwealth mechanisms in order to address these issues frontally and comprehensively, which would help sustain equitable and inclusive development.

Thank you.

185. Intervention by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on India's Commonwealth Initiatives.

Port of Spain, November 28, 2009.

Our Summit in Port of Spain coincides with the 60th anniversary of the Commonwealth.

India, as a founder member of the Commonwealth, is celebrating the 60th anniversary through a number of initiatives. We have issued commemorative coins and released first day covers and stamps to mark the occasion as an expression of our support for the values enshrined in the Commonwealth.

On this occasion, I am pleased to announce the following initiatives:

- Organising a fully financed Diplomatic Training Module in our Foreign Service Institute which will begin in 2010. I encourage Commonwealth members to avail of this opportunity to train their young diplomats in the Institute.
- India will underwrite the cost of the first phase of the Commonwealth Partnership Platform Portal (CP3) and will support this programme as it develops.
- As host to the Commonwealth 2010 Games, India will fund a post of Sports Adviser in the Commonwealth Secretariat.
- India has long believed that stronger South-South cooperation is essential for the transformation of our societies through skill enhancement and sharing of knowledge. India would earmark 250 slots under its International Technical and Economic Cooperation (ITEC) Programme specifically for Commonwealth countries.
- India's support to the Commonwealth small states is well known and long standing. India has been contributing $100,000 annually towards a Commonwealth tranche for a Small State Office in New York. In response to the Secretary-General's request, I am pleased to announce that India will contribute $80,000 per annum for a similar Small State Office in Geneva.
- The Commonwealth Media Development Fund has been a success story. It gives me great pleasure to announce that India will double its contribution to the Fund and will now contribute 120,000 US dollars, spread over a period of two years.

- We will support the Commonwealth Secretary General's initiative to convene a body of National Elections Commissions to share experiences and learn lessons from each other.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

187. Declaration for partnering for a more Equitable and Sustainable Future.

Port of Spain, November 29, 2009.

We, the Heads of Government of the Commonwealth, meeting in Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, from November 27 to 29, 2009, affirm the key role of partnerships in forging a more sustainable and equitable future for all people.

Our meeting takes place at a time when the world faces an unprecedented combination of social, economic and environmental challenges. These include a profound and debilitating global economic and financial crisis, volatility in key commodity prices, and the alarming impacts of climate change, which threaten the safety and livelihoods of millions. We also note with grave concern that many of the world's poorest communities are most vulnerable to these challenges.

We recognise that challenges of this magnitude cannot be resolved by any one country alone and that effectively addressing them will require international cooperation, sustained commitment and collective action. This calls for the strengthening of multilateral cooperation, based on mutual respect, openness and partnership. We therefore commit ourselves to deepening the Commonwealth's existing networks of cooperation and call for a fresh impetus to foster new and more effective political and economic partnerships. We will also capitalise on the Commonwealth's unique abilities to advocate for partnerships with other members of the international community and to promote, within each country, partnerships among the different levels of government, civil society, youth and the private sector.

This renewed emphasis on Commonwealth partnerships and collaboration should focus on areas which offer clear practical opportunities to improve lives, build more resilient communities and strengthen the bonds and ties between nations.

Protecting the poorest and most vulnerable

At our meeting in Kampala in 2007, we recognised that the MDGs are designed to achieve the most fundamental transformation of humanity, including in the areas of poverty reduction, health, education and gender equality. While significant progress is being made in many countries, we remain deeply concerned that many Commonwealth countries are falling behind the MDG targets.

Noting that the global economic and financial crisis has profoundly affected both developed and developing countries and that the process of recovery is still slow and uncertain in many countries, we will collaborate to find ways to provide immediate help to the poorest and most vulnerable, and to develop responses to protect the people that are most at risk, particularly those in poor developing countries

We therefore commit ourselves to the strengthening and creation of partnerships and networks to increase development effectiveness, emphasising high-impact initiatives with clearly measurable outcomes. To this end we pledge to take measures to improve the quality of the data used to inform policies in key areas such as health, poverty and education, strengthen the linkages between research and policy making, and mainstream issues of gender and gender equality into policies and programmes. We will share our ideas and best practices, and deliver practical support through Commonwealth networks, including a new Commonwealth Partnership Platform Portal. We urge a stronger role for the Commonwealth Secretariat in assisting the developing country members to access and utilise the resources available to cope with the economic crisis. We will also strive to implement the recommendations of the High Level report on Democracy and Pro-Poor Growth as well as those of the Report of the Commission on Growth and Development.

Debt

At our meeting in Kampala in 2007 we expressed concern that many countries were still weighed down by large and unsustainable debt burdens, and we reiterated the need to address the debt problems of middle-income countries, given the increasing share of government revenue taken by debt servicing and the implications for social spending.

In this regard, we commend the World Bank Debt Management initiative, which was developed in partnership with the Commonwealth Secretariat, and which was designed to help the governments of low-income and highly indebted middle-income countries to manage their national debts. We call on the international financial institutions to provide new and enhanced funding windows for concessionary financing for middle-income countries with serious debt burdens.

In keeping with the calls made by Finance Ministers at the Commonwealth Ministerial Debt Sustainability Forum, we also call on donor countries to honour their bilateral commitments with respect to the promised aid levels and cancellation of debt.

Economic governance

We will restore business confidence, the basis for investment and growth, by promoting the implementation of sound macro-economic policies, including open, competitive markets with efficient and transparent regulation, good governance and prudent and accountable management of public and private funds.

We also give our full support to the process of reform of international financial institutions and call for the urgent and comprehensive implementation of reform that responds to the needs of all countries. We should also seek to create mechanisms within established institutions that can assist small and vulnerable states.

Science, Technology and Innovation

We recognise that many Commonwealth countries already collaborate in innovation, particularly in key areas such as information and communication technologies. We believe that there must now be a far stronger emphasis on science, technology and innovation (STI) as key drivers of the type of economic transformation, employment generation and growth that will be required to emerge from the present economic crisis, attain our development objectives and realise our collective vision of sustainable development.

We therefore commit to promote increased investment in STI, as well as the rapid dissemination of technologies and ideas. In this regard, we request the Commonwealth Secretariat to identify, in collaboration with the Commonwealth Business Council, mechanisms for financing research to advance the development and adoption of new technologies and to assist member states to access the environmental development funds managed by the World Bank and the United Nations.

In addition, we will encourage new public-private sector partnerships, foster the expansion of the small and medium size enterprise (SME) sector, and promote new knowledge-based and creative industries.

Strengthening synergy and coordination

As we seek to strengthen the CHOGM process, we recognise that a more coordinated, integrated and coherent approach to implementation of the decisions reached at Meetings of Heads of Government is needed, alongside strategies to ensure the sustainability of collective Commonwealth planning and action.

We will therefore take all necessary steps to increase coordination among Commonwealth institutions, and to ensure that Commonwealth Ministerial meetings are more integrated with the CHOGM process. We will also strongly encourage cooperation and coordination among Commonwealth institutions, international financial institutions, regional development banks and other international bodies.

The global role of the Commonwealth

The Commonwealth is a platform for its membership to communicate, share ideas and coordinate action across large geographical and cultural distances. It can therefore generate and sustain effective international action on global challenges. As a result of its diversity and representativeness, the Commonwealth can strengthen old partnerships and forge new ones in order play a leadership role in the international arena for the promotion of a more equitable and sustainable future for all, and particularly to work as an advocate for small and vulnerable states. Together, we pledge to act as a catalyst for positive change in the international community in these challenging times.

Port of Spain

29 November 2009

188. Communique issued at the conclusion of the Summit meeting of the Heads of Government of the Commonwealth Countries.

Port of Spain, November 29, 2009.

1. Commonwealth Heads of Government met in Trinidad and Tobago from 27 to 29 November 2009. Of the 49 countries that attended the Meeting, 34 were represented by their Heads of State or Government.
2. The Opening Ceremony of the Meeting included an address by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, Head of the Commonwealth.
3. Heads of Government conveyed their sincere appreciation to the Government and people of Trinidad and Tobago for the warm hospitality extended to them and the excellent arrangements made for the Meeting. They also congratulated Prime Minister Manning for his able stewardship of the Meeting.

Fundamental Values and Principles: The Modern Commonwealth

4. In the 60th anniversary of the Modern Commonwealth, Heads of Government adopted the Trinidad and Tobago Affirmation on Commonwealth Values and Principles.

Membership - Rwanda

5. Heads of Government considered the application of the Republic of Rwanda for membership of the Commonwealth, in accordance with the criteria and procedures agreed at their last meeting in 2007. They warmly welcomed Rwanda into the Commonwealth family as its 54th member.

Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group (CMAG)

6. Heads of Government endorsed the Report of the Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group (CMAG), covering the Group's deliberations in the period since Heads' last meeting in Kampala in November 2007. They commended CMAG's work, which has contributed significantly to the protection and promotion of the Commonwealth's fundamental political values in member countries.
7. Heads of Government welcomed the reinstatement of Pakistan in the Councils of the Commonwealth following the conduct of credible elections in the country in February 2008 and the assumption of office by an elected, civilian government in April 2008.

8. Heads expressed deep concern at the further deterioration of the situation in Fiji Islands with regard to its adherence to fundamental Commonwealth values, including the abrogation of the Constitution in April 2009, ongoing restrictions on human rights including freedom of speech and assembly, and the Interim Government's decision to further delay elections until 2014. They noted that these actions had led to the full suspension of Fiji from the Commonwealth on 1 September 2009.

9. Heads fully endorsed CMAG's call for the Interim Government of Fiji to commit itself to a credible, inclusive and time-bound political dialogue towards the restoration of constitutional civilian democracy without further delay, and for the protection of fundamental human rights, including the immediate rescission of the Public Emergency Regulation. They reaffirmed their willingness to remain engaged with Fiji in support of any good faith efforts toward this end, in accordance with fundamental Commonwealth principles.

10. Heads noted the decision by the Commonwealth Games Federation to exclude Fiji from participation in the 2010 Commonwealth Games in New Delhi, as a consequence of Fiji's suspension from Commonwealth membership. In this context, Heads observed that Commonwealth sporting events represent a significant public demonstration of the unity of the Commonwealth as a family of members with a shared commitment to fundamental values. They affirmed that sporting ties under the Commonwealth name are inseparable from the values of the association, and endorsed the position consistently taken by CMAG that those countries under full suspension from the Commonwealth should, inter alia, be ineligible to participate in Commonwealth sporting events.

11. Heads of Government agreed that consideration be given to strengthening the role of CMAG, in order to enable the Group to deal with the full range of serious or persistent violations of the Harare Principles. They also noted the decision of CMAG to constitute a working group of its own member states to look into how its work may be further refined and elaborated to make it more effective, in consultation with other member states, and make proposals on this matter to the wider membership. They agreed that this examination should be confined to matters within CMAG's existing mandate and that any proposals for going beyond that mandate should be referred to Heads.

12. Heads reconstituted the membership of CMAG for the next biennium as follows: Australia, Bangladesh, Ghana, Jamaica, Maldives, Namibia, New Zealand, Vanuatu and Trinidad and Tobago (as Chair-in-Office.)

Belize

13. Heads of Government noted recent developments in the ongoing efforts of Belize to seek a just, peaceful and definitive resolution to Guatemala's territorial claims. They welcomed the signing of the Special Agreement between Belize and Guatemala on 8 December 2008, which provides for submission of the case to the International Court of Justice (ICJ) upon approval by the citizens of both countries in simultaneous referenda. Heads expressed a high level of confidence that the dispute could be resolved through the judicial procedure of the ICJ, and urged the support and financial assistance of the international community for this process.

14. Heads further expressed satisfaction with the ongoing Confidence Building Measures supported by the Organization of American States, which had contributed immensely to stability in the adjacent border areas of Belize and Guatemala. Heads reiterated their firm support for the territorial integrity, security and sovereignty of Belize and mandated the Secretary-General to continue to convene the Commonwealth Ministerial Committee on Belize whenever necessary.

Cyprus

15. Reaffirming their previous Communiqués on Cyprus, Heads of Government expressed their support for the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and unity of the Republic of Cyprus. They expressed their support for a lasting, just and functional settlement based on the principles of the United Nations Charter, the relevant UN Security Council Resolutions and the principles of the Commonwealth.

16. Heads of Government called for the implementation of UN Security Council Resolutions on Cyprus, in particular Security Council Resolutions 365 (1974), 541 (1983), 550 (1984), 1250 (1999) and all subsequent resolutions. They reiterated their support for the respect for the human rights of all Cypriots, including the right to property, for the implementation of the relevant decisions of the European Court of Human Rights and of the European Court of Justice, and for the accounting for all missing persons.

17. Heads of Government further agreed on the importance of supporting the efforts of the two leaders under the UN Secretary General's Good Offices Mission to bring about a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem in line with the relevant UN Security Council Resolutions. They welcomed the ongoing Cypriot-owned process of the fully fledged negotiations initiated in September 2008, aimed at reaching an agreed solution on the basis of a bizonal, bicomunal federation with a single sovereignty, single international personality, single citizenship and political equality as described in the relevant UN Security Council Resolutions.

Guyana

18. Heads of Government received an update on Guyana-Venezuela relations, and welcomed the efforts being made by both States to develop their bilateral relations in spite of the controversy that emerged from the Venezuelan contention that the Arbitral Award of 1899, that established the boundary between Guyana and Venezuela, is null and void.

19. Heads noted that the two countries had jointly proposed a candidate to the United Nations Secretary-General to be appointed as his Special Representative, to assist him as Good Officer in the search for a means of settlement of the controversy. They underscored the importance of this appointment to the resuscitation of the good offices process of the UN Secretary-General.

20. Heads expressed satisfaction with the role being played by the Commonwealth Ministerial Group on Guyana, which was established in 1999 to monitor developments in respect of the controversy. Heads agreed that the Ministerial Group should continue its work, and mandated the Secretary-General to convene meetings of the Group whenever necessary. Heads of Government reaffirmed their unequivocal support for the maintenance of Guyana's territorial integrity and sovereignty.

Zimbabwe

21. Heads of Government welcomed the Global Political Agreement on power-sharing in Zimbabwe, and expressed the hope that this would be implemented faithfully and effectively. They looked forward to the conditions being created for the return of Zimbabwe to the Commonwealth.

Disarmament and Arms Control

22. Heads of Government once again acknowledged the threats posed by weapons of mass destruction, especially nuclear weapons, and reaffirmed their commitment towards ridding the world of these weapons. Recognising that the ultimate objective is general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control, Heads reaffirmed their commitment to the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, which should be achieved in accordance with the United Nations

Charter. Heads noted that the May 2010 Review Conference of Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) provides states that are parties to the NPT with the opportunity to renew their commitment to strengthen the non-proliferation regime. Heads reaffirmed the rights of states to nuclear energy for peaceful uses in conformity with their international obligations.

23. Heads noted the ongoing efforts towards the negotiation of a comprehensive Arms Trade Treaty (ATT) in respect of conventional Weapons and the proposed ATT conference to be held in 2012. They called for the finalisation of a robust and comprehensive ATT based on consensus.

24. Heads recognised the danger posed to civilians by the indiscriminate use of cluster munitions and noted the significant contribution made by concerned states and civil society to addressing the humanitarian impact of these munitions.

Small Arms and Light Weapons

25. Heads of Government expressed their deep concern over the illicit manufacture, illegal trade and uncontrolled availability of small arms and light weapons, including man-portable air defence systems and their ammunition. They also acknowledged the resultant threat posed to peace, security, stability and development, and emphasised the importance of continued assistance to member states in this area. They reaffirmed their support for the UN Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects. Heads furthermore called for concerted efforts at the national, regional and international levels to prevent, combat and eradicate the illicit manufacture, transfer and circulation of such weapons.

Terrorism

26. Heads of Government reaffirmed their unequivocal condemnation of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, committed by whomever, wherever and for whatever purposes, as criminal and unjustifiable. They recognised that terrorism threatens the territorial integrity and security of states, and continues to present a serious challenge to international peace and security. They reiterated that acts of terrorism cannot be justified or legitimised by any cause or grievance whatsoever.

27. Heads stressed the continuing need for comprehensive efforts at all national and international levels to counter terrorism, including efforts to build respect and understanding among peoples. They urged member states to exchange information, including financial information on the movement of terrorist funds, and cooperate more effectively in the prevention, investigation and prosecution of terrorist acts through existing or new regional mechanisms, as appropriate.

28. Heads emphasised the need to conclude negotiations on a Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism on a priority basis, preferably during the Sixty-Fourth Session of the UN General Assembly.

29. Heads called upon all member states to accede to the UN Counter-Terrorism Conventions and Protocols, and to effectively implement these as well as the UN Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy and relevant Security Council Resolutions, and to prevent the use of their territories for the support, incitement or commission of terrorist acts in other states. They particularly stressed the need for member states to implement the necessary legal framework for the suppression of terrorist financing, taking into account the provisions of the International Convention for the Suppression of Financing of Terrorism (1999) and Security Council Resolution 1373 (2001), with a view to interdicting the direct and indirect flow of funds to terrorist groups, including through charitable organisations.

30. Heads welcomed the convening, in September 2009, of a Ministerial Meeting on Terrorism, which endorsed the updated Commonwealth Plan of Action on Terrorism and sought to identify new areas of cooperation among member states to meet new challenges posed by terrorism. They expressed the hope that continued implementation of the Plan would facilitate an even more effective Commonwealth contribution to the UN-led global effort on counter-terrorism.

Combating Piracy

31. Heads of Government expressed their deep concern over the threat posed by piracy and armed robbery against ships. In this context, they noted the work of the International Maritime Organisation in facilitating the Djibouti Code of Conduct concerning the Repression of Piracy and Armed Robbery against Ships in the Western Indian Ocean and the Gulf of Aden. Heads commended the work of the Contact Group on Piracy off the Coast of Somalia (CGPCS) and urged the Group to carry forward its work in coordinating efforts to combat piracy. They encouraged member states to continue to cooperate to the fullest possible extent, and in a manner consistent with international law, in the combating of piracy and armed robbery against ships.

Combating Corruption and the Tracing and Recovery of Assets of Illicit Origin

32. Recognising that corruption in its various forms undermines good governance, public security, respect for human rights and economic development, Heads of Government urged member states which had not already done so to consider becoming parties to the UN Convention against Corruption (UNCAC), and to implement its provisions, including those addressing asset recovery, to help them combat systemic corruption at both national and international levels.

33. Heads acknowledged the ongoing activities of the Secretariat to build institutional capacity and awareness in member states so as to assist them with implementation and enforcement of UNCAC. They also encouraged member states to consider implementing the recommendations of the 2005 Commonwealth Expert Working Group on the Recovery and Repatriation of Assets of Illicit Origin.

Migration

34. Heads of Government acknowledged that migration has historically contributed to the development and the flourishing of the human prospect. They expressed concern about protection gaps in countries of origin, transit and destination, and called for the strengthening of existing global mechanisms to effectively address the protection of migrants. In this context, they also affirmed the importance of enhanced cooperation among states, and other relevant actors, in managing mixed migratory flows and addressing protection needs.

Human Trafficking and People Smuggling

35. Heads, in noting the 2009 UN Global Report on Trafficking in Persons, reaffirmed their condemnation of the increasing levels of human trafficking, including trafficking for sexual and other forms of exploitation, which debases and deprives people of their human rights and dignity. They called for concerted efforts to deal with this challenge.

36. Heads again urged member states to put in place the necessary legal and administrative framework to prevent human trafficking, protect and support victims of such trafficking and prosecute the traffickers. They also affirmed the principle of solidarity and burden-sharing with regard to identification, assistance and protection of victims of trafficking.

37. Heads of Government affirmed their strongest support for combating people smuggling. Heads acknowledged that people smuggling, like all forms of transnational crime, continues to present a threat to the integrity of regional border security processes and procedures, and undermines the ability of states to manage migration. They also expressed their concern that transnational criminal organisations continue to profit from people smuggling, with disregard for the safety or human rights of those being smuggled.

38. Heads urged member states to increase efforts to combat people smuggling, including by enhancing regional cooperation, building capacity, and implementing national legislation to criminalise this activity. They acknowledged the important role of regional consultative processes in addressing the challenge of people smuggling.

39. Heads urged member states to comply with all obligations arising under international law and to consider becoming parties to the UN Convention against Transnational Organised Crime and the Protocols thereto, in particular the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, and the Protocol Against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air.

Human Rights

40. Heads of Government urged all member states to consider acceding to and implementing all major international human rights instruments, especially the twin 1966 Covenants (the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights) which, along with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, form the International Bill of Human Rights.

41. On the occasion of the 30th anniversary of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), Heads called for the enactment and domestic implementation of CEDAW. Heads expressed their commitment to eliminating violence against women. They also welcomed the adoption of UN Security Council Resolution 1888 on sexual violence in armed conflict, and Resolutions 1325 and 1889 on women and peace and security. Heads stressed the need for improved women's participation, leadership and representation in decision-making at all levels, including in peace processes, conflict prevention and resolution, and in post-conflict peacebuilding.

42. Heads recalled that 2009 marked the 20th anniversary of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which has been ratified by all Commonwealth member states. They reaffirmed their commitment to uphold the rights of children and encouraged all member states to accede to the Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

43. Heads called for the implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (CERD). They noted with satisfaction the recent increase in ratifications by member states of a range of international instruments, including the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. They also noted the adoption by the UN General Assembly of the Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.

44. Heads recognised the work of the Secretariat in advancing and mainstreaming human rights in the Commonwealth and its support for the work of national and regional mechanisms in protecting and promoting human rights, in particular its intensive engagement with small states. They reaffirmed their support for the initiatives by the Secretariat to assist member countries, at their request, to improve their adherence to international and regional human rights instruments and in the processes of the Universal Periodic Review mechanism of the UN Human Rights Council. Heads further acknowledged the Secretariat's programmes to promote human rights education and awareness through training programmes for targeted groups such as police, other uniformed services, magistrates and government officers.

45. Recognising and underlining the centrality of human rights to the fundamental values of the Commonwealth, Heads called for greater cooperation among national human rights institutions in order to enable these institutions to promote human rights more effectively.

World Economic Situation

46. Heads of Government acknowledged the ongoing turbulence in the global economy that has resulted, inter alia, in a global economic recession, contraction in global trade and reduced levels of foreign direct investment. They recognised the devastating impact that this has had across the Commonwealth, with economic growth in nearly all Commonwealth countries below potential levels. Heads noted that for many Commonwealth citizens living standards have declined, and progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals in the developing countries, especially Least Developed Countries (LDCs) and Small Island Developing States (SIDS), has been reversed. In that context, Heads welcomed the Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth agreed at the G-20 Pittsburgh Summit in September 2009. They supported the G-20's call for advice on promoting development and poverty reduction as part of the rebalancing of global growth and committed to working closely with international institutions, including the World Bank, to that end.

47. Heads expressed their support for the commitment to avoid protectionism, and to strengthen financial supervision and regulation. They emphasised the importance of renewing the contract between financial institutions and the society they serve, and the need to ensure the sector bears the full cost of the risk associated with their activities. They also welcomed commitments to accelerate IMF voice and governance reform, to review the capital needs of the multilateral development banks by mid-2010, and to adopt a more appropriate and dynamic formula to determine shareholder and voting power realignments at the World Bank and the IMF. They encouraged the IMF to consider the full range of options in their review.

48. Heads welcomed the steps taken by many countries to mitigate the impact of the economic crisis, and the fragile signs of growth in the global economy. They expressed concern however, that the social and economic impact of the crisis would continue to affect a vast majority of the developing countries, particularly the smallest and most economically vulnerable members of the Commonwealth, including LDCs and SIDS.

49. Heads nevertheless recognised that members in many regions including in Africa, had demonstrated encouraging and significant resilience, reflecting the presence of stronger macroeconomic and other policy frameworks. To further strengthen resilience, they urged enhanced international and national efforts to support electrification and other infrastructure development.

50. Heads also highlighted the fact that measures need to be taken to address the plight of many middle-income countries which are highly susceptible to external shocks but do not have access to concessionary loans and grants. Heads therefore welcomed the Commonwealth Secretariat's work to address the economic challenges facing these economically vulnerable member states, and urged that urgent measures be taken to provide support for them, especially in accessing adequate financing. They also welcomed the UN's Global Impact and Vulnerability Alert System (GIVAS), which highlighted that the global economic crisis is only now starting to affect hundreds of millions of people around the globe; that the near poor, who have just climbed out of poverty, are sliding back into it; and that, with pressure on social sector budgets, existing social protection programmes may prove insufficient.

51. Heads recognised the negative impact of the current economic crisis on families and communities everywhere. They expressed concern at the often disproportionate impact on women, noting that more women are in paid work than ever before, making an essential contribution to family income. However, it is often women that are the first to lose their jobs, especially since many are considered to be secondary earners. Heads believed that enabling girls and women to develop and use their skills, and realise their full potential, both during this economic crisis and in its aftermath, is of critical importance. They therefore stressed that, where women and girls are disproportionately impacted by the crisis, their needs should be specifically addressed in any measures to address the economic crisis and support families.

52. Heads stressed the importance of ensuring an holistic and comprehensive approach to the global economic recovery process and highlighted the need for increased economic and social policy cooperation to support stable, sustainable and inclusive global economic growth and poverty reduction in Commonwealth countries. They noted that a number of long term economic challenges, including food and energy security, climate change and urbanisation, require urgent, enhanced and additional international cooperation. They stressed the importance of action to tackle these challenges at the national and regional levels, and particularly through strong and inclusive multilateral processes.

53. Heads recognised the need for accelerated progress to meet the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) by 2015 and called for 2010 to represent a breakthrough on progress. They welcomed the UN summit on the MDGs in 2010 as a critical opportunity to set out a global plan for delivering the MDGs. They looked forward to an international assessment of what is needed to achieve the MDGs as a basis for this plan. Recognising the importance of high-level attendance at the summit, they called on other world leaders to consider attending. They recognised that current global efforts to achieve the MDGs were inadequate and a renewed multilateral cooperative response to boost the capacities of the vast majority of its members was vital in this respect. They underlined the need for cooperation in achieving progress in implementing all aspects of the Monterrey Consensus, as well as the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development of December 2008. In particular, they called on countries to meet their commitments to existing timetables for the increase of Official Development Assistance (ODA) and to ensure that the level of ODA was adequate to meet the development challenges in the developing and Least Developed Countries in the Commonwealth, and to strengthen the implementation of the measures needed to make aid more effective, as set out in the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness endorsed in March 2005 and the Accra Agenda for Action adopted in September 2008.

54. Heads noted the potential of the Commonwealth as a forum for engagement and consensus building, and asked the Secretary-General to explore ways in which this potential could be further realised on issues where the Commonwealth has institutional advantage. They also urged the Secretary-General to work with Commonwealth members to develop options for strengthening the relationship between Commonwealth members and the G-20 as well as with other relevant multilateral fora.

55. In this context, the five Commonwealth members of the G-20 recognised the special responsibility they bear in transmitting to the wider group the perspectives and priority concerns of the Commonwealth.

Reform of International Institutions

56. Heads of Government welcomed the Marlborough House Statement on the Reform of International Institutions, agreed by the representative group of Commonwealth leaders established by the Secretary-General, as a basis to support reform of international institutions. They agreed that the Statement contains useful principles for such reform and that the Commonwealth should lead by example by striving to achieve the highest standards possible in each of the areas set out under the said principles. They also reiterated their intention to accelerate UN reforms and their effective implementation, as a matter of urgency, through lobbying and advocacy in the UN itself as well as in other international fora. Heads noted the conclusion of the representative group that the Commonwealth should act as a network for supporting members in discussions of inclusive reform, facilitating exchange of information and providing a forum for a dialogue on reform issues, particularly those of concern to small and other vulnerable developing states. They called on the Secretariat to provide assistance in this area consistent with its mandate at the request of the membership.

57. Heads noted that current global challenges had reinforced the importance of stronger and more effective multilateral institutions. They reaffirmed their commitment to continued efforts to push for increased inclusivity, accountability and modernisation of the institutions. They stressed the importance of Commonwealth members working to ensure. That all the processes of reform in international institutions are comprehensive and inclusive. Heads reiterated their call to strengthen the voice and representation of developing countries in international economic decision making and norm setting, taking into account prevailing conditions in these countries. They noted the recent widening of the membership of the international bodies concerned with supporting international financial stability and stressed the need for a continuing process of constructive engagement between these bodies and all developing countries. Heads welcomed the decisions of the G-20, in particular its support to strengthen the voice and representation of developing countries at the IMF and World Bank. They noted the increased role developing countries will play in international bodies.

58. Heads supported current efforts to reform international environmental governance arrangements. They proposed an approach that would be based on the principles of transparency, equal voice and fair representation, legitimacy, responsiveness, flexibility, accountability, and effectiveness. Such reform should cover all elements of the international system that relate to environmentally sustainable development, integrate environmental and development priorities, and be practically and speedily responsive to the priority needs of small states and least developed states.

Trade

59. Heads of Government expressed their commitment to active and continued participation in multilateral trade negotiations. They recognised that a development-oriented, ambitious and balanced conclusion to the Doha Round can contribute to global economic recovery and combating protectionism, as well as the fuller and more beneficial participation of all countries in global trade, thereby making a fundamental contribution to prosperity, sustainable development and the elimination of poverty. Heads of Government therefore called for a successful and development-centred conclusion to the Doha Round in 2010 and urged all parties to demonstrate the flexibility and political will required to make such an outcome possible.

60. Heads expressed their commitment to supporting developing countries to expand their economies through trade. This could be achieved through improving market access for developing countries by supporting their effective participation and integration into regional and global trade agreements, or through improving the international competitiveness of developing countries' economies. In this context, Heads considered there was especially a need to focus on addressing the non-tariff measures that impact adversely on the exports of developing countries. A balanced approach using bilateral, regional and multilateral channels was recommended.

61. Heads acknowledged the contribution to economic growth and development of increased trade between developing countries. While noting that this does not replace trade between developed and developing countries. They were of the view that trade between developing countries has assumed greater significance and will be even more important in the emerging global economy, marked by significant changes in patterns of demand and consumption as a consequence of rebalancing. Heads expressed support for regional economic integration initiatives which are WTO-consistent and which promote the interests of developing countries as partners in regional trade agreements, as well as the interests of members adversely affected by the erosion of existing preferences or trade diversion.

62. Heads emphasised the importance of sustained and predictable Aid for Trade (AfT) in strengthening the capacity of developing country members, in particular small and vulnerable economies, to become more competitive and better able to capture opportunities created by more open regional and global markets. They welcomed the delivery of AfT commitments to 2010 and called for sustained delivery of increased AfT, post 2010, in line with national development plan priorities of recipient countries. They also acknowledged the benefits AfT can offer small and vulnerable economies in adjusting to liberalisation commitments and the implementation of trade agreements, thereby ensuring market access, especially for LDCs, in line with the special and differential treatment provisions of the WTO regime. They further emphasised the importance of mainstreaming AfT in national and regional poverty reduction strategies.

Investment

63. Heads of Government noted the valuable role of investment in contributing to economic growth, the eradication of poverty and the expansion of economic space for their citizens. While strongly supportive of the role of external investment in development and urging expanding inflows to developing members, they also called for urgent economic reforms to improve the prevailing investment and business climate and to mobilise domestic investment. Heads emphasised the need to have clear, transparent and rule-based investment regimes. They also encouraged the use of home country incentives to promote investment in LDCs, small states and other developing countries. They emphasised the need for comprehensive skills development in promoting the environment for investment.

64. Heads recognised the importance of access to finance and called for the development of domestic financial markets with specific emphasis on micro-finance and micro-credit in support of poverty alleviation and economic democratisation programmes, particularly for marginalised groups including women. They also called for innovative and market-friendly interventions that mobilise official development assistance to share investment risks.

65. Heads recognised the importance of encouraging and requiring multinational enterprises to respect applicable laws and international standards of Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) in their operations.

Heads further expressed support and encouragement for the investment community to develop and promote CSR standards, tools, and best practices.

International Financial Centres

66. Heads of Government considered the issue of International Financial Centres (IFCs). They noted concerns about the operation of some IFCs. They also noted the role hosting IFCs can play in many Commonwealth countries' economic development, especially small states. In this context they discussed recent initiatives, such as the G-20 supported OECD listing. They agreed on the need for enhanced transparency of IFCs and cooperation between countries in the sharing of tax information in accordance with the internationally agreed standard. Recognising the different capacities of, and constraints on, countries with IFCs, Heads called for consideration of less resource intensive means for negotiating and concluding tax information exchange agreements to allow the targeted threshold of 12 information exchange agreements to be met quickly, and encouraged options for multilateral agreements to increase the transparency of IFCs.

67. Heads took note both of the concerns of a number of countries in ensuring a level playing field in pursuing these initiatives, and progress that had been made over the last year in this regard. They recognised the need to make progress on these issues based on consensus. They also noted the outcomes of the latest Global Forum Meeting, especially the commitment to integrating developing countries further in the Forum's work, including within the newly established Global Forum peer review process.

Climate Change

68. Heads adopted the Port of Spain Climate Change Consensus: The Commonwealth Climate Change Declaration.

69. They reaffirmed their commitment to the Lake Victoria Commonwealth Climate Change Action Plan, welcoming progress in its implementation.

70. Recognising that member states are entering a more intense phase of work at the national level to prepare their economies and societies for climate change, Heads called for continued implementation of all six elements of the Plan by the Secretariat and other Commonwealth organizations, and urged particular emphasis on:

Supporting small states and least developed countries in advancing their own strategies and policy frameworks on adaptation and towards carbon-neutral and climate-resilient economies. In this regard, they asked the Commonwealth Secretary-General to develop his good offices for the environment, exploring the potential for a partnership between the Commonwealth, the World Bank and others, to provide specific programmes of support to vulnerable countries.

Continuing to support the effective participation of small and vulnerable member states in international negotiations on climate change issues; working with young people, parliamentarians and others to support a broad engagement in setting and implementing policy frameworks related to climate change; and further promoting reform of international environmental governance arrangements to ensure greater participation and opportunity for all states and other relevant actors.

Sustainable Development

71. Heads of Government recalled the 1989 Langkawi Declaration and underlined the critical importance of integrated and sustainable approaches to development. They recognised that the challenges of the twenty-first century are deeply interconnected and that sustainable development requires institutions whose mandates and operations are responsive to this fact and to the needs of small, poor and highly vulnerable developing countries.

72. Heads emphasised the importance of promoting sustainable development with regard to environment infrastructure, entrepreneurship development and human resource development. They called for mobilisation of additional funds, technical assistance and collaboration. In this context, they reaffirmed their call for increased and comprehensive support for Aid for Trade activities.

73. Reflecting the Commonwealth's long-standing commitment to the sustainable development of small states, Heads of Government sought an effective review process of the Mauritius Strategy for the further implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States in 2010 under the auspices of the UN Commission on Sustainable Development, leading to strengthened implementation of sustainable development in small states and addressing new and emerging development concerns. They saw a role for the Commonwealth in supporting small states during the review and in addressing its findings through practical programmes.

74. Heads recognised that rapid urbanisation was posing a significant challenge in many Commonwealth countries, and that new and inclusive approaches to urban planning and management were central to achieving the MDGs. They acknowledged that leadership and a deeper understanding of the trends were required at all levels, together with the provision of effective financing for local infrastructure and services, to improve human security and achieve the Commonwealth goal of "demonstrated progress towards adequate shelter for all with secure tenure and access to essential services in every community by 2015".

They welcomed continued Commonwealth efforts to address these challenges.

Energy Security

75. Heads of Government noted that access to energy was essential to sustainable development. They voiced their concern that with fossil fuels being a finite resource and the urgent threats of climate change, ensuring safe, reliable and affordable energy for the people of the Commonwealth was a fundamental challenge. Heads reaffirmed the right of each country to the development and use of its own energy resources and committed to work together with a view to increasing energy efficiency and diversifying energy resources while minimising environmental impacts.

76. Heads endorsed the need to develop energy partnerships based on cooperation and market principles. In this regard, they encouraged participation in existing initiatives that foster investment and innovation in the development of diverse renewable energy sources and energy efficiency and promote cleaner energy through research and development, capacity building and the transfer of knowledge on environmentally efficient and sustainable technologies.

77. Heads also expressed their support for ongoing international initiatives such as the Joint Oil Data Initiative to improve transparency and reliability in the energy sector. They further recognised the importance of collaboration with the private sector to foster the sustainable development of natural resources, energy efficiency and conservation as well as to develop best practices for Corporate Social Responsibility.

Food Security

78. Heads of Government expressed their deep concern about the threats that climate change, lack of access to fresh water resources, dumping of toxic waste and volatile commodity and energy prices pose to world food security. Recognising that poverty remains the fundamental cause of food insecurity, they called for increased investment in sustainable agriculture, rural development, and natural resource management, including innovative practices, and stressed the importance of a coherent, multi-dimensional approach to sustainable agricultural development and food security. Further, they recognised the need to increase food production, particularly in countries most affected by hunger, alongside measures to improve access to food and provide safety nets and social protection, especially for the poorest and most vulnerable.

79. Heads also agreed to strive to ensure that food, agricultural trade and overall trade policies and supporting infrastructure, including irrigation, were conducive to fostering food security for all through a fair and market-oriented world trade system. They endorsed the L'Aquila Joint Statement on Global Food Security and the development of a global partnership for agriculture and food security (GPAFS). They also noted the Declaration of the FAO's World Summit on Food Security which took place in Rome on 16-18 November 2009. They agreed to take forward urgent actions to meet the declaration's objectives to achieve the MDG targets on hunger by 2015, to reverse the decline in funding for food security and to tackle the challenge that climate change poses to food security.

80. Heads acknowledged that the sustainable harvesting of the world's fish stocks supports food security and can have long-term economic benefits. They expressed concern that the unsustainable exploitation of the world's fish stocks posed a threat to food security and could lead to long-term economic losses of depleted stocks. They also expressed concern at the plunder caused by Illegal, Unreported and Unregulated Fishing (IUU), in violation of, inter alia, the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea and the FAO Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries. They recognised that many developing states were particularly vulnerable to illegal fishing by foreign fleets. They agreed that urgent action was needed to strengthen fisheries and marine management in member states' waters, particularly in the case of the more vulnerable member states.

Challenges Facing Small States and Middle Income Countries

81. Heads of Government reaffirmed the challenges facing small states as set out in the 2005 Gozo Statement on Vulnerable Small States. They noted with concern that the global financial and economic crisis is having significant negative effects on small states in trade, aid, tourism and remittances and that the crisis has exacerbated the challenges already faced by these countries by deepening unemployment and creating budgetary pressure in crucial social sectors.

82. Heads of Government noted that the disproportionate impact of the global economic crisis on small states underscored the importance of a conducive external environment to their development. They encouraged these countries to continue to implement outward-oriented development strategies that would assist them to overcome their vulnerabilities and diversify the structures of their economies. They also called for an holistic and integrated approach to development for small states. Heads commended the work done by the Small States Network for Economic Development.

83. Heads welcomed the advocacy and policy development work of the Commonwealth Secretariat on behalf of small states. They urged the Secretariat to continue work in all the areas that would assist small states in their endeavour to implement crisis-resilient growth and development strategies. They agreed to make further efforts to better utilise the resources and capacities across the Commonwealth's membership to support effort to strengthen economic and social development in small member states. They welcomed the work of the Secretariat through its Joint Office for Commonwealth small states in New York and looked forward to further progress towards establishing a similar Joint Office in Geneva. They requested the Secretary-General to explore the possibility of the Geneva office being established as a cooperative venture with La Francophonie.

84. Heads urged the international community to provide support to small states in the pursuit of their development strategies and, in particular, the provision of comprehensive development assistance programmes and the use of regional mechanisms to address development challenges. They also called for continued international assistance to small states in meeting the MDGs and commitments under the Mauritius Strategy.

85. Heads expressed concern at the growing debt burden of Commonwealth small states. In the context of the acute pressures on small and middle-income states in respect of their debt burdens, liquidity and access to finance, Heads supported efforts to develop innovative solutions in areas of constraint, as recommended by Commonwealth Finance Ministers. They recognised that viable solutions would need to be adequately financed and urged that international financial institutions allocate more substantial resources for analytical and advisory services, capacity building and technical assistance for small states to meet the developmental challenges arising from the global economic and financial crisis.

86. Heads recognised that several Commonwealth countries are classified as middle-income countries (MICs) and still face significant challenges in their efforts to meet the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs. In that regard, they underlined the importance of international support that is aligned with national priorities, to address the development needs of middle-income countries, especially lower-middle-income countries. In view of the challenges faced by MICs, especially those that are small, vulnerable and highly indebted lower-middle-income countries, Heads welcomed the work of the Commonwealth Ministerial Debt Sustainability Forum (CMDSF) and in particular the recent launch in June 2009 by the World Bank, in partnership with the Commonwealth and other organisations, of a Debt Management Facility to help highly indebted low income and other developing countries. They urged continued action in this regard.

87. Heads extended sincere condolences to those affected by the recent natural disasters in the Asia-Pacific region, especially to those affected by the earthquake and subsequent tsunamis in Samoa and Tonga. They noted that small island developing states (SIDS) are among the most vulnerable to the impacts of natural disasters, and reaffirmed their commitment to supporting disaster risk reduction efforts in line with the Hyogo Framework for Action and the Mauritius Strategy.

Education

88. Heads of Government noted with concern the effect of the global economic downturn on social sectors such as education, particularly in developing countries and small states, acknowledging that education provides a fundamental tool for self-improvement and national development, and is a basic human right. They reaffirmed their commitment to achieving the MDGs of reaching universal primary education and gender parity by 2015 and agreed to prioritise reaching some 27 million Commonwealth children who are currently out of school, as well as those not completing primary education. They stressed the need to embrace an integrated and holistic vision of education systems, as encapsulated in the theme of the 17th Conference of Commonwealth Education Ministers (17CCEM, Malaysia, June 2009), Education in the Commonwealth: Towards and Beyond Global Goals and Targets. Also pursuant to 17CCEM, they acknowledged the vital role that education can play in conflict prevention and resolution, and requested the Secretariat to explore options to strengthen its education work programme on Respect and Understanding.

89. Heads called on all Commonwealth countries to commit further resources to basic education, including by actively supporting the replenishment of the Education for All Fast Track Initiative. They supported the aims of the "1 Goal: Education for All?" campaign to use the FIFA World Cup to raise awareness of education and to mobilise additional finance.

90. Heads noted that the expansion and quality of primary, secondary and higher education are integrally linked to the number and quality of teachers. Primary education provides the foundation for higher-level skills and knowledge, while secondary and higher education are critical for developing innovative solutions to national challenges, enhancing equity in the delivery of education, and for socio-economic development. Heads noted the need for all children to have equity of access to quality education, regardless of geographical location, resources, gender, ethnicity and ability, in order to equip them to interact effectively in the global community. They urged the advancement of quality basic education in developing countries and small states in particular, and noted the desirability of improving access for students of such states, who face cost constraints, to higher education institutions in Commonwealth countries.

91. Heads of Government attached particular importance to the work and potential of the Commonwealth of Learning (CoL), advocated additional inter-governmental support to advance its projects, and encouraged the creation of strategic partnerships by CoL.

92. Heads recognised the progress made in the expansion of the Commonwealth Scholarship and Fellowship Plan (CSFP) and expressed their appreciation for the initial commitments of approximately £1.6 million made towards the CSFP Endowment Fund in response to the 50th Anniversary Appeal. Heads welcomed the pledges already made and encouraged all member governments to consider making contributions to the Fund.

Health

93. Heads of Government reaffirmed their commitment to attaining the health-related MDGs and the need to closely monitor progress towards achieving these goals. They noted with concern the lack of progress towards achieving the goal for maternal and reproductive health, which is the most off-track, and the need for continued effort in relation to HIV and AIDS. They agreed that access to quality, affordable health services is fundamental to reaching the MDGs. They committed to achieve universal coverage of health services, free at the point of use, particularly for women and children. They agreed to invest in free health services to ensure that the poorest people, especially women and children, can access trained health workers with the right skills, in the right place, at the right time, and with the right infrastructure, equipment and drugs. Recognising the huge diversity in health needs across the Commonwealth, they agreed on a Commonwealth Health Compact, through which they: called on donor countries to deliver existing commitments for financing in health and identify ways to increase international resources; welcomed the steps taken by low-income countries towards universal access to health services, and making them free at the point of use and urged further concerted action; support the role of civil society to advocate for, support and contribute to universal coverage of basic health care.

94. Heads adopted the Statement on Commonwealth Action to Combat Non-Communicable Diseases.

95. Heads noted with concern the impact of the global economic crisis on progress towards achieving the health related MDGs in Commonwealth countries, including universal access to HIV prevention, treatment and care. Heads firmly supported the need to strengthen health systems in Commonwealth countries, considering a primary health care approach. Noting that international cooperation is critical in addressing the phenomenon of NCDs, Heads called for the consideration of a Summit on NCDs to be held in September 2011, under the auspices of the United Nations General Assembly, in order to develop strategic responses to these diseases and their repercussions. They also supported initiatives to include the monitoring of NCDs in existing national health information systems and emphasised the need for NCD indicators to be included in the Monitoring of the MDGs. They endorsed efforts to address the health work force crisis and to expand the use of e-health technologies. They noted the continued challenges countries face in providing access to affordable medicines, and supported the exploration of options, for increasing access to appropriate, low cost medicines.

96. Heads reiterated that a rights based approach to health is fundamental to the achievement of human development goals. They acknowledged the need to explore and remove obstacles to accessing health, as a means of achieving better health for all. They noted the importance of evidence-based research for the programming, planning and policy development of quality health services and encouraged the sharing of knowledge among senior health practitioners in member countries.

Gender

97. Acknowledging the centrality of gender equality and empowerment to achieving all MDGs, Heads of Government committed themselves to accelerated implementation of the various international and regional instruments and agreements on gender equality and women's rights. Heads called for allocation of adequate and visible resources as well as other measures to promote gender equality and women's empowerment.

98. Heads recognised the facilitating role of the Secretariat in enhancing policy dialogue, increasing advocacy and modelling of good practices on key gender issues affecting member countries. Heads reiterated their commitment to the implementation of the Commonwealth Plan of Action for Gender Equality 2005-2015 (PoA). They endorsed the need for effective monitoring and evaluation of progress in the implementation of the PoA, called for strengthened accountability mechanisms to be put in place, noting that gender mainstreaming is the collective responsibility and business of all, and welcomed its Mid-Term Review.

99. Heads noted that gender responsive budgeting can be an effective tool to promote effective economic and social governance in an equitable and sustainable growth and development strategy. They welcomed the commitment of their Finance Ministers to engage with Women's Affairs Ministers in the context of the 9th Women's Affairs Ministers Meeting in June 2010 on the gender related aspects of the global economic crisis, to ensure that the gender dimensions of the global economic crisis are recognised and incorporated into measures to respond to the downturn.

100. Heads commended the establishment of a single UN agency for women in the context of system-wide coherence in addressing gender equality concerns and women's rights, and urged swift implementation of measures to that end. Heads also stressed the need to strengthen mechanisms for gender mainstreaming including enhancing the capacity of national women's machineries.

Youth

101. Heads of Government welcomed the emphasis on young people in this, the sixtieth year of the modern Commonwealth, with its theme of The Commonwealth @ 60: Serving a new Generation. They recognised the role and active contributions of young people in promoting development, peace and democracy, and acknowledged that the future successes of the Commonwealth rest with young people. Heads adopted a Declaration on Young People: "Investing in Young People."

102. They also noted the challenges in developing and implementing the new assessed scale of contributions for the CYP, and, mindful of the importance of the CYP in underpinning the Commonwealth's commitment to future generations, agreed that the new scale should be finalised as a priority and implemented with effect from the 2010/11 financial year.

103. Heads welcomed the inaugural Youth Olympic Games, to be held in Singapore from 14 to 26 August 2010. They supported its aim of inspiring youth around the world to embrace, embody and express the Olympic values of excellence, friendship and respect through an integrated sport, culture and education programme.

Bridging the Digital Divide

104. Heads of Government recognised the important role that Information and Communication Technology (ICT) can play in economic and social transformation. They expressed their appreciation for the work of the Steering Committee of Commonwealth Connects, and welcomed its 2009 Report to CHOGM. They endorsed the strategy to focus on promoting strategic partnerships, building ICT capacity and helping member countries to access new resources.

105. Heads recognised the role of the Commonwealth Connects programme as a catalyst for the initiation of partnerships to promote the use of ICT for development, and reiterated their support for the continued role of the programme in helping make ICTs available for citizens, businesses and governments throughout the Commonwealth. They encouraged increased partnering and sharing of expertise from ICTadvanced member countries, as well as further contributions to the Commonwealth Connects Special Fund.

Commonwealth Secretariat

106. Heads of Government continued to stress the importance for the Commonwealth Secretariat of incorporating results-based management and outcome-based reporting into its governance structure. Heads also emphasised the need to continue to implement the recommendations of the Commonwealth Fund for Technical Cooperation (CFTC) review in 2008 and focus on its comparative strengths. They also noted the good progress achieved in restoring the CFTC to its earlier value, undertook to complete five years of increased pledges as agreed at the 2005 CHOGM in Malta, and agreed that member governments should thereafter at least maintain the real value of their contributions to the CFTC.

107. Heads adopted the proposal on a revised scale of assessed contributions for the Commonwealth Secretariat budget, to be implemented with effect from the 2009/10 financial year, with the changes phased in over a three-year period. They noted that in future the scale should be reviewed and adjusted on a five-yearly basis.

108. Heads welcomed the continued efforts by the Secretary-General to promote the development of strategic partnerships, which they saw as a valuable means primarily of extending the global reach and impact of Commonwealth values and principles, as well as offering potential for securing additional support and resources for the Secretariat's work.

109. Heads reaffirmed the importance they attached to the continued strengthening of the governance of the Secretariat, and welcomed the Secretary-General's efforts to improve its effectiveness and efficiency within its areas of priority and focus, including improved reporting of results, as agreed by member governments in the Strategic Plan. Heads agreed that the troika of the past, present and future Chairs-in-Office should be informed on selected matters at the initiative of the Secretary-General.

Commonwealth Functional Cooperation

110. Heads of Government took note of the various aspects of Commonwealth Functional Cooperation presented to the Committee of the Whole (COW). They requested the Secretary-General to continue to bring to the notice of Heads of Government any proposed mandates arising from Ministerial meetings that have significant implications for the Secretariat's work programme and resources. Heads acknowledged in particular the contribution of the accredited Commonwealth Inter-Governmental Agencies and Commonwealth Organisations which reported to the COW and to Foreign Ministers.

They recognised the importance of a vibrant and active civil society as a key partner in delivering a sustainable and equitable future for all, and valued the contribution that civil society continues to make through its engagement with Commonwealth intergovernmental institutions and processes. They noted the statement from the Commonwealth People's Forum and its assessment of the interconnected challenges facing Commonwealth citizens and the particular impacts on women and young people.

Commonwealth Foundation

113. Heads of Government received the Report of the Commonwealth Foundation and its four year Strategic Plan 2008-12: Civil Society: a Force for Transformation. They valued the unique role of the Foundation in working with governments and civil society to forge partnerships. They welcomed the commitment of the Foundation to expand its grants programme and the consequent 25% increase in support allocated to civil society over the period 2006-08. They recognised the value of dialogue between civil society and governments, both nationally and in Commonwealth processes, and the contribution made by the Foundation in providing civil society a voice at Ministerial meetings, notably at 17CCEM. They noted the additional resources secured by the Foundation in support of its mission and commended its initiatives on culture and development, sustainable economic recovery and fisheries and food security. They welcomed Maldives into the membership of the Foundation.

Commonwealth of Learning

114. Heads of Government received with appreciation the Report of the Commonwealth of Learning (CoL) and its three year plan 2009-2012 Learning for Development. They expressed satisfaction that the number of countries making voluntary contributions to its budget had increased to 41, and encouraged other member governments to also consider doing so. They expressed particular appreciation for the work of the Virtual University for Small States of the Commonwealth, and - with its first period of funding drawing to a close - encouraged the Secretariat to assist the CoL in securing new funding to continue and expand the programme in terms of capacity-building in the use of ICTs in education, and the development and delivery of courses.

Commonwealth Business Council

EU*189. Remarks by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at Press Conference on conclusion of the 20th India – EU Ministerial Troika meeting.*Prague, June 29,2009.

May I at the outset, thank the Czech Presidency for the warm hospitality that has been extended to me and to my delegation which is here in this beautiful city of Prague for the 20th India-EU Ministerial level Troika meeting.

This afternoon, I have had useful and constructive discussions with the Czech Foreign Minister Mr. Jan Kohout, the EC Commissioner for External Relations and European Neighbourhood Policy, Ms Benita Ferrero Waldner, (ENP), Ms. Helga Schmid, Representative of the EU High Representative for Common Foreign and Security Policy and the incoming Swedish Presidency.

India and EU have a strategic partnership. We greatly value our interactions with the EU leadership, which have intensified and diversified to cover all areas of bilateral engagement and regional and international issues. The 20th Troika Ministerial Meeting, which is the first high level bilateral political interaction between India and EU after the formation of a new government in India, has a special significance. We believe that India and the EU are indispensable elements in a multi-polar structure and our strategic partnership, based on shared values and commitment to democracy, freedom, pluralism and multilateralism will be important in addressing the daunting challenges.

Today, we shared assessments of our respective regions and also exchanged perspectives on global issues including the current international financial crisis, need for reform of international institutions, including the United Nations, energy, climate change and terrorism.

Since the 9th India-EU Summit held in Marseille, the two sides have sustained the momentum by holding regular interactions. We were able to take stock of the progress in the areas identified under the reviewed Joint Action Plan (JAP) signed during the last Summit. The progress made under JAP has been satisfying and also encouraging. Both sides have reaffirmed their commitment to further intensify our consultations and diversify and strengthen our economic and trade ties.

The holding of annual Summits between India and the EU reflects the importance both sides place on this relationship. The Troika Meeting also serves as a preparatory to the Summit and in this context I am very pleased to announce that we have agreed to the date proposed by the EU - November 06, 2009 – for the next India-EU Summit to be held in New Delhi.

My discussions today with my EU interlocutors have reinforced our conviction that India-EU relations will continue to grow and diversify on the basis of the many synergies and complementarities that exist between us. We are hopeful that our deliberations today and the decisions taken will play a critical role in realizing the full potential of the India-EU Partnership.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the outgoing Czech Presidency for their valuable contribution in strengthening India –EU relations and also warmly welcome Sweden, the incoming Presidency of the EU.

at Indian Council of World Affairs on India -European Union Forum on Effective Multilateralism.

New Delhi, October 9, 2009.

Ambassador Chhatwal,

Director General ICWA Ambassador Sudhir Devare,

Members of the delegation from the European Union

Institute of Security Studies and the Indian Council of World Affairs,

Distinguished guests,

Ladies and gentlemen,

I am glad that the Indian council of World Affairs, the oldest think-tank in India on foreign affairs, has significantly stepped up its activities during the past six months during which Ambassador Devare and Joint secretary in the MEA Dr Ramesh Chandra have been here. I congratulate them, and hope that they will carry forward the legacy of the founders of this institution, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Hridya Nath Kunzru.

I have great pleasure to be here when the first track II level dialogue between the European Union Institute for Security Studies (EUISS) and the Indian Council of World Affairs, two leading think-tanks is taking place. This event reflects the growing realization that the European Union and India are finding increasing interdependence across a wide range of issues and areas. Of late, the EU -India interaction has become multifold. The first bilateral summit was held in Lisbon in 2000. Within 4 years, at the Hague summit, the landmark Strategic Partnership Agreement between the two was signed and in 2005 a Joint Action Plan (JAP) was adopted which is a roadmap for action. The upcoming summit next month in Delhi should further concretize our common resolve for consultation and cooperation.

With the geopolitical centre progressively shifting, it is fairly clear that the EU-India relationship has steadily moved from commercial or economic one to that of strategic partnership though trade and investment continue to be the principal components. In terms of political organization or decision-making, the 27 member European Union and a single state India have obvious differences. The European Union in forging a unique brand of regionalism has undergone an experience of political accommodation and compromise. India, on the other hand, has had a very different kind of history in which it created through non-violence and constitutionalism a secular democratic state. Yet, today, as India and EU interact they find a good deal of coherence on shared values and practices - of democracy, pluralism, human rights, international conflict resolution or peacekeeping. At a time when India is engaged in establishing a partnership with all major powers or regions of the world, the positive response reciprocated by the European Union is a development much welcomed in India.

India and the EU are active players in a multi-polar world constantly shaped by the forces of globalization. Multi-polarity is a reality of the contemporary global order which India and the E.U as pluralist societies readily accept, if not welcome. And they seek to address a number of global issues and challenges through multilateralism. Effective multilateralism requires understanding and respect for mutual concerns, needs or aspirations. It is only through this any coordination and cooperation can develop. The dialogue between the EU and India would need to see how to enhance that mutual understanding or respect so that the issues of peace, security or development that require bilateral or multilateral cooperation can be effectively addressed.

Terrorism is one of the biggest challenges which confronts us today. It threatens the very core of our civilized societies. India has been a victim of terrorism for over two decades. The EU has also witnessed horrific terrorist incidents in recent years caused by Al Qaeda terrorists. India and the EU would need to address, wherever possible, the menace of terrorism with coordination and cooperation. I am happy to learn that the EU Coordinator for Counter-terrorism is attending this Forum and will be sharing his views on the subject this afternoon.

On Afghanistan, again, India has gone through the tragedy of terrorist violence against its Embassy in Kabul last year and civilian personnel working elsewhere in the country on development projects. In fact we just had a similar attack on our Embassy in Kabul yesterday, in which several innocent people of Afghanistan died. India nevertheless believes that the cause of democracy and peace in Afghanistan can be best served through development programmes which the Afghan government and people need most urgently. India has committed to assist them with such assistance estimated at 1.2 billion U.S dollars.

EU and India can also usefully cooperate on security issues, including in areas such as maritime and energy security. India's recent contribution in anti-piracy operations off the coast of Somalia or help to keep the SLOCs (sea lanes of communication) in the Malacca Straits safe for navigation is part of its efforts to secure further the Indian Ocean. In the field of energy security where both India and the EU are major importers of fuel, it is imperative for the two to secure safe, affordable and sustainable energy supplies. The India-U.S civil nuclear deal is expected to open new vistas for India with respect to the environment-friendly nuclear source. Countries forming the EU who are also members of the Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG) supported the India-U.S agreement. Some of them, notably France has also signed agreement with India on civilian nuclear energy. As India gears itself for a major expansion of nuclear energy production the EU countries can work for obtaining a large share in this undertaking.

There are two issues which seem to pose a major challenge to the world today. They are Climate Change and the WTO impasse. On Climate Change, though both the EU and India have common interests and emphasize the central role of the global protocols there are clear differences in their approach. Unlike the developed countries of the EU which favour quantitative restrictions on green house gas emissions, India finds it difficult to adopt emission caps given its priority for development and economic growth for large population. 'Global action is needed by all parties, according to their common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities, with developed countries taking the lead' said the joint statement at the recent EU-India summit.

WTO deadlock on the Doha round is another issue that should engage our urgent attention. A multilateral, rule-based universal trading regime is in the best interest of both, developed as well as developing countries and therefore every attempt should be made to resolve the impasse to put the WTO talks on the track. Bilaterally, the EU is India's largest trading partner with trade between the two having gone up from 2002 to 2008 at 20% on an average. EU is also one of the largest sources of foreign direct investment for India.

As you are aware, in the wake of the international financial and economic crisis, the first G-20 Summit was held in Washington DC (November 15, 2008) marking the arrival of dynamic emerging market countries at the global high table. The London Summit (April 2, 2009) issued a Communique which addressed the broad themes or issues. The steps taken by the G-20, including those emerging from the recent Pittsburgh Summit, to stabilise financial markets and the global economy can be expected to lead to an early revival of private capital flows, and a step up to domestic growth through revival of external demand and exports.

In the pursuit of effective multilateralism no objective is more important than strengthening the role of the U.N. Both EU and India recognize the need to make the multilateral system more responsive to move the global agenda forward. For this it is also essential that the process of decision-making in the U.N and other international bodies such as the IMF, World Bank etc is democratized. Only then issues related to peace and security and UN reforms will be addressed fairly and equitably.

Finally, I wish to stress that greater interaction through civil society networks between the EU and India is essential and should be feasible. The two are democracies and enjoy freedom of expression, judiciary and pursuit of individual faith or religion. They are foremost examples of multi-ethnic and multi-religious societies. Human rights protection receives highest priority in both. Thus, societies based on common values and ideals should find greater resonance and synergy. As the Joint Action Plan very aptly puts it: 'We see this partnership as a qualitative transformation in the way we engage as equal partners and work together with the world at large'.

I am happy that this dialogue is addressing in an open and candid manner all issues which the EU and India regard important and urgent. Needless to say, we in the Ministry of External Affairs will find these deliberations to be of utmost importance in the context of our Summit-level interaction next month. I wish the deliberations of this conference all success.

191. Statement by the Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to the Press on India-EU Summit.

New Delhi, November 6, 2009.

His Excellency Prime Minister Reinfeldt

His Excellency President Barroso

Distinguished members of the media

It is an honour for me to welcome His Excellency Prime Minister Reinfeldt of Sweden and His Excellency President Barroso of the European Commission for the 10th India-EU Summit.

We have just concluded very productive and wide-ranging discussions. Our talks were held in a spirit of friendship and warmth, which is the hallmark of India-EU relations. An important outcome was the signing of the India-EU Agreement in the field of Fusion Energy Research. This agreement underscores the growing importance of energy security and clean energy in our cooperation.

We also reviewed the progress on the Joint Action Plan that was adopted in 2005 and agreed on measures to speed up its implementation.

India and the European Union have a Strategic Partnership based on shared values of democracy, pluralism, cultural diversity and respect for human rights. In this context, we reviewed the entire spectrum of our bilateral cooperation. We have identified trade and investment, energy, counter-terrorism, science and technology, climate change, and movement of peoples and as priority areas of our cooperation.

Despite the economic slowdown, I am happy to note that trade in goods and services between India and the European Union has doubled over the past five years to reach almost Euro 80 billion. We agreed to expedite the conclusion of a balanced and mutually beneficial Broad Based Agreement on Trade and Investment that will lead to increased economic opportunities and creation of jobs as well as wealth. I invited European businesses to increase their investments in India.

We have decided to forge stronger cooperation in the fields of science and technology, education and culture. I urged the European Union to facilitate movement of people, professional, business-persons, students, civil society and tourists through a friendly visa regime.

We also exchanged views on global and regional issues. We have agreed to continue to work closely on issues such as the reform of international institutions, the global economic and financial crisis, climate change and nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation. We agreed on the importance of a multilateral approach to addressing these challenges.

We reviewed the situation in Afghanistan and Pakistan and emphasised the need for concerted international action to combat terrorism. We have agreed to work towards early finalization of the agreement between EUROPOL and India. We also reviewed the situation in West Asia, Iran, Myanmar, Sri Lanka and discussed other regional issues.

I am satisfied with the outcome of our discussions. India looks forward to taking this very important relationship forward in all areas.

192. Joint Statement issued on the conclusion of INDIA-EU Summit.

New Delhi, November 6, 2009.

1. The Tenth India-European Union Summit was held in New Delhi on 6 November 2009. The Republic of India was represented by the Prime Minister, Dr Manmohan Singh. The EU was represented by Mr Fredrik Reinfeldt, Prime Minister of Sweden, in his capacity as President of the Council of the European Union, and Mr. Jose Manuel Durão Barroso, President of the European Commission. The leaders discussed regional and global issues, and the means to prioritise, rationalise and strengthen EU-India relations. The leaders expressed satisfaction with the rapid expansion of the relationship between the EU and India since the first Summit in 2000, which is now deeper and stronger, founded on a global, strategic and mutually beneficial partnership.

I. GLOBAL ISSUES

Strengthening the multilateral system

2. Recalling that their Strategic Partnership is rooted in shared values and principles - democracy, rule of law, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms - both India and the EU agreed on the importance of an effective multilateral system, centred on a strong United Nations, as a key factor in tackling global challenges. In this context, they also recognized the need to pursue the reform of the main UN bodies, among them the General Assembly, ECOSOC and the Security Council, with a view to enhancing the representativeness, transparency and effectiveness of the system.

Climate change and energy

3. India and the EU underlined that climate change is one of the most important global challenges. They reaffirmed the provisions and principles of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), including that of common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities, and underscored the importance of its full, effective and sustained implementation.

They recognised the scientific view that the increase in global average temperature above pre-industrial levels ought not to exceed 2 degrees Celsius. They recognised that this objective should take into account the overriding priority of poverty eradication and social and economic development of the developing countries. They will work together to achieve an ambitious and globally agreed equitable outcome of Copenhagen based on the principles and provisions of UNFCCC and the Bali Action Plan.

In this context, they expressed determination to step up the pace of negotiations. They agreed that, in the fight against climate change, equal priority had to be given to mitigation and adaptation, and recognised the critical role of enabling financial and technological support to developing countries to this end. The EU highlighted the importance of the EU Energy and Climate package. India highlighted the importance of its National Action Plan on Climate Change. These are significant contributions to global action to addressing climate change and in meeting the ultimate objective of the Convention. Both parties acknowledged the right to development and growth of developing countries and recognized that enhancing the implementation of UNFCCC represents an opportunity to promote continued climate-friendly economic growth, sustainable development and the fight against poverty. In this context they expressed hope that a global goal of significantly reducing greenhouse gas emissions by 2050 compared to 1990 levels would be reached at Copenhagen. They will prepare ambitious, credible and country-owned climate-friendly plans including adaptation and mitigation actions and will work together to implement the agreed outcome at Copenhagen.

4. Both India and the EU underline the importance of achieving security, sustainability and reliability of energy supplies. The increased production and use of renewable energy and the efforts aimed at improving access to energy and increasing energy efficiency are viewed by both sides as an important contribution to fulfilling sustainable development needs as well as achieving greater energy security. To this end the leaders welcomed the launch of the International Partnership for Energy Efficiency Cooperation (IPEEC) in May 2009 at the G8+5 Energy Ministerial Meeting in Rome and looked forward to a close EU-India cooperation in the framework of IPEEC. They also welcomed the ongoing establishment of the International Renewable Energy Agency (IRENA) to which both parties adhere and will join efforts for a rapid transition towards the widespread and sustainable use of renewable energy worldwide.

International financial crisis and global economy

5. Leaders addressed the current international financial and economic crisis and its severe impact on the world's Economy. They repeated their commitments to the decisions taken at the London and Pittsburgh G20 Summits to continue to sustain a strong policy response until the recovery is secured, to prepare internationally co-ordinated and cooperative exit strategies to be implemented once the recovery has taken hold, to strengthen and reform financial regulatory and supervisory systems to ensure global financial stability and prevent future crises, and to ensure that the International Financial Institutions reflect contemporary economic realities.

6. They called for strengthening the signs of recovery through an inclusive and global approach and for maintaining adequate flow of finance to the developing countries. They welcomed progress being made to respond to the crisis, and to ensure the smooth running of the financial sector and to support global demand so as to revive the real economy. They called on the international community to continue to demonstrate vision and resolution and to take effective economic and financial measures to promote strong, sustainable and balanced global economic growth. In order to avoid a repetition of such a crisis, they stressed the need to address systemic failures, to reform the global financial architecture and to promote an international framework of reform of the regulation of the financial markets.

Both sides underlined the importance of the financial services reforms that have been implemented in India. In this context, both sides agreed to develop a deeper dialogue on financial services.

7. India and the EU reconfirmed their adherence to the G 20 commitment to refrain from adopting protectionist measures in all its forms covering trade in goods and services, investments and financial flows. They committed to rectify any such measures so as to avoid a further deterioration of international trade. They underlined the importance of successfully concluding in 2010 multilateral negotiations at the WTO for an ambitious, comprehensive and balanced agreement that fulfils the development objectives of the Round and welcomed the renewed momentum exerted by the Delhi Ministerial meeting in September 2009. Such an agreement should significantly foster trade flows in the agriculture, industrial goods and services among and between developed and developing countries, as well as promote transparent and simplified rules and procedures and address all other remaining issues. India and the EU remain committed to engage constructively and endeavour to find solutions that promote the successful and balanced conclusion of the Round. India and the EU believe that closure of the Doha Round in 2010 should take place on the basis of progress already made, including with regard to modalities. India and the EU further called on all WTO members to work unitedly to close the round in 2010, indicating any specific demands they may have where necessary.

The EU and India underlined that in the absence of progress within this timeframe, the objective of closing the Round in 2010 will be at risk. India and the EU agreed that WTO Members should from now until the time of the WTO Ministerial Conference engage in constructive discussions, including at the level of Ministers.

Food Security and Rural Poverty

8. Both sides recognize that eradication of poverty and food insecurity is one of the greatest challenges of our times, especially in view of achieving the MDG-1 and the eradication of hunger worldwide. They furthermore recognize that the food crisis, which peaked during mid-2008, remains sensitive to a number of factors including the financial and economic crisis, and commodity prices fluctuations. The EU and India express their concern and will work closely together to enhance food security and fulfil the objectives of the Global Action Against Hunger and Poverty and to promote increased investments in agriculture, rural development and food security. They agreed that the international community needs a fully coordinated response and a comprehensive strategy to address this issue in a comprehensive manner, from short to medium and long term. They recognize the importance of the work which is being done on this issues in FAO as well as UN HLTF and thus, they look forward to the World Summit on Food Security, to be held in Rome, on the 16th - 18th November 2009. They also declared that a high level of priority should be given to rural development policies, technology transfer and development in particular with a view to enhancing agricultural productivity. They stress the importance of building on and implementing the global partnership for development as agreed in the Monterrey Consensus.

Human Rights

9. As both the EU and India are committed to respecting, protecting and promoting human rights, fundamental freedoms, and the rule of law, they are reinforcing cooperation within the UN Human Rights Council. The Leaders reiterated that there should be no impunity for the perpetrators of genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity.

Terrorism

10. India and the EU stand united in combating the challenge of terrorism, which constitutes one of the most serious threats to international peace and security. The leaders condemned terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, committed by whomever, wherever and for whatever purpose.

11. The EU expressed strong condemnation of the terrorist attacks in Mumbai last year and reiterated the need for intensifying global cooperation in combating international terrorism. The two sides emphasised the utmost importance of bringing the perpetrators of this heinous crime to justice and acknowledged the contribution this would make to the success of the global fight against terrorism.

12. The EU and India are convinced that the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism should become a vital law enforcement instrument in our joint counter-terrorism efforts. India and the EU attach great importance to counter-terrorism cooperation in the framework of the United Nations, and share a commitment to universal ratification and full implementation of all UN counter-terrorism conventions and related protocols, as well as supporting the work of the Counter Terrorism Implementation Task Force (CTITF). The EU and India committed themselves also to the implementation of the UN global counter-Terrorism Strategy in all its aspects. Efforts to counter terrorism can only be successful with a sustained and comprehensive approach. They should be pursued in full respect of international law.

The EU and its member-states extended full support to India's bid for membership of the Financial Action Task Force (FATF), which will further reinforce India's commitment to combat terrorist financing and money laundering. At the bilateral level, India and EU looked forward to advance the negotiations between Europol and the Indian authorities in order to conclude an agreement that will reinforce cooperation in the field of counter terrorism.

Disarmament and non-proliferation

13. India and the EU welcome the renewed momentum in global disarmament efforts. India and the EU reaffirmed their shared interest in working together for disarmament and for countering the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their delivery systems. In this context, they stressed the importance of strengthening national export control laws.

India and the EU have supported the adoption of a programme of work for its 2009 session by the Conference on Disarmament including the negotiation of a Fissile Material Cut-off Treaty. They look forward to the early commencement of substantive work, including negotiations, at the next CD session.

India and the EU share the understanding that the development of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes should take place in conformity with the highest standards of safety, security, and non-proliferation.

Peace-keeping

14. The EU and India agreed to further intensify dialogue on peace-keeping, peace-building and post-conflict assistance, in accordance with the provisions of the Joint Action Plan of 2005.

International Centre for Promotion of Enterprises (ICPE)

15. The EU and India took note of the work carried out by the International Centre for Promotion of Enterprises (ICPE) within the UN framework to promote cooperation in areas of entrepreneurship and SME development, corporate governance, trade and knowledge-based society through research consultancy.

II. REGIONAL ISSUES

SAARC

They stressed the need for the international community to maintain its commitment to render assistance to the Government and people of Afghanistan in support of the efforts of the UN in Afghanistan. As they are both ASEM facilitators, they expressed their commitment to further engage actively in the ASEM partnership to maintain peace and stability as well as to promote conditions conducive to sustainable economic and social development.

III. BILATERAL ISSUES

22. The Leaders underscored that the successive Summit meetings have provided a solid ground for nurturing the strategic partnership between India and the EU. The Leaders affirmed their determination to further strengthen the Strategic Partnership and to cooperate both at the bilateral and global levels for the cause of peace, security and sustainable development for all. The Joint Action Plan (JAP), which was reviewed by the 2008 summit in Marseilles, and which has expanded to include diverse areas, is an important element of this partnership. The EU and India have the ambition to build on this to further deepen their dialogue, including on a political level.

23. The EU and India confirmed the shared objective of concluding an ambitious and balanced Broad Based Trade and Investment Agreement, which will bring significant economic benefits to both sides and further strengthen the bilateral economic relationship. 25. Both sides noted the ongoing cooperation under the India-EU energy panel and underlined the need also in this context to focus on energy efficiency, clean coal technology, energy conservation and renewable energy, and expressed their intent to develop expeditiously their cooperation efforts in these areas.

26. They expressed satisfaction at the conclusion of the agreement between the EU and India in the field of fusion energy research and look forward to the early conclusion of the agreement on research and development in the field of peaceful use of nuclear energy.

28. In the field of transport, both India and the EU expressed the hope that they will be able to resume their negotiations on a maritime agreement with a view to finalise them rapidly.

29. India and the EU agreed that an urgent global effort was required to meet the MDGs and expressed their readiness to enhance their efforts to reduce global poverty. In the context of the EC-India development cooperation, both sides welcomed the preparations that are underway for agreeing on a new Multi-Annual Indicative Programme covering 2011-13 for which an indicative envelope of • 210 million will be made available, aimed at strengthening the social sectors, in particular education and health, as well as the continuation of activities identified under the EU-India Joint Action Programme. The EU has been a partner to India's developmental efforts including especially in the social sector.

30. The EU and India firmly share values of democracy, fundamental freedoms, pluralism, and rule of law, and believe strongly in the universality of Human Rights, as reflected in their dialogue on the same.

31. India and the EU expressed the wish that the Joint Working Group on Agriculture pays particular attention to joint efforts towards agricultural productivity, economic growth and eradication of rural poverty and food insecurity. India and the EU recognised the importance of promoting people-to-people exchanges through the medium of culture and education and welcomed the signing of the India-EU Joint Declarations on Multilingualism and Education. The parties hope to advance negotiations regarding their Joint Declaration on Culture, aimed at establishing a policy dialogue on culture between the EU and India.

35. The Leaders noted with appreciation the role of Indian and European civil society and of the EU-India round table, and agreed on the need to review its role in India-EU relations and to decide on its future activities.

G-8 AND G-5*193. Opening remarks by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at interaction with media on return from the G-8 Outreach Ministerial meeting on Afghanistan.*New Delhi, July 1, 2009.

I attended the G-8 Outreach Ministerial Meeting on Afghanistan at Trieste, from June 26-27, 2009. Major topics of focus at the conference included narcotics production, border control and security, refugee issue and the development of Afghanistan's economy and infrastructure. The regional dimension of improved coordination and cooperation on border issues, trade and transit, etc were also discussed.

In the recent past, there has been a renewed international focus on the situation in Afghanistan and its linkage to Pakistan. India has a direct interest in the success of the international efforts in stabilizing the region, and has stood ready to play a constructive role in defeating extremism. We have welcomed the recent international efforts with regard to Afghanistan, which are in line with our thinking.

As you all are aware, we ourselves have a substantial reconstruction and assistance programme in Afghanistan that stretches across different sectors. Indeed, the success of many of our projects, often in extremely difficult circumstances, is a factor in many countries wanting to consult with us and engage us in Afghanistan. In my discussions in Trieste I underlined, based on our experience, that strengthening Afghan capacity and resources was going to be the critical factor for its future.

We view greater international cooperation in Afghanistan as a key factor in restoring stability there. Afghanistan is going through a sensitive phase in the context of its forthcoming Presidential election. We view the elections as an internal matter of Afghanistan and believe that the role of the international community should be no more than supportive in this regard.

My overall impression from this meeting is that greater and continuing international focus and attention on developmental and security issues concerning Afghanistan and its neighbours is helpful and in fact necessary.

I also had a series of useful bilateral meetings at Trieste, including with my counterparts from Afghanistan, Pakistan, Russia, Great Britain, Italy, and Canada, besides Ambassador Richard Holbrooke, EC Commissioner for External Relations and UN Secretary General. My interlocutors were inter alia keen to know more about India's large and well-received assistance programme in Afghanistan. Discussions with the Afghan Foreign Minister included bilateral issues including on the progress of Indian assistance projects. I also conveyed to him that I was looking forward to visiting Afghanistan

I also visited Prague for the 20th India - EU Ministerial Troika meeting on 29 June 2009. You have already seen my remarks to the media at Prague, on the nature of our discussions. India and EU have a strategic partnership. Our interactions with the EU leadership, have intensified and diversified to cover all areas of bilateral engagement and regional and international issues. I am convinced that India-EU relations will continue to grow and diversify on the basis of the many synergies and complementarities that exist between us.

During my stay at Prague, I had a productive exchange of views with my Czech counterpart. I also called on the President and Prime Minister of Czech Republic, when we reviewed bilateral relations and reiterated our common desire to build on them further.

194. Remarks by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the launch of G5 website.

New Delhi, July 6, 2009.

Excellencies the Ambassadors of Brazil, China, Mexico and the High Commissioner of South Africa,

Members of the media,

Foreign Secretary Shri Shivshankar Menon,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am very pleased to be here on the occasion of the launch of the website of the G5. This is an important and timely initiative, coming just 2 days before the G5 Summit, and will showcase the achievements of the interaction of our 5 countries over the last couple of years. The website will also serve to provide greater visibility to our group. I would like to commend the efforts that have been put in by the Government of Mexico in preparing this website which will provide a platform for communicating amongst our countries.

2. Our five countries started interacting in the context of the G8 Outreach Summits in order to coordinate positions on various pressing global issues on the agenda of these Outreach Summits. At the same time, through our interaction over the years, we have developed synergies on various issues of global concern such as food security, climate change, energy security, development, international trade and others.

3. As a result of this cooperation, we have emerged as a cohesive group of 5 major developing economies with considerable influence over today's pressing global issues. Apart from interacting in the context of the G8 Outreach Summits, we are all members of the G20 which is addressing the current global economic and financial crisis. Our coordination in this context is equally important given the reach and depth of the current global economic and financial crisis and the urgent need for the reform of International Financial Institutions to ensure both a sustainable recovery from the current crisis and also to prevent recurrence of such crises in future.

4. Through our coordination in the context of the reform of global institutions be it the UN, IMF, World Bank or FAO, we can present the perspectives of the developing countries at various international fora and effectively voice their concerns.

5. Our interactions at various levels, including the meetings at the level of Heads of State/Government, Foreign Ministers and teleconferences amongst our vice Ministers have helped develop better understanding among our countries on many global issues of mutual concern. We have also been working closely in the context of the Heiligendamm Process to reach a common understanding with the G8 countries on some delicate issues such as IPRs, Energy Efficiency and others. We will continue to do so during the next phase of the Heiligendamm Process i.e. the Heiligendamm-L'Aquila Process.

6. Once again I would like to express my appreciation for the Mexican efforts in preparing this website of the G5 countries. I also take the opportunity to greet my G5 counterparts on this occasion, and conclude with the hope that our partnership in this important grouping will help all our 5 countries in their search for socio-economic development.

7. I will now formally launch the G-5 website.

195. Briefing by Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon on Prime Minister's visit to Italy to attend G 8/G 5 Summits.

New Delhi, July 6, 2009.

Official Spokesperson (Vishnu Prakash) - Good Evening! As you are aware Prime Minister would be leaving for Italy tomorrow to participate in the G8 and G 5 Summits. Foreign Secretary is here to brief you about PM's visit. After his opening remarks he would be happy to take a few questions.

I would also like to introduce a colleague, AS (MER) Mr. Yogendra Kumar who is sitting to the right of Foreign Secretary. Sir, the floor is yours.

Foreign Secretary (Shivshankar Menon): Thank you Vishnu. I thought I would brief you on PM's visit to Italy for the G-8 Outreach meeting and the Stand alone G-5 Summit, which will also be taking place.

As you know, PM will be leaving tomorrow afternoon for Italy. I will give you the programme first. On the 8th, there will be parallel separate meetings of the G-5 leaders and of the G-8. The G 5 leaders will be meeting in the afternoon. G 5, as you know, includes Brazil, China, India, South Africa and Mexico. Mexico is chairing the meeting as the host and there will be a press conference by the five leaders followed by a dinner among themselves.

On the next day on the 9th July, there will be the G-8 / G-5 Outreach meetings. In the morning, the G 8 will meet with all G 5 leaders and Egypt which has also been invited by Italy, as the host. They will be discussing the global issues and development policies and how to take the dialogue forward between the two. As you know in 2007, at the Heiligendamm Summit, they had started a Heiligendamm Dialogue Process between the G 5 and the G 8 countries on a host of issues including protecting innovation, research and innovation, on cross border investment, on energy, and on development particularly in Africa. It was supposed to be a two-year dialogue which has gone through two Summits actually, and now they will report to the leaders and the leaders will decide how to carry forward this dialogue in the future.

At lunch, the leaders will discuss, which again involve G 8 / G 5 and the few other invitees. They will discuss the future sources of growth in the world economy, how to revive the growth in the world economy. And in the afternoon there will be meetings of the Major Economies Forum on energy and climate change in two sessions, and at least one on trade which will see how to fight protectionism, and to move the international trade agenda forward. And then the session of the forum on climate change in the lead up to the Copenhagen Conference in December.

The next day, on July 10th, the G 8 are doing an Outreach with African countries over breakfast which will be followed by a session including the G5 as well and international organizations which would be devoted to food security initially.

There would also be bilateral meetings on the sidelines of these meetings but we will let you know about those as we go along because it is quite a crowded schedule and like last time, I think it is better for me to tell you about as we go through this process.

As you know this will be Prime Minister's 5th such summit that he is attending. India has been an invitee, as an Outreach partner from 2003 from the Evian Summit in France. In 2004, there was no real Outreach. Thereafter in 2005 at Gleneagles, India was one of the invitees along with the other members of the G-5 and we presented a paper actually on climate change and the international cooperation and energy security. In 2006, at St. Petersburg and the G-5 have been really invited to successive Summits after that - St. Petersburg and Heiligendamm in Germany last year was in Japan (Toyako) and this one is in Italy.

For us it is a useful occasion where some of the leaders of the major economies and our significant partners, get a chance to discuss major global issues in a relatively informal session and get a chance to discuss this with each other. So the issues have varied over time. Obviously, this Summit takes place at a time of the world economic crisis when there is an after effect of financial crisis which is why you saw one of the subjects of recovery, how to promote recovery, where to find sources of future growth, what sort of growth we looking at so and that is going to be one of the big issues.

The other big issue which we think will run through the Summit is also climate change because as we work the way up to Copenhagen in December, this is an issue the international community will need to address. They will get the chance to talk about it. This is not a negotiating forum and this is not an occasion where you try and substitute what is done in the various negotiating forums but it does provide a chance to people to talk to each other frankly and to try and understand each other's points of view and to see how we can take this forward. And that is really the value of this sort of dialogue at the highest level.

We, from our point of view, it is clearly important that as we look for global solutions to global problems that we work with rest of the international community and in a constructive, positive way and India also assumes her responsibilities internationally and this is why we find it essential and useful to engage in this process and have done so consistently as I said for the last five, this is the fifth Summit in a row actually that we are doing so. I would be happy to take any questions, anything that you want to know about these meetings.

Question: My question is related to the meeting you will hopefully have next week with your Pakistani counterpart. How exactly will the meeting be structured? I know you said only about terrorism but are you expecting the Pakistanis to give you something in writing about what exactly they are doing with regard to the Mumbai investigations?

Foreign Secretary: I think as far as my meeting with my Pakistani counterpart is concerned, it is likely to take place at Sharm-al-sheikh because I think this will be the first location where we will be get a chance to meet. We will do what we have been asked to do by our leaders which is quite clear, Pakistan will tell us what they have done, we will tell them about our concerns and we will then report to our leaders about where we stand on the issues, which for us are quite clear which is bringing the perpetrators of terrorism against India to justice and dismantling the infrastructure of terrorism in Pakistan which supports these activities. So we will report to our leaders, they will take stock of it. As they have told us they would act at Yekaterinburg and we will see where it goes from there.

Question: My question is about the G-8 Summit. Sir, would India be open to a discussion of the dollar as the global reserve currency and this debate of replacing the dollar with any other instruments like the SDRs.

Foreign Secretary: We are open to discussing all the issues which are relevant to finding a way forward out of the global economic crisis and clearly the issue of imbalances, of what might have caused the imbalances, what enables the world to prevent the future imbalances is one of them, quite apart from what other remedial measures are required to prevent recurrences of financial crisis, many of which have already been agreed in the G-20 format and which are being implemented. But this would be one of the ideas which is already on the table, there have been ideas which have been expressed, we are ready to discuss all of them.

Question: Sir, two questions. One is how many bilateral meetings will be there at G-8 with Dr. Singh and second, today Der Spiegel carried a story that actually G-8 is quite obsolete and they said there are lots of arguments, officially also Germany has said that G-20 is the only relevant thing. What is your comment on this?

Foreign Secretary: About the bilateral as I said, we will tell as we go along. We are fixing, some are fixed, others we are in the process of fixing. It is better, I think that we will tell it to you there itself, all in one go, rather than piecemeal.

But on the other question of relevance of which forum, the G-8, the G-8 plus five, G-20, frankly these are matters of form and for us as India what really matters is which is the forum which is best equipped to actually deliver results. When we will be looking at the financial crisis and the consequences of financial crisis, clearly the G-8 was probably the best place to do that and I think both the Washington Summit and the London Summit they have shown an ability to deal with the financial issues whether it is in terms of restructuring of financial organisations whether it is in terms of strengthening financial regulations, whichever way you look at it, that was the right place. The G-8 plus G-5 Outreach Summits have a different function. They have a much broader discussion and a much more informal discussion of global issues, and issues like, as I said, we have been discussing energy security and climate change in this forum since 2005, since Gleneagles, in fact, we have presented papers on that. Now it is not only just the economic crisis that is an issue for the Summit, in fact one of the major issues is development, what sort of development policies and how we look at the global economy going forward, those are larger issues, broader issues, which I think they will discuss this time as well.

Food security, for instance, so I don't think it is so much a question of saying this one forum is relevant, another forum, the world is more complicated than any single forum, I think, so you need to pick and choose and decide which forum works for the world, I think. But the basic crux of it, from our point of view, as internationalist by conviction that these are global problems. They need global solutions. No single country can fix these kinds of problems - food security, energy security, environment - these are not issues that anyone can do on their own. So you need fora like this, where you have an informal discussion between the leaders where they can actually talk to each other frankly and understand what their interests are and what is possible and what can be done.

Question: Sir, petitions against the release of Hafeez Saeed were dismissed by the Pakistan Supreme Court. Your reactions to that.

Foreign Secretary: I think there are different stories as you can see. I have heard all kinds of stories. I was told petitions were filed at 12 o' clock, that it was rejected at 2:06. I was told two petitions were filed, one is being rejected, I do not want to comment, frankly, on something that is so unclear. On Friday itself, we heard four different stories of what was actually happening. Once we know, we will let you know.

Question: Sir, two short questions. One is that the Finance Minister announced a Rs. 500 crore package for Sri Lanka. Is the package kind of ready or is it still in the making, have you discussed it with the Sri Lankans and second you mentioned development policy as being the core of the G-8 this time. Do we have yet another paper that we are presenting and your thoughts on the development policy in the current situation?

Foreign Secretary: I did not say it is the core of the G-8 this time, I just said it is one of the big issues; it is part of the broader issues which the G-8 is actually well equipped to discuss and for that part of the discussion in fact it would be a much broader meeting with other countries. We will not be presenting a paper this time, not this time around.

On the Sri Lankan package, on the 500 crores for relief and rehabilitation in Sri Lanka which we provided in the budget today, you know, we have been discussing with the Sri Lankan authority and with the civil society in Sri Lanka also what is required to resettle populations which have been affected by this long-drawn out tragic conflict in Sri Lanka and there are a series of steps that we, as India, have indicated that we would be willing to take that we think we can take. The Sri Lankan Government has assured us at the highest level that it is their goal also to resettle all their internally displaced people those who are in the camps in six months, in 180 days, and we will do what we can do to make that possible to bring people back to their homes in safety back to their original place of habitation with proper livelihood and a proper prospect of living in comforts, some comfort, at least. This would involve a whole series of steps; de-mining to start with, making sure that the paddy fields and their other produce uses the next growing season which is now really over the next few months, so that they have some livelihood to depend on when they go home. That we also provide some shelter in terms of material and so on so, we do have a plan of things that we want to do in these areas to try and help people to go home. We discussed them with the Sri Lankan government in some detail but we will have to keep detailing these and making them more and more details.

Some of these materials has actually already been shipped, some of the help is already there, there is a large hospital, ours is in fact one of the few hospitals which is working within the camps itself and we are trying to take care of their medical needs. There is a whole series of needs which we think this 500 crores will be necessary for. So, yes, we do have a plan which will have to be improved as we learn, as we go along, we are working with the Sri Lankan Government, the authorities, with the civil society in Sri Lanka to see that we can carry out this plan and hopefully achieve our goal.

Question: Today's five hundred crores is in addition to the previous package announced in May?

Foreign Secretary: In May we were speaking of one hundred crores, then PM said five hundred crores. So this implements what the PM had said. It is in the budget.

Question: Will we be sending de-mining experts to Sri Lanka?

Foreign Secretary: Yes, we will be sending experts from India. We have some expertise in it. More than experts it is also equipment which helps to do this.

Question: Will the experts be from the Army as well?

Foreign Secretary: Possibly. But there are groups outside the Army who have specialized in this.

Question: Just wanted to know if there will be a meeting between PM and US President Barack Obama and what will be the agenda of the meeting?

Foreign Secretary: I am sure they will be meeting but as I said on bilateral meetings we will tell you once we have them all sorted out, we have them fixed and have precise timings and places for them.

Question: An American funded but an Indian company is building a road in Afghanistan near Khost. There appears to be very strong threats. In fact on Friday, there was an attack and though Indians were not killed, six Afghan policemen and an Ukrainian supervisor were killed. Now is anything being done to ensure security as a lot of Indians are working there?

Foreign Secretary: We are working very closely with the Afghan authorities, who as you know, have taken responsibility for security and have actually made great efforts to ensure security of not only of Indian workers but of all workers on this project because this is a project of very high priority for them to which they attach a great deal of importance and we are very grateful to them actually for all that they have done. You mentioned that some of the Afghan personnel have lost their lives. This is not the first time actually, it has happened before as well which gives you an idea of how seriously they take their responsibilities.

Question: Sir, are we offering any help to Afghanistan towards their elections?

Foreign Secretary: Our Election Commission is in touch with their Election Commission and as you know we had helped in the past in their previous Presidential election and also in the parliamentary elections and they have been in touch with each other and in the process of working out details of what sort of things they might require.

Question: Prime Minister was of the opinion that G 8 countries should consult G 5 countries before sorting out the agenda and also said that we are coming here as not petitioners but we are partners? Are they doing it?

Foreign Secretary: True, very true, still true. Let me tell you, it is a process of evolution. To begin with, perhaps yes, there was a tendency for the G-8 to issue declaration before they had even met to G-5. This time, for the first time ever, there is likely to be a joint G-8 plus G 5 declaration which I think answers your question.

Question: Just in addition to earlier question, the discussion with your Pakistani counterpart, is it going to discuss terror in general? Taking stock is it specifically about Kabul and Mumbai?

Foreign Secretary: I think it is clear. For us it is not one incident or the other. It is the fact there is terrorism coming out of Pakistan which affects us. And that is the fact. And that is exactly how we have defined it consistently. You must have seen at Yekaterinburg when we spoke about and thereafter and that is really the issue. This is the issue which has bothered us for many years. That is why we raised it before, that is why there are assurances on record from Pakistan about not permitting the use of its territory for terrorism against Indian in any manner and that is really we will discuss.

196. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh prior to departure for the G8-G5 Summit.

New Delhi, July 7, 2009.

I am leaving today for Italy to attend the Summit meeting of the G-8 and G-5 countries being hosted in the city of L'Aquila on July 9-10 by the Italian Presidency of the G-8. I will also attend a meeting of the leaders of the G5 group of countries (Brazil, China, India, Mexico and South Africa). This will be an occasion for projecting India's views on major global issues relating to the world economic and financial crisis and its impact on development, food security, energy security and climate change, international trade negotiations and reform of international institutions.

As part of the G-8 related events, I will also participate in the meetings of the Major Economies Forum on Trade Matters and Climate Change, as well as a meeting on food security being organized by Italy with the participation of several African nations.

The global financial and economic slowdown that we are witnessing is particularly detrimental for the development objectives of developing countries such as India. This has not been a crisis of our making, but we have had to bear its consequences. The slowdown in the advanced economies has affected our exports, strengthened protectionists sentiments and impacted credit and capital flows. We would therefore like to see a concerted and well coordinated global response to address systemic failures and to stimulate the real economy. In the longer run, we would like to see a much higher level of stability and sustainability in the growth patterns of the developed world, and in international financial governance.

The issues of food security, energy security and climate change are closely interlinked. They have to be approached as a single undertaking if we are to give meaning to the concept of sustainable development.

Climate change will be an important subject of discussion. It is the developing countries that are the worst affected by climate change. What we are witnessing today is the consequence of over two centuries of industrial activity and high consumption lifestyles in the developed world. They have to bear this historical responsibility. India will actively participate in the international negotiations on climate change within the framework of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the Bali Action Plan.

During my visit, I look forward to having bilateral meetings with the leaders of Italy, Angola, Germany, Japan and the UK.

197. Opening Remarks by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Press Conference of G-5.*L'Aquila, July 8, 2009.

Your Excellency President Calderon, President Lula of Brazil, President Jacob Zuma of South Africa and Minister Dai Bingguo, Ladies and Gentlemen of the media,

I am very happy to be here in the beautiful town of L'Aquila, which has recovered remarkably from the devastating earthquake that struck the area in April.

In our meeting today we covered a large agenda and I thank President Calderon for his efforts in making the discussions fruitful and productive of results.

The developing countries have been the most affected by the global financial and economic crisis. We discussed how we could contribute to strengthening the green shoots of recovery. It is only through an inclusive approach that a collective global effort can be truly effective.

We will stress tomorrow the importance of maintaining adequate flow of finance to the developing countries and also of keeping markets open by resisting protectionist pressures.

The developing countries are also the worst affected by high food prices. We agreed that agriculture and food security need to be placed at the core of the international agenda paying particular attention to the concerns of the small and marginal farmers. As responsible members of the international community, we recognize our obligation to preserve and protect our environment. But climate change cannot be addressed by perpetuating the poverty of the developing countries.

The concept of sustainable development has so far been a buzz word. We need to evolve a coherent strategy of growth that brings about a higher standard of living without harming the environment.

Technology has to be a key element in our global strategy to meet the challenge of climate change. India in collaboration with the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs will be hosting a conference on technology development and transfer related to climate change on 22nd October in New Delhi. The objective is to promote the collaborative development, deployment, dissemination and transfer of climate friendly technologies in a rapid and widespread manner.

The G-5 Declaration reflects many of the concerns and positions of developing countries and have been admirably summarized by President

Calderon. These need to be taken into account in shaping global responses to global challenges. We would like to engage in a dialogue with our developed country partners on an equal footing.

India looks forward to working with the G-5 as we begin our dialogue with the G-8 countries tomorrow.

I would like in conclusion to thank our host Prime Minister Berlusconi and the people of Italy for their warm reception and hospitality."

199. Declaration on Trade issued by the leaders of the G-5 after their meeting.*L'Aquila (Italy), July 8, 2009.

We, the Leaders of the Group of Five (Brazil, China, India, Mexico and South Africa) having met in L'Aquila, Italy on July 8, 2009, have decided to issue the following Declaration on Trade:

1. We are concerned with the present state of the world economy, which submits the developing countries to an inordinate burden resulting from a crisis they did not initiate. We are convinced that the successful conclusion of the Doha Round on the basis of its development mandate will provide a major stimulus to the restoration of confidence in world markets and inhibit emerging protectionist trends which are particularly damaging to developing countries.
2. We also believe that a strengthened multilateral trading system must play a role in promoting development and reducing poverty. The full integration of developing countries in world trade requires a fair, equitable and development-friendly multilateral trading system. The Doha Development Round must deliver real and improved market access to developing country products and services and also ensure meaningful results where the greatest distortions lie, eliminating export subsidies and bringing down the massive trade-distorting subsidies in developed countries. The objective must be to ensure that the rules-based multilateral trading system is fair, equitable and addresses the legitimate aspirations of the developing countries.
3. We need to conclude this final stage of negotiations. The only way to achieve this in the foreseeable future is by upholding the mandates negotiated over the last seven years. The conclusion of the modalities in agriculture and non-agricultural market access (NAMA) continues to be a necessary step in the negotiations. The December 2008 draft Agriculture and NAMA texts must be completed in line with the development mandate and their overall balance must be preserved, as they offer the only prospect for a timely conclusion of the Round. There is no scope for selectively reopening issues; any changes in one negotiating area will require adjustments elsewhere to preserve the balance and proportionality of the outcome.
4. The time has come to intensify dialogue among WTO Members with a view to finding solutions to the remaining negotiating gaps. The contribution that our countries are making in this Round is unprecedented and all Members must be prepared to do the same, especially the developed ones. We are ready to engage with all WTO Members with a view to completing the modalities and addressing any outstanding problems, within the context of a transparent and inclusive multilateral process.

After consultations, Egypt has associated itself with this Declaration.

200. Political Declaration issued by the G-5 after their meeting.

L'Aquila (Italy), July 8, 2009.

We, the Leaders of the Group of Five (Brazil, China, India, Mexico and South Africa) having met in L'Aquila, Italy on 8th July, 2009 have decided to issue the following Political Declaration on:

1. We express our solidarity with the victims and their families that were affected last April by the earthquake in L'Aquila.
2. The global economic crisis in its multiple dimensions, including social, employment and food and energy security risks, non traditional threats to security such as diseases and epidemics, as well as the challenges posed by climate change, underscore our fundamental interdependence and the imperative of enhancing cooperation to achieve equitable and sustainable development for all.
3. The world needs a new global governance, the construction of which must be based on inclusive multilateralism. In our evolving multi-polar world, the G5, as a positive platform that contributes to the promotion of the interests of developing countries, will continue to actively engage in jointly tackling global challenges.
4. The recent outbreak of influenza A(H1N1), along with its rapid spread to various countries all around the world, has further underscored the growing interconnection among people and countries. We will continue monitoring the development of this epidemic and facing it on the basis of constructive dialogue and cooperation.
5. Collectively, at the G-20 Summit held in London last April, we stressed the need of addressing the global and financial crisis in an integrated manner, carefully considering its social and developmental impacts, as well as the long term requirements of stability and sustainability. It is our conviction that efforts to address food security, energy security and other issues of common concern to developing countries, should not be reduced because of the financial crisis. On the contrary, we must grab the crisis as an opportunity to reform the international economic system for the benefit of all, particularly the most vulnerable. As a first step, we call for the full implementation of the G-20 London Summit Declaration without any delay.

6. At the global level, we must swiftly strengthen macroeconomic policy coordination and adopt strong economic stimulus measures to restore market confidence, stabilize financial markets and promote world economic growth. Developed countries have a leading responsibility in this regard.

7. The G5 will continue to promote the reform of the international financial system in a comprehensive, balanced and result-oriented way, with the purpose of establishing a new international financial order which is fair, just, inclusive and well-managed. In particular, we pledge to devote appropriate efforts to fundamentally resolving the issue of under-representation and inadequate voice of developing countries in international financial institutions, which is urgently needed. Towards this end, the G5 will collaborate with other world leaders. In this light, we welcome the outcome document adopted by the United Nations Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and its Impact on Development.

8. The promotion of equitable and sustainable development for all must be at the core of global efforts. We urge international financial institutions to use their recently augmented resources to mainly help those developing countries which have been seriously affected by the crisis. We also call on all countries to consider the impact of their macroeconomic policies on developing countries and avoid aggravating the difficulties of developing countries due to the negative spillover effect of their policies.

9. Trade is a fundamental engine for growth and inclusive economic development. Thus, all members of the international community, must resist trade protectionism and refrain from raising new barriers to investment or trade in goods and services, or implementing inconsistent measures with World Trade Organisation (WTO). We all must strengthen cooperation and coordination in trade finance in support of developing countries to reduce the gravest impacts of the financial crisis. The G5 is fully committed to working for an ambitious and balanced outcome at the WTO Doha Development Round negotiations at the earliest date. The needs and interests of developing countries have to be placed at the heart of the Doha negotiations.

10. We reaffirm our commitment to meeting the Millennium Development Goals and to contributing to poverty eradication and the promotion of social development and justice at a global scale. In this regard, considering the threatening social impact of the global financial and economic crisis, we urge developed countries to speedily meet the already committed target of 0.7% of their gross national income for official development assistance to developing countries. Also, we emphasise the importance of fully implementing the outcomes of major World Summits, especially the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the Monterrey Consensus and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation. This is also a necessary condition for global recovery.

11. We stress the need for developing countries to strengthen coordination and collaboration on outstanding global issues and call on all Governments, international organizations and relevant parties to vigorously support South-South and trilateral cooperation, making full use of the existing mechanisms to deepen cooperation in all fields. An expanded South-South cooperation can be supplementary but is not a substitute for North-South cooperation.

12. Global warming poses a defining challenge for the present and future generations. Adaptation to climate change is of crucial importance and should be given equal emphasis as mitigation. We urge developed countries to assist the developing countries that are particularly vulnerable to the adverse effects of climate change in meeting costs of adaptation. We also urge developed countries to commit themselves to ambitious and comparable quantified emission reduction targets by reducing their emissions in aggregate by at least 40% below their 1990 levels by 2020, in the second commitment period of the Kyoto Protocol. Reaffirming the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities and underlining the fundamental role of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and its Kyoto Protocol, we urge developed countries to provide measurable, reportable and verifiable technology, financing and capacity building to support and enable developing countries to take nationally appropriate mitigation actions in the context of sustainable development. In particular, we express our interests in further considering proposals for the establishment of international funding arrangements, including the proposal of Mexico for a Green Fund, and the setting of a climate financing goal for all developed countries to contribute a certain percentage of their annual GDP in addition to ODA, among others aimed at ensuring adequate, predictable and sustained funding to support nationally appropriate mitigation actions by developing countries. Given the fundamental role of technology in addressing climate change, we call for the establishment of an international mechanism for the development, deployment and transfer of climate-friendly technologies.

We are fully committed to working for an ambitious outcome at the 2009 United Nations Climate Change Conference in Copenhagen, to ensure the full, effective and sustained implementation of the Convention and its Kyoto Protocol.

13. Peace and development are mutually reinforcing. The G5 will continue to support efforts that promote global security based on international law, and through constructive dialogue and diplomacy, seek to strengthen the international legal framework. We remain committed to supporting the role of the United Nations in global governance and further undertake to intensify international cooperation, especially in the multilateral arena. We will continue to strive for a comprehensive reform of the United Nations that includes strengthening the General Assembly, revitalizing ECOSOC, reforming the Secretariat, strengthening the UN gender architecture and, in particular, achieving an early reform of the UN Security Council, that properly reflects the current economic and political realities.

14. We unequivocally condemn in the strongest terms terrorism in all its forms and manifestations. The global scourge of terrorism need strongest collective action by the international community to prevent terrorist acts and punish perpetrators, financiers and others involved in such acts. In order to provide a comprehensive international legal framework against terrorism, the UN member states should conclude and adopt the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism as early as possible.

15. We reiterate our commitment to ensure a world free of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction and welcome the strengthening of multilateral dialogue on disarmament issues. In particular, we support the implementation of the World Program of the Conference on Disarmament for its 2009 sessions and expect a substantive outcome of these meetings.

16. We are determined to continue engaging in all multilateral efforts leading to achieve the improved global economic governance and other major changes required to ensure that globalization and interdependence work for the benefit of all. Our strategic objective is to continue promoting an action-oriented global partnership for truly equitable and sustainable development worldwide.

202. L'Aquila Statement on NON-PROLIFERATION

L'Aquila, July 10, 2009.

1. We recognize, as we did at Hokkaido Toyako and at previous Summits, that the proliferation of WMDs and their means of delivery continues to represent a global challenge and a major threat to international security. We are determined to seize current opportunities and the new momentum to strengthen our common non-proliferation and disarmament goals through effective multilateralism and determined national efforts. All States must meet in full their arms control, disarmament, and non-proliferation commitments under relevant international treaties and multilateral arrangements. The universalization and reinforcement of the non-proliferation regime remains an urgent priority. We call upon all States still not party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT), the Chemical Weapons Convention (CWC) and the Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention (BTWC) to accede without delay.
2. We underscore that the NPT remains the cornerstone of the nuclear non-proliferation regime and the essential foundation for the pursuit of nuclear disarmament, and reiterate our full commitment to the objectives and obligations of its three pillars: non-proliferation, the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and disarmament. We will work together so that the 2010 NPT Review Conference can successfully strengthen the Treaty's regime and set realistic and achievable goals in all the Treaty's three pillars. We call upon all States Parties to the NPT to contribute to the review process with a constructive and balanced approach.
3. Safeguards are an essential tool for the effective implementation of the NPT and its non-proliferation objectives. We confirm our full support for the IAEA and are committed to continuing our efforts towards the universal acceptance of the IAEA Comprehensive Safeguards Agreement and the Additional Protocol as the verification standard. We will also work to establish the Additional Protocol as an essential standard in the field of nuclear supply arrangements. We call upon all States that have not yet adopted an Additional Protocol to do so without delay while implementing its provisions pending ratification. We seek to ensure that the IAEA continues to have the technology, expertise, authority and resources needed to fulfil its vital, statutory responsibilities. We also agree that measures are needed to address non-compliance, to include real and immediate consequences for States that withdraw from the NPT while in violation of it, including appropriate action by the UN Security Council, and full use of IAEA inspection authorities that provide for access to all relevant locations, information and people.

4. We welcome the announcement made by the President of the United States of America that he has decided to seek ratification of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty (CTBT) and we will intensify our efforts towards the early entry into force and universalisation of the CTBT as one of the principal instruments of the international security architecture and a key measure of non-proliferation and disarmament. Meanwhile, we urge all States concerned to observe a moratorium on nuclear weapon test explosions or any other nuclear explosions.

5. We welcome the adoption by the Conference on Disarmament of a program of work for its 2009 session. We strongly support the early commencement of international negotiations on a Treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices (FMCT) including verification provisions, and call upon all States concerned to declare and uphold a moratorium on the production of such material. We welcome the fact that the nuclear-weapon States among the G8 members have already decreed such a moratorium. We will take action to resume substantive work in the CD as soon as possible.

6. We are all committed to seeking a safer world for all and to creating the conditions for a world without nuclear weapons, in accordance with the goals of the NPT. We welcome the nuclear disarmament measures implemented thus far by the nuclear-weapon States among G8 members.

We welcome the Joint Statement by the President of the Russian Federation and the President of the United States of America of 1 April 2009, their Joint Understanding signed on 6 July 2009, and their intention to conclude a legally binding agreement to replace the START Treaty before it expires in December 2009. We call upon all States to undertake further steps in nuclear disarmament and to greater transparency.

7. We reaffirm the inalienable right of all NPT Parties to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, in conformity with all their Treaty obligations; compliance and effective verification will not hinder the use of nuclear energy, but rather facilitate its safe and secure development and deployment as energy source. We are committed to promoting nuclear non-proliferation, safeguards, safety and security in cooperation with the IAEA and welcome new initiatives in emerging nuclear energy countries on nuclear education and training as well as institutional capacity building in these fields. We encourage the work of the IAEA on multilateral approaches to the nuclear fuel cycle, including assurances of nuclear fuel supply, as effective means of addressing the expanded need for nuclear fuel services, while taking into account the global interest in minimizing the risk of proliferation.

In this regard, we appreciate the ongoing work at the Russian-led International Uranium Enrichment Centre at Angarsk and welcome progress made towards establishing a Nuclear Fuel Bank administered by the IAEA, Russia's proposal to guarantee supply of low enriched uranium and the further development of Germany's Multilateral Enrichment Sanctuary Project. We also take note of other initiatives, including Japan's proposal for an IAEA Standby Arrangement System for the Assurance of Nuclear Fuel Supply, the UK's proposal for a political assurance of non-interference in the delivery of commercial nuclear contracts and the U.S. nuclear fuel reserve generated from material from its national security stocks.

8. To reduce the proliferation risks associated with the spread of enrichment and reprocessing facilities, equipment and technology, we welcome the progress that continues to be made by the Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG) on mechanisms to strengthen controls on transfers of such enrichment and reprocessing items and technology. While noting that the NSG has not yet reached consensus on this issue, we agree that the NSG discussions have yielded useful and constructive proposals contained in the NSG's "clean text" developed at the 20 November 2008 Consultative Group meeting.

Pending completion of work in the NSG, we agree to implement this text on a national basis in the next year. We urge the NSG to accelerate its work and swiftly reach consensus this year to allow for global implementation of a strengthened mechanism on transfers of enrichment and reprocessing facilities, equipment, and technology.

9. We acknowledge the UN Security Council's key role in addressing the challenges of proliferation and the consequences of non compliance. We call upon all States to fully implement UNSC Resolution 1540 on preventing non-State actors from obtaining WMDs, their means of delivery and related materials. We support the 1540 Committee's fulfilment of its renewed mandate. We encourage all States to participate actively in the comprehensive review of the status of implementation of the Resolution and contribute to its success.

10. We welcome the ongoing progress under the CWC and BTWC and highlight the vital importance of the full and effective implementation of both Conventions.

11. We reiterate our unanimous commitment to working for a comprehensive, peaceful and diplomatic solution to the Iranian nuclear issue and strongly support ongoing efforts to resolve it through negotiations. We urge Iran to use the present window of opportunity for engagement with the international community in a spirit of mutual respect and to respond positively to the offers advanced, in order to find a negotiated solution which will address Iran's interest as well as the international community concerns. While recognizing once again that Iran has the right to a civilian nuclear program under the NPT, we stress that Iran has the responsibility, as reiterated by UNSC Resolutions, to restore confidence in the exclusively peaceful nature of its nuclear activities, allowing for the establishment of a fruitful and wide-ranging cooperation with the G8 and other countries.

The proliferation risks posed by Iran's nuclear program continue to be a matter of serious concern. We urge Iran to comply with the relevant UNSC Resolutions and to fully cooperate with the IAEA by providing the Agency such access and information that it requests to resolve the issues raised in the IAEA Director General's Reports.

12. We condemn in the strongest terms the nuclear test conducted by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) on 25 May 2009 which constitutes a flagrant violation of the relevant UN Security Council Resolutions. Such a test undermines peace and stability in the region and beyond. In this regard, we welcome the UN Security Council Resolution 1874 of 12 June 2009 which represents the clear and strong will of the international community. We also condemn the April 2009 ballistic launch conducted by the DPRK which is in contravention of UNSCR 1718. We continue to urge the DPRK to abide by UNSCRs 1695, 1718 and 1874, not to conduct any further nuclear test or any launch using ballistic missile technology and to abandon all nuclear weapons and existing nuclear programs, as well as ballistic missile programs, in a complete, verifiable and irreversible manner. We demand the DPRK to return to full compliance with the NPT and IAEA safeguards obligations. We call upon the DPRK to return immediately and without preconditions to the Six-Party Talks and reiterate our strong support for the early resumption of the Talks and the full implementation of the 19 September 2005 Joint Statement, including the resolution of all the outstanding issues of concern.

13. The threat of terrorist acquiring WMDs continues to be cause for deep concern. We are determined to continue working together to ensure that terrorists never have access to those weapons and related materials. We look forward to the development of the initiative announced by the President of the United States of America regarding a new international effort to secure all vulnerable nuclear material around the world. We will further promote the Global Initiative to Combat Nuclear Terrorism (GICNT), which plays an important role in developing its participants' capacity to confront this global threat on a determined and systematic basis, consistent with national legal authorities and obligations under relevant international legal frameworks.

14. We maintain our support for the Proliferation Security Initiative (PSI), which plays an important part in preventing and countering proliferation of WMD, their delivery systems and related materials. We recognize the progress in combating the financing of proliferation activities, and the role of the Financial Action Task Force (FATF).

15. We will continue to uphold the importance of the Hague Code of Conduct against Ballistic Missile Proliferation (HCoC), by promoting its universalization and full implementation. In this respect, we are encouraged by the positive developments announced at the 2009 HCoC annual meeting, and are confident that all subscribing States will soon fully implement their commitments. We call upon all States that have not subscribed to the Code to do so without delay.

16. The Global Partnership against the Spread of Weapons and Materials of Mass Destruction launched in 2002 at Kananaskis has become a successful large-scale initiative for the enhancement of international security. In parallel with the implementation of ongoing priority projects in Russia and Ukraine, to which we fully reconfirm our commitments, we are discussing the options for the Partnership's further expansion by engaging potential new participants, including CIS countries, committed to the Kananaskis Principles and Guidelines.

The G8 is also ready to include new fields of cooperation in areas where the risks of terrorism and proliferation are greatest. To prevent global WMD knowledge proliferation, particularly through collaboration with scientists, we welcome the Recommendations for a coordinated approach in this field.

17. Regarding nuclear safety, we acknowledge the progress made since the last Summit meeting in ongoing projects at the Chernobyl site and, while noting that additional financial resources will be needed for their completion, we reassert our commitment to undertake joint efforts with Ukraine to convert the site into a stable and environmentally safe condition.

203. G-8 Declaration on Counter Terrorism

L'Aquila, July 10, 2009.

Now is the time for a new era of international cooperation that strengthens old partnerships and builds new ones to confront our common challenges and to defeat terrorism worldwide.

Terrorism continues to represent one of the greatest challenges to international peace, stability and security. We reiterate, in the strongest terms, our firm condemnation of this phenomenon in all its forms and manifestations. All acts of terrorism – by whomever committed – are criminal, inhumane and unjustifiable, regardless of motivation, especially when they indiscriminately target and injure civilians. In particular suicide bombings - and recruiting the young or disadvantaged to carry out such acts - as well as abductions and the taking of hostages are repugnant practices.

We remain convinced that terrorism can be effectively defeated only through multifaceted, collective and coordinated efforts – particularly in the fields of information-sharing and capacity-building – which shall include both short term provisions and long term policies. In this respect, a central role must be accorded to the United Nations, the organization uniquely suited to fostering a universal consensus on counter terrorism.

In constant cooperation with the competent UN bodies, the G8 plays a key role in the global fight against terrorism, primarily through the Roma/Lyon Group, which gathers our experts on counter terrorism and transnational organized crime, and the Counter-Terrorism Action Group (CTAG). We welcome CTAG's enhanced outreach initiatives and its increased emphasis on regional and local technical assistance and capacity building.

Consistent with the fundamental principles embodied in all relevant UN provisions, we reiterate our commitment to respecting human rights while countering terrorism.

We emphasize that special attention must also be paid to the victims of terrorist acts. Our countries are committed to further developing initiatives that assist survivors and families of the victims, and we welcome all efforts in this direction by other members of the international community.

The inherent strength of our societies lies in their openness and in the genuine respect for freedom, in which we believe and that we will always defend. Nonetheless, we should never allow terrorists to exploit our open and inclusive way of living for their murderous purposes. In this context, we shall strive to impede the mobility of terrorists, their access to financial resources and, last but not least, challenge the dissemination of their false messages and their appeal to violence.

An increase in radicalization leading to violence, especially among some vulnerable individuals in our communities, is a source of serious concern to us all. The main goal of terrorists is not only to spread fear and sow the seeds of instability, but also to undermine the basic values of our societies. Special attention must be paid to the abuses by terrorist organizations of both modern and more traditional means of public communication for propaganda and recruitment purposes. In particular, the internet is widely exploited by terrorists to disseminate their radical messages and to plan and facilitate violent acts. We must increase our understanding of the way in which terrorists use these methods of communication, and increase collaboration on countering such abuses.

Therefore, while we stress the fundamental importance of disrupting and prosecuting terrorists, we are convinced that in the long term the most effective response to their criminal strategy remains the promotion of democracy, human rights, the rule of law and equitable social conditions. We are committed to continue promoting a culture of dialogue, inclusiveness, and full respect for diversity – particularly with younger generations – which represents the most effective response to counter those who incite hatred for their violent purposes. In this context, we call on the Roma/Lyon Group to continue addressing these complex issues, as well as fostering cooperation to improve the integration of immigrant communities into G8 societies.

Visible progress has been achieved in our joint fight to prevent terrorist travel, terrorism financing, terrorist abuse of non-profit organizations (NPOs), and other forms of material support, including weapons, mainly through the establishment of a comprehensive sanction regime by UNSC Resolutions 1267/1999, 1373/2001, other relevant resolutions, and through implementation of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

We are committed to strengthen global implementation of sanctions and further reinforce our actions in working towards universal compliance with international standards in the area of counter terrorism financing, through the full implementation of the Forty Recommendations and Nine Special Recommendations of the Financial Action Task Force (FATF), and via the FATF-style regional bodies (FSRBs). Enhanced coordination, data exchange and upgrading of such information-sharing mechanisms would further global compliance as well. Special focus must also be placed on the phenomenon of cash smuggling, abuse of money transfer and other forms of moving terrorist funds. We welcome the important work completed on combating cash smuggling and the use of cash couriers to finance terrorism, specifically the joint G8 cash courier interdiction operation which resulted in over 70 seizures totaling approximately $3.5 million USD.

Although terrorism and organized crime respond to different logics, we remain deeply concerned about the connections between these two phenomena, as noted by the General Assembly when the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (Palermo, December 2000) was adopted. We commit ourselves to continue promoting targeted initiatives – by providing capacity building and other forms of technical assistance – to disrupt all possible links between these two phenomena, especially in those countries characterized by a weak institutional context that provides a fertile ground for other destabilizing challenges, such as trafficking in arms, humans and illegal narcotics: as has been highlighted by experts during the G8 Conference on Destabilizing Factors and Transnational Threats (Rome, 23-24 April 2009), these criminal activities can have a multiplier effect on terrorism.

Terrorists have diversified their strategies and offensive methods. Therefore, we will intensify our efforts in tackling the widest variety of threats, such as chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear terrorism (CBRN), and attacks on critical infrastructure (including critical information infrastructure), sensitive sites, and transportation systems. We welcome the Roma/Lyon Group's efforts to identify and promote best practices for expanding biometric identity management practices for travelers and improving security in all modes of transportation. This will resound positively far beyond the G8 countries.

Research and development in explosives detection and operational measures and technologies for the protection of the critical transportation infrastructure (such as video surveillance technologies) and agreement on best practices for conducting threat assessments of critical chemical infrastructure demonstrate G8 leadership in making the world safer and more secure for all. We call on our experts to continue their work to combat threats within all transportation modes, promote outreach campaigns that raise situational awareness, acceptance and compliance with transportation security requirements, and to enhance the role of the human resource factor in transportation security through the development of cooperation, training and certification processes. We recognize that globalization means our infrastructure is inter-independent and, as a result, we will promote dialogue and collaboration between specialists in the area of critical infrastructure protection.

All our actions against terrorism have been, and will always be, based on the fundamental principles set by the UN system. We reiterate our call for countries to join and fully implement all universal counter terrorism conventions and protocols. Moreover, we stress the importance of the UN Global Counter Terrorism Strategy and we welcome its review by the General Assembly in September 2008.

We reject the idea of a trade-off between security and the founding principles of our democracies. The respect for international law and the promotion of the rule of law are fundamental pillars in the fight against terrorism. All States must meet their obligations to implement the UN sanctions regimes, and should strive to do so in a way that promotes fairness and transparency.

In this context, we welcome the improvements brought to the UN sanction system by UNSC Resolutions 1730/2006 and 1822/2008. We believe that the G8 can play an important role in promoting and supporting efforts designed to enhance the transparency and the effectiveness of the UN sanction system. To this end, we urge our experts to study ways of more effectively implementing the new obligations under UNSC resolutions 1822/2008 and other 1267/1999 successor resolutions as an important step in bringing about greater fairness and effectiveness of targeted sanctions regimes.

204. A'quila Declaration for the promotion of Global Agenda.*L'Aquila, July 10, 2009.

1. We, the Leaders of Italy, Brazil, Canada, the People's Republic of China, France, Germany, India, Japan, Mexico, Russia, South Africa, the United Kingdom, the United States of America and the President of the European Commission, together with the Leaders of Egypt and Sweden, as President of the European Council, commit to work together on global challenges and to improve international governance. Our purpose is to foster a genuine partnership, in the context of a strengthened multilateralism. We will cooperate to ensure that the global economy resumes growth along a balanced, equitable and sustainable path for the benefit of all, especially the most vulnerable. We will resist protectionism and promote open markets for trade and investment. We will contribute to ensuring food security and energy security. We will support developing countries in withstanding the impact of the crisis and restoring conditions for their future progress. We share a common vision on development and will mobilise resources to respond to the development emergency and to advance in the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals including the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs).

2. The economic and financial crisis has clearly reinforced the need for enhanced international and multilateral cooperation. We have acted more forcefully and cooperated more fully than in any earlier economic crisis. We are fully committed to implementing rapidly the Washington and the London Summit decisions, including those to strengthen financial regulation and reform International Financial Institutions (IFIs), and to provide them with adequate resources. It is further important to ensure that developing economies, in particular low income countries, are able to cope with the effects of the crisis.

3. In 2007 in Heiligendamm our thirteen countries took the initiative to begin an equal and enduring partnership on key issues on the global agenda. We have carried forward our overall dialogue in an open, transparent and constructive manner and have built common understanding and trust - as highlighted in the annexed Concluding Report. This dialogue adds value in the search for shared solutions and complements formal negotiations in multilateral institutions and fora. We will cooperate in a stable and structured manner with a view to reaching a common understanding on key issues to advance the global agenda. We have decided to continue our partnership over the next two years on an equal footing, along the lines described in the annexed Note on the Heiligendamm-L'Aquila Process (HAP). This will be a results-oriented process, focusing on global challenges of common and crucial interest to our countries. We instruct the HAP Steering Committee to organize the necessary actions and to prepare a substantive report for the Muskoka Summit in 2010, where we will review progress and provide guidance for the next steps of our common work. Building on the results achieved through our dialogue, we aim to reinforce our interactions at all levels, with a view to enhance our collective capacity to contribute to advance the global agenda.

Discussing a global recovery agenda for balanced, inclusive and sustainable growth

4. We are committed to working together to ensure a green global recovery based on firm and lasting foundations for sustainable, balanced, innovative and inclusive growth in the medium term. We have discussed a global recovery agenda and future sources of growth, both in terms of macroeconomic patterns and of structural issues. To this end:

- We will foster a macro-environment that supports a robust and balanced resumption of domestic private spending to promote the revival of demand. Such an environment will require rehabilitating banking sectors in some countries, and the resumption of lending on a sound basis.
- While continuing to support our economies with every necessary measure to overcome the crisis, we will also begin to prepare exit strategies from the extraordinary policy measures taken to respond to the crisis, to be adopted once the recovery is assured and to ensure monetary and fiscal sustainability in the medium term.
- We will cooperate in our efforts to support domestic demand and achieve a robust, balanced, inclusive and sustainable global recovery. We will foster and work together to ensure an appropriate adjustment of savings, and investments, according to respective national circumstances.
- We will refrain from competitive devaluations of our currencies and promote a stable and well-functioning international monetary system.
- Concerned by the high social costs of the crisis in terms of unemployment and poverty, we are committed to tackle the social dimension of the crisis, putting people's concerns first. We are modernising, reinforcing and increasing the efficiency of social protection policies, including safety nets, health and education. Strengthened and sustainable social protection, supporting employment and enhancing skills, will also help to sustain and rebalance global demand. We will exchange best practices in support of the people who have lost their jobs or who are threatened by unemployment. We will strengthen our capacity for training to adapt to new labour market conditions.

- We are resolved to continue reforming financial system regulation and supervision to prevent boom and bust cycles and we will work to ensure propriety, integrity and transparency of international economic and financial activity. We support an international financial system which fosters global economic and financial stability.
- We will promote higher growth potential through a range of policies in the areas of human capital, research, infrastructure, and promotion and protection of innovation. We will put greater emphasis on the development of agricultural and small scale industries to make economic recovery more inclusive and more resilient.
- We will encourage and facilitate the development, dissemination and mutually agreed transfer of clean, low-carbon technologies, reducing carbon emissions and increasing energy efficiency from production to consumption, thereby improving energy security and access. We reconfirm our political will for reaching a comprehensive, fair, effective, agreed outcome, following the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities at the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change Conference in Copenhagen in December.
- We will continue to reform the IFI's mandates, scope and governance, to enhance their relevance, effectiveness, and legitimacy and improve accountability and credibility and to give emerging and developing economies, including the poorest, greater voice and representation.

5. We will promote regular consultations on structural and macroeconomic issues in all appropriate fora. Enhanced international dialogue and strengthened coordination will help to build a more stable, equitable and long-lasting global growth model, and so to gradually achieve and sustain a rebalanced global economy.

Supporting open markets and concluding the Doha Round

6. We reaffirm our commitment to maintain and promote open markets and reject all protectionist measures in trade and investment. We stress the importance of adhering to the standstill commitment renewed in London to refrain from measures that would introduce barriers to trade and investment and to rectify promptly any such measures. We reaffirm our request that the WTO, together with other international bodies, within their respective mandates, monitor the situation and report publicly on the adherence to these commitments on a quarterly basis.

7. We, together with the leaders of Australia, Indonesia and Republic of Korea and in the presence of the Director General of the World Trade Organization, are committed to seek an ambitious and balanced conclusion to the Doha Development Round in 2010, consistent with its mandate, building on the progress already made, including with regard to modalities. We regard enhancing the transparency and understanding of the negotiating results to date as a necessary means to facilitate the conclusion of an agreement. In order to fill in the remaining gaps in the negotiations as soon as possible, we instruct our Ministers in charge of trade to explore immediately all possible avenues for direct engagement within the WTO and to meet prior to the Pittsburgh Summit.

Promoting and protecting Cross Border Investment to our Mutual Benefit

8. We consider international investment a major source of growth, employment, innovation and development in our countries. We are committed to maximizing the positive impact of investment as a catalyst for sustainable development, including through a further dissemination of Corporate Social Responsibility standards, and to minimizing protectionist responses. There is a need for continued discussion on key principles that enhance predictability and stability in the international investment environment and that could serve as the basis for a coherent common framework.

9. Building on the results of this process, we will consider appropriate further steps, involving emerging economies, developing and developed countries, relevant international organizations and other major stakeholders.

Responsible Policies for an Inclusive and Sustainable Development

10. We are alarmed about the serious implications of the global crisis for growth and for poverty eradication in developing countries. We reaffirm our shared commitment to contribute to achieving the MDGs through economic growth and support to peace and security, especially in Africa. We received with great concern the estimates of the World Bank and other development institutions regarding the number of people, in particular children, who may perish or fall into poverty as a result. We underscore that climate change severely affects developing countries and is becoming a major threat to their ability to achieve internationally agreed development goals including the MDGs. We are committed to mobilising all resources for development, as we keep engaged to ensure the proper follow-up and implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development. We recognize that mobilising financial resources for development and the effective use of all those resources are central to the global partnership for sustainable development. As part of these overall efforts, the G8 countries are committed to meet their ODA commitments, especially to sub-Saharan Africa, including those on Aid for Trade and debt relief.

11. We are committed to strengthening our dialogue and partnership with low income countries on the basis of a set of core development principles:

- Promoting effective and responsible policies for sustainable development: We are determined to engage responsibly with low-income countries, especially those in situations of fragility. We respect and support the ownership and leadership of developing country partners in identifying and implementing priorities for their development and we will enhance coordination among development partners. We are fully committed to enhancing our coordination and implementing the Accra Agenda for Action, to improve the quality, predictability and effectiveness of development policies with the aim of maximizing their impact. We will continue to promote debt sustainability and transparency principles which we have agreed in other fora. We will make sure that climate related measures are integrated in a comprehensive development approach.
- Promoting good governance, accountability and transparency: we reaffirm the importance of promoting good governance and the rule of law, which requires responsible and transparent use of public resources as well as appropriate policy frameworks and decision-making processes conducive to sustainable development. We will strengthen mutual accountability and assess progress of development initiatives, making information on these initiatives available.
- Promoting partnership, dialogue and capacity development: we acknowledge the key role of engaging all agents of development - central and local governments, civil society and private sector - to achieve internationally agreed development goals including the MDGs. We are committed to supporting partner countries' efforts to build capable and effective governments, strong and transparent institutions, and healthy and engaged societies. We also underscore the value of triangular cooperation in providing an important link that can enhance synergies between South-South and North-South cooperation. We agree to pursue effective triangular cooperation on a case by case basis and according to our respective national capacities.

- Strengthening multilateral and regional institutions that play an increasingly prominent role in development, including by fostering income and job generation, economic integration, regional trade and cooperation and contributing to promote peace and security.

12. We are committed to advance reform processes in international organisations, including the UN, to reflect contemporary reality and challenges thus enhancing their relevance, legitimacy and efficiency. In this respect, we ask the HAP Steering Committee to examine coordinated approaches to strengthening the reform process of specialised international institutions dealing with food security issues. We are dedicated to improving the coherence of the multilateral system and welcome stronger coordination of international organisations. In particular, we encourage the relevant UN organisations, the IMF, the FSB, the ILO, the OECD, the WB and the WTO to work in a coordinated manner.

205. "L'Aquila" Joint Statement on Global Food SecurityL'Aquila Food Security Initiative (AFSI)L'Aquila, July 10, 2009.

1. We, Heads of State, Government and International and Regional Organizations convened in L'Aquila, remain deeply concerned about global food security, the impact of the global financial and economic crisis and last year's spike in food prices on the countries least able to respond to increased hunger and poverty. While the prices of food commodities have decreased since their peak of 2008, they remain high in historical terms and volatile. The combined effect of longstanding underinvestment in agriculture and food security, price trends and the economic crisis have led to increased hunger and poverty in developing countries, plunging more than a further 100 million people into extreme poverty and jeopardising the progress achieved so far in meeting the Millennium Development Goals. The number of people suffering from hunger and poverty now exceeds 1 billion.
2. There is an urgent need for decisive action to free humankind from hunger and poverty. Food security, nutrition and sustainable agriculture must remain a priority issue on the political agenda, to be addressed through a cross-cutting and inclusive approach, involving all relevant stakeholders, at global, regional and national level. Effective food security actions must be coupled with adaptation and mitigation measures in relation to climate change, sustainable management of water, land, soil and other natural resources, including the protection of biodiversity.
3. We therefore agree to act with the scale and urgency needed to achieve sustainable global food security. To this end, we will partner with vulnerable countries and regions to help them develop and implement their own food security strategies, and together substantially increase sustained commitments of financial and technical assistance to invest in those strategies. Our action will be characterized by a comprehensive approach to food security, effective coordination, support for country-owned processes and plans as well as by the use of multilateral institutions whenever appropriate. Delivering on our commitments in a timely and reliable manner, mutual accountability and a sound policy environment are key to this effort. We see a comprehensive approach as including: increased agriculture productivity, stimulus to pre and post-harvest interventions, emphasis on private sector growth, smallholders, women and families, preservation of the natural resource base, expansion of employment and decent work opportunities, knowledge and training, increased trade flows, and support for good governance and policy reform.

4. Food security is closely connected with economic growth and social progress as well as with political stability and peace. The food security agenda should focus on agriculture and rural development by promoting sustainable production, productivity and rural economic growth. At the same time, coherent policies to foster economy-wide growth, which is inclusive and environmentally sustainable, are to be pursued in conjunction with social protection mechanisms such as safety nets and social policies for the most vulnerable. Our attention to promoting access to health care and education in rural areas will substantially contribute to productivity and economic growth and, as importantly, improve nutrition and food security. It is necessary to improve access to food through more equitable income generation and distribution, employment creation and income prospects in developing countries.

5. Sustained and predictable funding and increased targeted investments are urgently required to enhance world food production capacity. Commitments to increase ODA must be fulfilled. The tendency of decreasing ODA and national financing to agriculture must be reversed. We are committed to increase investments in short, medium and long term agriculture development that directly benefits the poorest and makes best use of international institutions. We support public-private partnerships with adequate emphasis on the development of infrastructure aimed at increasing resources for agriculture and improving investment effectiveness.

6. Access to adequate and affordable nutritious food is a critical aspect of food security. Emergency assistance will remain an important means through which national authorities, supported by WFP and other specialized Agencies, Funds and Programmes, together with non-governmental organizations, can provide help to people facing acute hunger. Delivering food, cash and vouchers through effective emergency assistance as well as through national safety-nets and nutrition schemes, such as food and cash for work, unconditional cash transfer programs, school feeding and mother-and-child nutrition programs, is an imperative goal. In the long-term, government led, cash based social protection systems and targeted nutrition interventions are needed to support the poorest and excluded populations. We call upon all nations to support these aims by providing sufficient, more predictable and flexible resources. We also call upon all countries to remove food export restrictions or extraordinary taxes, especially for food purchased for humanitarian purposes, and to consult and notify in advance before imposing any new restriction. The feasibility, effectiveness and administrative modalities of a system of stockholding in dealing with humanitarian food emergencies or as a means to limit price volatility need to be further explored. We call upon the relevant International Institutions to provide us with evidence allowing us to make responsible strategic choices on this specific issue.

7. Open trade flows and efficient markets have a positive role in strengthening food security. National and regional strategies should promote the participation of farmers, especially smallholders and women, into community, domestic, regional and international markets. Markets must remain open, protectionism rejected and factors potentially affecting commodity price volatility, including speculation, monitored and analysed further. We are therefore committed to reduce trade distortions and refrain from raising new barriers to trade and investment and from implementing WTO-inconsistent measures to stimulate exports. To this end, we aim at an ambitious, comprehensive and balanced conclusion of the Doha Development Round and call for renewed, determined efforts to bring it to a timely and successful conclusion. We are committed to improve access to information, promote conducive business environments and investment in rural infrastructure, such as transportation, processing, storage facilities and irrigation schemes.

8. Strengthening global and local governance for food security is key to defeating hunger and malnutrition, as well as to promote rural development. Improved global governance should build on existing International Organizations and International Financial Institutions, making use of their comparative advantage, enhancing their coordination and effectiveness and avoiding duplications. To this end, we support the UN High Level Task Force on the Global Food Security Crisis. At the same time, we support the fundamental reform processes underway in the FAO, the Committee on World Food Security, the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research and the global agricultural research system through the Global Forum on Agricultural Research.

9. By joining efforts with partners and relevant stakeholders around the world, we can together design and implement an effective food security strategy, with priority on the world's poorest regions. We agree to support a global effort whose core principles are country ownership and effectiveness. We pledge to advance by the end of 2009 - consistent with our other actions aimed at an improved global governance for food security - the implementation of the Global Partnership for Agriculture and Food Security. Its mission includes enhancing cooperation in achieving global food security, promoting better coordination at the country level and ensuring that local and regional interests are duly voiced and considered. We intend that the Global Partnership will count on a reformed and effective Committee on World Food Security involving all relevant stakeholders, including Governments, International and Regional Organisations, IFIs, civil society and farmers organizations, the private sector and scientific community.

10. We support the implementation of country and regional agricultural strategies and plans through country-led coordination processes, consistent with the Accra Agenda for Action and leveraging on the Comprehensive Framework for Action of the UN High Level Task Force and on existing donor coordination mechanisms. Building on the experience of FAO, IFAD and other Agencies, special focus must be devoted to smallholder and women farmers and their access to land, financial services, including microfinance and markets. Sustained efforts and investments are necessary for enhancing agricultural productivity and for livestock and fisheries development. Priority actions should include improving access to better seeds and fertilizers, promoting sustainable management of water, forests and natural resources, strengthening capacities to provide extension services and risk management instruments, and enhancing the efficiency of food value chains. In this regard, the increased involvement of civil society and private sector is a key factor of success. Investment in and access to education, research, science and technologies should be substantially strengthened at national, regional and international level. Their dissemination, as well as the sharing of information and best practice including through North-South, South-South and Triangular cooperation, is essential to promote knowledge-based policy and national capacity. We recognize the opportunities and challenges associated with renewable energy production from biomasses. Related investment should be promoted in a sustainable way compatible with our food security goals.

11. In Africa, NEPAD's Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Program (CAADP) is an effective vehicle for ensuring that resources are targeted to a country's plans and priorities. Local ownership must begin with the national political will to develop and implement comprehensive food security strategies, based on sound scientific evidence, inclusive consultation, domestic investment and clear directions. We also acknowledge the positive contribution of African-led public-private partnership such as the Alliance for a Green Revolution in Africa. We commit to provide resources - whether financial, in-kind or technical assistance - in support of CAADP and other similar regional and national plans in Africa, Latin America and the Caribbean, and Asia.

12. We are determined to translate these principles into action and take all the necessary measures to achieve global food security. We will aim at substantially increasing aid to agriculture and food security including through multiyear resource commitments. In this respect, we welcome the commitments made by countries represented at L'Aquila towards a goal of mobilizing $20 billion over three years through this coordinated, comprehensive strategy focused on sustainable agriculture development, while keeping a strong commitment to ensure adequate emergency food aid assistance. We encourage other countries and private actors to join in the common effort towards global food security through a coherent approach. We are determined to improve coordination of financing mechanisms and stand ready to ensure that new resources complement existing facilities and programmes and catalyse additional funds around country-owned strategies, in particular to increase food production, improve access to food and empower smallholder farmers to gain access to enhanced inputs, technologies, credit and markets.

206. Press Conference of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on-board the special Flight en-route from Rome to New Delhi.

July 10, 2009.

Opening statement

I am returning to India after attending meetings of the G 5 leaders ( India, Brazil, China, Mexico and South Africa) , of the G5 + G 8 and Egypt, and of the G 8, G 5, Egypt and African Countries. There were also meetings of the Major Economies Forum on Trade and Climate Change.

These meetings took place when the world is attempting a recovery from the recession caused by the financial crisis in the heart of the developed world. After our discussions, it is my sense that while there are some signs of recovery, the world economy is still a long way from recovering the earlier growth momentum and there must be questions whether that will soon be possible for the global economy.

We also discussed other global issues such as Climate Change and Sustainable Development, and the elimination of hunger through food security. On trade, the dangers of protectionism were highlighted. It is clear to me that meaningful global action on all these issues requires a restructuring of the institutions of global governance, starting with the UN Security Council. The sentiment has been recognized in the declarations of our meetings.

I return home convinced that we must continue to strengthen our steps at home to regain the 8-10 % growth path. The international environment will not be as supportive as before for some time to come. I am however, confident that our domestic economic strengths will enable us to return to our earlier path of rapid and inclusive growth.

I also had useful conversations with the leaders of Angola, Japan, the USA, Russia, the UK, Australia, our host Italy, and several other world leaders.

Q&A

Q-1 - About the discussions on climate change where does India stand in regard to reduction of emissions?

PM- We are not able to undertake quantified emission reduction targets but we are also quite clear that as citizens of the global economy we have an obligation to do our bit to control emissions and therefore all countries have an obligation to be prepared to depart from business as usual.

In my own statement I said we are quite alive to the dangers of climate change; in fact we recognize climate change is already taking place. We recognize our responsibility to do more by way of mitigation as well as by way of adaptation. In this context I presented India's climate action plan and I mentioned about the eight national missions which we have set up in this regard. We are willing to do more provided there are credible arrangements to provide both additional financial support as well as technological transfers from developed to developing countries so that green sustainable development can really become an effective instrument of strengthening the atmosphere to tackle climate change.

Q-2: How satisfied are you regarding objectives achieved which you had in mind before coming here? (free translation from Hindi)

PM - This is a big struggle. I have placed the thinking of India before the G-8, G-5 and before the entire world. I believe there has been a great appreciation of our view point. But it would not be correct to say that all other countries are in agreement with us. Particularly there is going to be greater pressure on India and China. We have to stop it. Alongside we have to make the world understand that as global citizen we understand the responsibilities of India. What is reasonable to stem the climate change we shall do and in fact we are doing. (free translation from Hindi)

Q-3 - It is said that if the monsoons are good and the US economy recovers the India economy will revive. What happens if the EU economy slips?

PM- In my statement yesterday I did mention that all available indicators for 2009 point to a deceleration in the US economy, in the European Union economies and therefore one can say that the global environment for the development of the countries of the Third World has undergone a sharp deterioration. Our exports have suffered, capital flows from abroad have declined, international bank lending to the developing countries has declined and therefore the challenge before us is to sustain and revive the growth momentum which we have built up in the last five years, notwithstanding the deterioration in the international environment for development.

It is not going to be easy but I am convinced that India's savings rate which is as high as 35 %, with a normal capital output ratio of 4:1 we should be able to sustain, with a little bit extra effort, a growth rate of about 8 to 9 percent, notwithstanding the difficulties on the international front.. So I remain confident that India will come out of this crisis stronger but the road ahead is also going to be a difficult road to traverse.

Q-4 - UPA I and UPA -II any change in your agenda?

PM- I have always viewed that our role as a government is to enable our country to get rid of chronic poverty, ignorance and disease which still afflict millions and millions of our people. We have made some important gains in the last five years. We managed to impart to our economy a stronger growth momentum, we strengthened the forces which make for inclusive social and economic development, we have put in place social safety nets which soften the harsh edges of extreme poverty substantially. But this is a long and arduous journey and our challenge is to take full advantage of the instrumentalities which are now in place for inclusive growth to plug loopholes, to reduce leakages and to ensure that these instruments become more effective instruments of social and economic change, accelerated growth, more inclusive development and more emphasis on rural development and agriculture. So it is a continuation of the journey we undertook for five years, with renewed commitment and with renewed determination even though we must recognize that the international environment is not as supportive as we had imagined at one time.

Q-5 - There apparently is an impasse with Pakistan, is there anything that India can do to break that impasse?

PM- I have often said India and Pakistan are close neighbours, we can choose our friends but we have no choice with regard to our neighbours. I have always believed that for India to realize its development ambitions, to realize its place in the comity of nations, requires to work with its neighbours to bring about peace and amity in South Asia. And we will do all that is necessary to resolve all outstanding issues that have bedeviled India's relations with Pakistan. But it requires credible action on the part of Pakistan to deal with terrorist elements directing their energy to disrupt and destabilize our economy and polity.

So I look forward to the meeting with Prime Minister Gilani for an exchange of views and I do hope that out of that meeting we will have a renewed reaffirmation on the part of Pakistan that they will bring the perpetrators of the Mumbai massacre to justice, that they will not allow Pakistani territory to be used for terrorist acts directed against our country. If they do that we are willing to walk more than half the distance to normalize our relations.

Q- 6. IT and textiles have been badly affected by the global slowdown, do you see the situation getting worse or getting better?

PM: As far as IT is concerned, the world financial system was the greatest source of demand for our IT services. I think things are stabilizing -the global financial system seems to have reached a new plateau. It is not a high growth plateau; so I do expect there should be some improvement in the international environment for IT.

And also with regard to exports of textiles and garments, I do feel that if the world economy can effectively stand up against protectionist sentiments, the demand pressures can move in the reverse direction as well. It is also possible to do more at home to create demand for IT services. I think given the e governance processes in our own country, we have a vast unexplored market and we can take full advantage of the global slowdown, the Indian Information Technology industry need not face such a bleak future.

Q- 7. You have been talking about the need for reforms in the UN structure specially the Security Council, how do you feel your views have been received by other leaders ?

PM: There is today growing support that the international structures and systems which were put in place soon after the end of the WW II, they are not reflective of the current realities of the global structures and global equations. There is a growing support for the view that the Security Council membership should be enlarged both in the permanent category members as well as in the non permanent category members. And countries like India have a legitimate claim to be considered for permanent membership of the Security Council.

But having said that let me also say that International relations in the final sense are power relationships. And no body gives up power willingly; those who have the power want to hold on, so I don't think an easy solution is in sight. It will have to be a long drawn out struggle and I do believe that we have every reason to feel that in the long run our views will prevail.

Q-8. You met Zardari in Russia and now you are meeting Gilani. Has there been some progress since then? Did you talk to the world leaders to put pressure on Pakistan? (free translation from Hindi text)

PM- After I talked to Mr. Zardari, our High Commissioner had been talking. He has been talking to the ISI chief and the Foreign Office. They have offered some suggestions as to what they were doing to punish the persons involved in the Mumbai massacre. It is our hope they will go further in this direction. I will talk to Prime Minister Gilani with this hope.

The second point I want to make is, wherever I happen to talk, I emphasis our position that we are the victims of terrorism; terrorism is trying to destabilize our country for the past twenty-five years. We have evidence of the people who are responsible for this. I appeal to the world leaders that they put pressure on Pakistan to give up the path of terrorism and come forward with India on the path of friendship. (free translation from Hindi text)

Q- 9. Delhi HC recently gave a ruling on Section 377 of the IPC. Has the Govt. crystalized its views on whether to appeal further on it?

PM- I haven't discussed this matter with my Cabinet Colleagues and when I go back, I will seek their views as to if anything further needs to be done or said in this regard.

Q- 10. Can we expect more private experts in government following Nandan Nelakani's induction into the government?

PM: I would like to involve more and more intellectuals in the processes of governance of our country. It is a process, and we have made a beginning and it is my hope that in due course of time, we can enlarge this process. We need all the wisdom, knowledge and experience and there is enormous reserve of knowledge, wisdom and experience available outside the political system. It has to be harnessed in the service of the Indian people. It will be my effort to do so at a pace at which it does not create any side-effects. I think Nandan Nilekani's appointment has been widely welcomed and I sincerely hope that in due course of time we can enlarge the involvement of top intellectual elements in the processes of governance.

Q- 11. There is a lot of difference in the surplus of Rail budgets for 2008 and 2009. What do you think? (free translation from Hindi)

PM - We can discuss the statistics. I have not seen in detail. Of course the Rail Minister told me that she is going to issue a white paper. I hope that white paper will throw light on this aspect;

Q-12 . In Yekaterinburg you were frank with President Zardari. Is it back to business as usual with Pakistan and do such messages work.

PM: Well, there are difficulties, But I have not given up hope. Let me say that what I had said to Zardari Sahib, I had not intended to say that in the presence of all the media. I simply forgot that the media were present there. It was not my intention in anyway to hurt Zardari Sahib's feelings.

13. Can Doha round be concluded early.

PM: We have a strong interest in the success of the multilateral trade negotiations, because we as a country are not member of any regional groups, so we need a rule based, liberal multilateral trading system to realize our development ambitions. And we have an obligation to contribute to the success of the Doha round. We also hope that the world will recognize that the Doha round started with the promise of making development the centrepiece of global trade negotiations. If those commitments are honoured, I don't think there would be problems in reaching the satisfactory outcome of the Doha round.

14. A perception that Obama may be good for the world, but not for India. Your meetings with him...?

PM: I find President Obama to be very supportive of India's development ambitions. He has great admiration for India. I spent considerable time this morning, he and I were sitting side by side in the session on Agriculture. We exchanged notes on a large number of issues and I look forward to my visit to Washington to meet with him and as I said earlier, we have invited President Obama to pay us a visit and therefore there is no basis for apprehension that the Obama Administration will be less sensitive to India's concerns than the previous US Administration.

Interruption ...

find him very supportive of India, that he mentioned to me on more than one occasion in the last 2 days, that is the impression he gave me in London, and that is the consistent impression that I have got that we have a very responsive President Obama, as far as India's aspirations are concerned.

G-20*209. Interview of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh with Financial Times.*New Delhi, March 29, 2009.

[James Lamont, south Asia bureau chief, Alec Russell, world news editor, and Amy Kazmin, the south Asia correspondent, interviewed Manmohan Singh, the prime minister in New Delhi on March 29 2009 and it was published on March 31 issue of the paper in London.]

FT: Do you agree with China on the failures of the global monetary regime and the case for a new reserve asset in place of the dollar?

Manmohan Singh: Well these are not new issues. I was associated with the first committee of 20 with Paul Volcker in the 1970s. These issues have been discussed many times - moving to a neutral reserve asset. But there are complicated issues. The power to issue money is an indication of the power of a country and no-one gives up power voluntarily. So these are complicated issues, depending on the power balance. There are virtuous technical solutions but I don't see these are the issues that can be resolved through technical analysis.

FT: Do you expect this to be an issue that arises at G20 meeting?

MS: It's too early. You need a lot of preparation.

FT: There's been an intense debate about what G20 should be doing. The US is proposing deep fiscal stimulus, but Europe is stepping back. Where does India stand?

MS: In all these matters there has to be some umpire. I've seen a letter from the managing director of the IMF saying that the stimulus that has been planned in the year 2009 by major economies amounts to 2 per cent of GDP. This is probably adequate but it's necessary to ensure that stimulus is sustained and maintained in the year 2010. I would suggest that these are again issues that should probably be handed to an expert crew either inside or outside the IMF so that whether each country is doing its bit - its adequacy, effectiveness - can be assessed by objective means.

FT: What kind of agreement can be reached at the G20?

MS: In one day you are asking the leaders of the world to resolve all these issues. Beyond a point they are issues relating to the redistribution of powers among nations. I don't think these are issues that can be resolved in a short period of time. If you look at Bretton Woods, it took two years for the Americans and British to work out arrangements. There was the Keynes plan, the White plan and now the power system is much more complex, there are much more issues. If you are talking about global reform it requires a lot more work. It is a task that should be entrusted to a competent group of people under the auspices of the IMF or another arrangement we are willing to look at.

FT: So what is possible?

MS: An agreement for effective, credible fiscal stimulus is the responsibility of all major economies to do their bit. The second is that credit flows must be resumed. For that matter, the cleaning up of the balance sheet of the financial institutions -whatever it involved. These are very unpleasant decisions. There are problems for the tax player, political problems. If you don't have a functioning financial system the world economy won't be revived. All the major economies have their responsibility to assist at a pace which is required to clean up the balance sheet of the banking system and to ensure that credit flows are resumed. We in the developing countries see the effect of the stoppage of credit flows much more. Capital flows have sharply declined. Trade credit has sharply declined. And there is a fall of export demand. The problems of emerging economies should also be taken on board. The decline in capital flows that has taken place should be made good by providing adequate resources to the international financial institutions to come to the rescue of the emerging countries and low-income countries.

FT: The last G20 meeting ended in lots of positive statements, but it wasn't long before protectionist measures crept in. How can you guard against a repeat of that?

MS: Protectionism has to be avoided. Protectionism is not only on goods but also in the area of services. Financial protectionism is also bad and should be avoided. Some action by the developed countries particularly the withdrawal of capital resources from the developing countries by the banks of the developed countries is equally worrisome. We have entirely agreed that protectionism of all sorts including financial protectionism has to be avoided. Although some countries have taken action, in practice the impact of what has been done has not been reversed.

FT: Lashkar e Taiba, the militant group responsible for the Mumbai attacks, appears to be once again menacing India with this recent firelight in Kashmir. Why do you think that Lashkar has been able to bounce back so quickly?

MS: It is because the promises that the government of Pakistan have made to control terrorism and all its instrumentalities, they are either not able to control them or they are not willing to control them.

FT: Why has Pakistan not been able to do this?

MS: I'm not an expert on how Pakistan is being run. But the proof of pudding is in the eating. That the attacks on Mumbai were planned and acted upon in Pakistani territory is now admitted by everybody, including the intelligence agencies of developed countries. That is living proof that despite many promises made by Pakistan since 2004 to my predecessor and to me that Pakistan will not be allowed to be used to undertake acts of terror against India, in practice no effective action has been taken to control terror.

In the past, it has been our experience that there are elements in the armed forces of Pakistan, some segments of the ISI involved in perpetrating acts of terror, particularly the attack on the Indian embassy in Kabul. We have been told that the ISI in Pakistan has a different mindset. I hope that is right. The world has a responsibility that Pakistan lives up to the promise that it will not allow its territory to be used to promote acts of terror directed against India.

FT: How do you assess the chances of success for the strategy of US President Barack Obama to stabilise Afghanistan and Pakistan?

MS: We would like both Afghanistan and Pakistan to be free of the hold of terrorist elements. I have not studied the Obama plan. We are victims of terrorism and we hope that whatever the world community plans to do they will pay adequate attention that terrorism ceases to be a problem in Afghanistan as well as Pakistan. We all know the epicentre of terrorism in the world today is Pakistan. The world community has to come to grips with this harsh reality.

FT: What more does India have to do to protect itself from the global financial crisis?

MS: Our growth rate has been affected we were having a growth rate of 9 per cent until 2007/8 when the growth rate has come down to 7 percent and maybe lower than that. We have taken measures. Our fiscal deficit has gone up substantially. We have deliberately allowed it to go up to provide stimulus as a substitute for the decline of exports, for the decline of international capital. For the time being we believe that the fiscal stimulus that we have provided is adequate. With the decline of inflation there is added manoeuvrability in the use of monetary policy which will be utilised when and where it becomes necessary.

FT: There were high hopes that you could maintain the pace of economic reform that you achieved in the 1990s. Are you disappointed that you seem to have been constrained by your coalition government in doing more?

MS: You would have liked to push through more reforms. The coalition has its own compulsions. What we have done is something that can't be ignored - the fact that the Indian economy has for the first time in the last four years grown by 9 per cent per annum is an achievement that deserves some credit. We have invested very substantially and there has been an increase in demand in education, health and in strengthening the social safety net. The employment guarantee programme which we have provided to the poor of the country in rural areas is one of the most important elements of moving toward an inclusive economic growth process. All these cannot be ignored. It is certainly true that we would have liked to move faster on some elements on the econ reforms but politics is the art of the possible.

FT: Critics in the BJP say you are also constrained by the president of the Congress party, Sonia Gandhi. Do you feel this?

MS: I am not constrained by the fact that the Congress party 's management is looked after by Mrs Gandhi and I can concentrate on managing the world of the government. It is a distinct advantage the fact that the Congress president has carried this heavy burden of managing the party and bringing various political parties together in the United Progressive Alliance is a positive element. It's not a constraint on me.

FT: Is India doomed to have coalition governments that prevent it from pursuing its goals with the single-minded determination that China appears to have?

MS: The Chinese have certain advantages. The fact that it's a single party government. But I do believe in the long run the fact that India is a functioning democracy committed to the rule of law. Our system is slow to move but I'm confident that once decisions are taken they are going to be far more durable. You take the case of economic reform. When we launched the reform in 1991, the Financial Times and all other friends used to tell me "How will you be sure that these reforms will be carried forward by all successive governments". I used to say "Don't judge politicians by what they say but what they do in power". We've seen since 1991 there have been four or five governments in our country and none have dared to reverse the path of reform that we started. I'm confident. Democracy has its problems, it's slow moving, the decision making process is slow. But once decisions are taken they are far more durable. I have every reason to believe that what is happening in India to move towards an inclusive growth path, in the framework of a democratic polity, committed to the rule of law, respect for fundamental human rights. If we do succeed we have lessons for a large number of countries in the so-called Third World.

FT: What is the future of capitalism, especially in India?

MS: Capitalism with a human face. We are a mixed economy. We will remain a mixed economy. The public and private sector will continue to play a very important role. The private sector in our country has very ample scope and I am confident that India's entrepreneurs have the capacity, and the will to rise to the occasion.

The following questions were answered in writing:

FT: Can the world agree a common policy response at the G20? What do you think is achievable? What will India's contribution be to the debate?

MS: We should not look for complete agreement in everything. The fact that G-20 Leaders are meeting after six months to focus on the global crisis suggests a shared sense of urgency and commonality of purpose which itself is bound to lead to more concerted, albeit, national responses. I think governments recognise that they have to intervene actively to restart the growth process. There is also agreement that supervisory and regulatory structures in the financial sector need to be hugely improved to reduce risk of similar crises in the future. There is also agreement that the international community should take special steps to counter the effects of the crisis in emerging markets. India will work constructively to expand the consensus in all these key areas, especially where developing countries' interests are involved.

FT: Do you fear a wave of protectionism emanating from the global financial crisis? How will this affect India?

MS: Protectionism is a very real danger. It is understandable that in times of a severe downturn protectionist pressures mount but the lessons of history are clear. If we give in to protectionist pressures, we will only send the world into a downward spiral. This will obviously hurt all countries and also India.

We have a common interest in ensuring that the global economy remains open and provides an environment in which emerging market countries can increase their interaction with the world through trade and investment

FT: What line will India take on the sharp drop of financial flows into emerging markets this year as some OECD leaders pressure their banks into giving preference to lending at home?

MS: The withdrawal of private capital flows from emerging markets in 2009 is estimated at around 700 billion dollars and there is no immediate prospect of resumption in 2010. Although these flows in many cases were going in part into foreign reserves, withdrawal on this scale is likely to hurt growth prospects in emerging market countries. The international community must respond by expanding the flow of resources from international financial institutions to help developing countries to deal with this shrinkage, until international capital markets recover.

The phenomenon of industrialised countries pressurizing their banks to give preference to lending at home does present a problem. It is a form of financial protectionism which should be avoided and where possible reversed.

FT: The US is widely blaming India for the Doha Development Round deadlock. Where do you see responsibility lying?

MS: There is no truth in the charge that India is responsible for the deadlock in the Doha Round. I have repeatedly stated that India has a strategic stake in the successful functioning of the multilateral trading system and in a positive outcome of the Doha Round. We took on onerous obligations in the 1990s to bring the WTO into existence. We played an active role in launching the Doha Development Round. We want the developmental objectives of this Round to be addressed in any final deal. There were many areas of difference between different groups of countries, including differences between the US and the Europe. In our case the differences related to sensitive issues affecting the livelihood of small and vulnerable farmers. I should add that while public attention focusses on points of disagreement, we should remember that a great deal of work has been done to narrow differences. The negotiators just did not have enough time.

FT: What do you want to see in reform of the international financial institutions especially from India's perspective?

MS: The IFIs were established at a time when the world was very different, the challenges facing the global economy were different and the distribution of economic power was very different. Since then, the world has changed dramatically. There is need to redefine their role to deal with the problems of today. This often calls for changes in their mode of operation and internal governance. Their voting structure also needs to be changed to reflect contemporary reality. They also need more resources to cope with the exceptional volatility in private capital flows which can present severe problems on occasion.

As for putting more money into the IMF, I can assure you that we will do our bit. India does not need IMF funding but we are ready to contribute to IMF resources on the scale required to reflect the rebalancing of quotas we want in favour of developing countries.

FT: What more can India do at home to mitigate the immediate impact of the financial crisis?

MS: We have taken a number of steps to counter the impact of the financial crisis. Fortunately, our banking system is sound and untainted by the kind of toxic assets that have caused problems elsewhere. This is the result of cautious financial regulation. However, the global slowdown has obviously affected our real economy via exports, the investment climate and the withdrawal of capital from emerging markets. Like other countries we have used both monetary policy and fiscal policy to counter the slow down. I think this is having some effect. Our growth rate in the five years ending 2007-08 averaged about 8.8%. In the current year 2008-09, which is just about to end, it will slowdown to less than 7 percent. No one expects the global economy to recover before the end of 2009. So the year 2009-10 will be a difficult year. We will have to continue to rely on an expansionary monetary policy and also on fiscal stimuli. Fortunately, inflation has come down very substantially, giving us more room to act contra-cyclically. We also do not expect problems in managing the balance of payments.

We will have a new government in place following the general elections by the end of May. Our government is very clear on what we will do if we come back to power. We will act in the short run to stimulate the economy to return to our medium growth potential, which is around 9 percent or so. We will do this in a manner which ensures that growth is inclusive. We have focused a great deal on strengthening the part of the economy which most directly helps the poor and they are therefore better insulated from the downturn. We must also continue to focus on infrastructure development.

FT: How can you bridge the $190bn funding gap that stands between India and its infrastructure needs in the short term?

MS: Infrastructure is a priority area for medium term growth in India. We are relying on a combination of public investment plus public private partnership for infrastructure development. The need to give a fiscal stimulus provides an opportunity to expand public investment in infrastructure. The change in the international financial environment does present problems in mobilizing some of the private investment which we had hoped would flow into these sectors. Recognising that the global financial crisis may present short term financing problems, we are taking steps to increase public investment in infrastructure and also to stimulate greater bank lending for infrastructure projects. This is an area where IFI funding can play a crucial bridging role for the next two years.

FT: What was your top achievement as head of the Congress-led government?

MS: Our Government has been able to increase the trajectory of India's economic growth rate to a new high of close to 9.0 per cent while at the same time ensuring that our growth process is more socially and regionally inclusive. Inclusive Growth has been our watchword and that is what we are delivering. We have increased the income of our farming community by ensuring they get better prices. We have increased employment in urban and rural areas, and created the first ever 'rural employment guarantee' programme in the world. This is a safety net that will smoothen the harsh edges of extreme poverty across the country. There has been unprecedented capacity expansion in education. We have taken important initiatives in the area of foreign policy, including a landmark nuclear deal that has dismantled a decades old technology denial regime. It will give a big boost to our energy security and clean energy development programme. I think overall we have much to show both at home and abroad to say that India is a better place and a better nation today than five years ago.

FT: What do you regret most that you did not achieve?

MS: There is a lot to be done to wipe out the last vestiges of economic backwardness, poverty, ignorance and disease in this ancient and great land of ours that has lived through very difficult times for hundreds of years. So there is much more I would have liked to do in all areas. That is what we have dedicated ourselves to doing in years to come.

FT: During Nehru's time caste politics were expected to be on the wane. But in contemporary times they are on the rise and ever more powerful. Is this good for India?

MS: Caste politics is an unfortunate fact of life in our environment where caste identity is important. However the only way of overcoming this is to show that non-caste parties deliver substantial results for those who belong to disadvantaged castes. That is what we are trying to do.

FT: Who are the best role models for young Indians?

MS: Our youth are fortunate today to have a wide variety of role models from the fields of education, science and technology, sports, art and culture, social development and business and enterprise. I find every year there are so many awards being given in so many different fields to the best and brightest. Each one of these awardees is a role model for millions of others. I find this energy and dedication truly inspiring. The diversity of role models in diverse professions adds richness to our social life. India is a society on the move. The energy of our youth is driving this nation to new heights and they seek inspiration from so many great achievers. Some of them in fact live outside India, like the woman astronaut Sunita Williams, an Indian American, who has inspired young girls in our villages to study science. Recently millions of our youth were enthused when our musician A R Rehman got two Oscars for composing music for a British film!

FT: What is the greatest threat to India's security? Is it internal divisions or the external threat of Pakistan?

MS: India is a plural and liberal democracy. What you call 'internal divisions' we see as our plurality and our diversity. There were many in the West who imagined that as a developing country, post-colonial India would not be able to cope with this internal diversity. I think after 60 years we have proved them wrong. We are a functioning constitutional democracy and a secular Republic based on the rule of law. Our internal differences define us, they do not threaten or weaken us. That is why I said India is built on the idea of "unity in diversity", and its experience holds great hope for the people of other multi-cultural, multi-ethnic, multi-lingual and multi-religious nations. Our main security threat is no different from your main security threat. The entire civilized world faces a grave security threat from terrorism.

FT: India's minorities are facing more and more pressure from militant Hindu groups. Has your government done enough to protect minorities?

MS: During our five years in office we have worked to ensure the safety and security of all minorities. In fact many of the terrorist attacks in India were aimed at generating communal conflict. They have failed in achieving this goal. Wherever there have been attacks on one community we have taken action. There are enough correctives in our system.

FT: In your opinion is India a "great power" that can stand up to scrutiny of its internal affairs by the international community? Is India willing to make sacrifices for the good of the world beyond its borders?

MS: I think we have made strides in the past decade or two and the world is taking notice of what India is doing. I cannot claim that we have solutions to all our problems. But we have shown that it is possible for a pluralistic and diverse society to grow and flourish in an open democratic framework. The Indian experience is important for the world. I have great faith in the creativity and imagination of our people to address the challenges that confront us and this can be seen in our growing soft power that is making an impact on the world.

India is deeply conscious of its role in the international arena and we have been seeking a restructuring and reform of the global polity that will allow us to play a commensurate role. I can say with pride that Indians have made sacrifices beyond their borders for the good of the world. Our contribution to UN Peacekeeping Forces is recognized around the world. We have sent our troops to Africa and the Balkans and other parts to protect the lives and property of peoples of other nations. Indian Navy personnel were involved in tsunami relief in the Indian Ocean region. They risk their lives to protect merchant vessels from pirates in the Indian Ocean region and in South China Seas.

FT: India has been criticised for not doing enough on climate change. Is there really a serious lack of commitment to curb emissions?

MS: India currently has one of the lowest per capita emissions among large major economies including major emerging economies at 1.8 tonnes of CO<sub>2</sub> per annum. The US figure is over 20 tonnes. Even in total volume terms, India's emissions constitute only 4 percent of the global figure whereas the US and China are responsible for over 20 percent each. This is the result of India consciously pursuing a path of sustainable development and reducing the energy intensity and therefore the carbon intensity of its growth. Over the past decade our economy has grown by 9 percent per annum while energy use has increased by 4 percent per annum.

As one of the countries likely to be impacted most by Climate Change, India has every reason to contribute to an effective global response to this challenge. These criticisms are based on inadequate appreciation of our position. India is engaged actively in the negotiations under the UNFCCC to ensure an ambitious but also a fair and equitable outcome at Copenhagen. We are very conscious of the need for taking action on climate change and this is reflected in our National Action Plan for Climate Change. It was our confidence in our ability to ensure an ecologically sustainable path of growth which has enabled me to pledge on behalf of India that even as our emissions increase in the short term we will ensure that our per capita emissions will never exceed that of the average of developed countries. This is a very significant commitment.

210. Briefing by Foreign Secretary on Prime Minister Dr Manmohan Singh's visit to London for G-20 Financial Summit.

New Delhi, March 30, 2009.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon and welcome to the briefing by Foreign Secretary on the eve of Prime Minister's visit to London for the G-20 Financial Summit. After his opening remarks Foreign Secretary will be taking a few questions. Let me also introduce my colleague Mr. J.S. Mukul, Joint Secretary (ER&TC).

Foreign Secretary (Shri Shivshankar Menon): Mukul is also one of the sous-Sherpas for the G-20 process. That is why he is here. I thought I would brief you on the PM's visit to the UK to the meeting of G-20 leaders in London. But before that there was something I wanted to give you about the situation in Lahore.

We, the Government of India, are deeply saddened and shocked by the events in Lahore. We hope that the Pakistan authorities will be able to resolve the situation soon with a minimum loss of life. Our sympathies and condolences go out to the families of those who have been killed. Terrorism is a menace to the entire region.

About the G-20 leaders' meeting, as you know Prime Minister will be leaving tomorrow for London. He will be in London on the first and the second, and will return on the third. He is accompanied by a senior delegation which includes Deputy-Chairman, Planning Commission, and Mr. Montek Singh Ahluwalia, who is the Sherpa for the G-20 process from India.

In London, the Summit programme starts with the reception by Her majesty the Queen on the first, which is followed by a dinner by the Prime Minister of the UK for the visiting G-20 leaders. On the second of April, there is an intense programme which starts with the Leaders' Breakfast Meeting followed by Summit Plenaries in the morning, Leaders' Lunch; and then another Plenary in the afternoon. Prime Minister will also be having a bilateral meeting with Prime Minister Brown of the UK on the first, and a separate bilateral meeting with President Obama of the US on the second of April. He will, as I said, return to India on the third (of April).

I presume you know the names of the countries in the G-20 and if necessary we will circulate that. By way of background, the G-20 came into existence in 1999 following the Asian Financial Crisis. It was essentially an informal forum of major developed countries and major emerging economies representing anywhere between 85 to 90 per cent of world GDP together. It was a forum which met at the Finance Ministers, Governors of Central Bank level consistently until the financial crisis and the economic crisis which began in 2007.

Last year, there was the first meeting of the leaders of the G-20 in Washington on November 15. That was when the leaders actually agreed on a Declaration, which I am sure you have seen, which spoke of a common understanding of the root causes of the global crisis, spoke of common principles for reforming financial markets, spoke of the launch of an action plan to implement those principles and reaffirm their commitment to free market principles and opposition to protectionism.

The Washington Summit had mandated follow-up work in several areas - in strengthening transparency and accountability, enhancing sound regulation, in promoting integrity in financial markets, in reinforcing international cooperation, and in reforming international financial institutions. Work on these was conducted in four Working Groups. India participated in all of them and actually co-chaired the First Working Group with Canada. Rakesh Mohan, the Deputy Governor of the Reserve Bank, was our nominee on that.

Working Group-1 was on enhancing sound regulation and strengthening transparency. Working Group-2 was on reinforcing international cooperation and promoting integrity in financial markets. Working Group-3 was on reforming the IMF. Working Group-4 was on the World Bank and other multilateral development banks. All four of the Working Groups have done their work; they have produced reports; they have made a set of recommendations; all of which were considered by the Finance Ministers two weeks ago and will now come to the Summit.

What will happen is that the Sherpas will meet again and the Finance Ministers on the first (of April), just before the Summit in London. So, the preparatory process is still going on. Besides, I do not want to here start telling you about outcomes when they have not completed even the preparatory process, let alone the Summit has not happened yet. But what we would expect really from the London Summit - and these are really expectations, not so much the outcomes, which will have to await the end of the preparatory process and the leaders' meetings where they will discuss these things - is that once they have reviewed the international economic situation and what has been recommended to them that there would be a set of regulatory measures for efficient and effective supervision and oversight of the financial and economic system, I am sure that individual countries will also brief on their national stimulus packages and what they intend to do to promote economic recovery and to reverse the recession in those countries where there is recession.

The area where we would like to see action is really against protectionism in various forms, which we consider is very important. This was agreed in the Washington Summit. But it is something that will have to be taken forward since we have seen both the crisis deepen and a series of steps by several countries which to our mind appear protectionist.

The other area that we attach considerable importance to is reform of the international financial institutions. There are some suggestions which have already come from the Working Groups and which have been approved by the Finance Ministers. For instance, expanding the membership of the FSF (the Financial Stability Forum) or of the Basel Committee in which India and other emerging economies will now be members. But there are other steps as well, including steps like increasing the ability of the IMF, the World Bank and regional development banks like the ADB, to deal with crises like these to respond the needs of developing countries in particular.

There is general agreement on increasing the amount of resources available to these institutions but the manner of doing so and how quickly it can be done, I think those are still issues which will need to be discussed and resolved. There is also agreement, for instance, on bringing forward the reallocation of quotas to January 2011. The Finance Ministers announced this on the 14th of March. But we will have to see how that works out in detail.

One issue which we think and which we will be highlighting is really the need in dealing with the effects of the crisis and in dealing with both the financial aspects and the economic recovery to ensure that development is not a victim. That is because some of the worst sufferers from the crisis, from the drying up of trade finance, of other forms of finance, have really been developing countries, smaller developing countries. That is something that, I think, will be addressed during the Summit. These are really the themes - if one has to look for outcomes, for what matters, what we would measure the Summit against - these are the issues that we would be looking at.

I would expect that the Summit would also produce a Declaration or an outcome document, but work is continuing. So, as I said, I do not want to jump the gun and say what we think will come out at the end. We will brief you right through the process both on the way there and after the Summit as well.

I would be happy to answer any questions which you might have.

Question: Sir, you have just spoken about the meeting with Mr. Obama on the sidelines and with Mr. Brown on the sidelines of the Summit. What is going to be the crux of discussion with Obama? Is it only protectionism which will be discussed or will it discuss things beyond that? Secondly, the Opposition Leader Mr. Advani yesterday raised the matter of the money stashed in Swiss banks and asked the Prime Minister to take up this matter saying that because of the recession all over this money could be used for different purposes and maybe for the infrastructure and all those things. Is the Prime Minister going to take up this matter as has been demanded?

Foreign Secretary: On the meeting between the Prime Minister and President Obama, I think it is our expectation that they will naturally discuss some of the issues that come up in the Summit - the question of world economic crisis and how we are both dealing with it. But certainly, as this is their first meeting, this will also be an opportunity to discuss our bilateral relationship - what this Administration has already called a true strategic stand-alone global partnership. So, they will discuss the bilateral relationship and how we take that forward. I am sure there will be other regional, global issues that will come up. ... (interruption)... That is among the regional issues that will come up I am sure.

On the question of money in Swiss banks and in various countries which have nondisclosure policies in place, this is an issue which has been discussed at considerable detail in the preparatory process. It is not only the question of money in Swiss banks. There are other countries, other banking systems which also were very careful about revealing where the money is from and so on. There is general agreement both in the institutions concerned - for instance in the FSF, Basel Committee - and in the G-20 preparatory process that there is a need for much more open disclosure and that there will be much easier access to this information for certain purposes, especially if there is any question of this money being linked to either illegal functions or anything like that. So, we will work for greater transparency in the system because frankly we think it is also an economic good quite apart from any other advantages that one might see in that. We have urged much greater transparency, and we think that at the end of this process there will be much greater transparency in these cases.

Question: Sir, in the wake of the attack that has happened in Pakistan today, the Interior Minister has said that the same Jihadi groups could be behind the attack. What is India's assessment of the situation right now?

Foreign Secretary: I think it is too early for us to comment on who did it how and so on. It is still under way. Let the Pakistan authorities investigate and look into it. We will tell you when we are in a position to come to conclusions. But now it is too early.

Question: All the recommendations, or what India seeks seem to be medium-term to long-term issues. Aren't there any discussions to resolve the immediate crisis at hand, for instance easing credit and so on?

Foreign Secretary: I think you need to draw a distinction between what the function of G-20 is and what the function of national governments is. As national government certainly we will take immediate steps to deal with what we face. Easing of credit for instance is something that might be discussed at a policy level but the ultimate decisions will be taken by individual national governments. So, the discussion will be at a policy level rather than saying, "Okay, this is a level at which you will peg." I think it is quite clear. We all feel that there is a need to increase aggregate demand in the global economy. I think that is agreed.

Question: But the other discussion which is more short-term is getting stimulus packages....

Foreign Secretary: Exactly what I am saying. There is a need to increase aggregate demand which is what a stimulus package is meant for. How do you choose to do that? Some economies might have exhausted fiscal, monetary measures; some might not. Some might already be at very low rates of interest. Some, like us, might be in a position to cut some rates of interest. We still have space for fiscal manoeuvre and monetary manoeuvre. So, as I said, the actual measures will be a matter of national decision. But there is certainly consensus across the board that you do need to boost aggregate global demand. That is something that I am sure they will discuss and they will also see how they can encourage each other to do that.

Question: Mr. Menon, this is about the Prime Minister's scheduled meeting with Mr. Obama. Is India rethinking on the question of signing the CTBT? Is that likely to figure in the talks between the Prime Minister and Mr. Obama?

Foreign Secretary: Our position on CTBT has been repeated several times, most recently in Washington by Special Envoy Shyam Saran. Position remains the same. We would not stand in the way. What we want is a CTBT which actually contributes to disarmament. That linkage is very important for us right from the beginning when we started advocating a CTBT long before anybody else did. We are not sure that this treaty does so, at least in its present form. But let us see where this goes. Other countries have changed their positions on the CTBT. We are still watching the process. Our position is clear. It remains the same. Hasn't changed. But clearly other countries' views are evolving. We will see where that goes. On whether it will come up or not, nothing prevents it from coming up. But I have no reason to say, "Yes, it will" or "No, it won't". I cannot tell you that yet.

Question: Sir, what is our response to the Af-Pak policy unveiled by President Obama a few days ago, specifically with regard to the regional cooperation which he talks about in terms of setting up a contact group where India will be one of the players, and also giving large amount of aid to Pakistan - some 7.5 billion dollars over the years and more is on the way? Is our Prime Minister going to take up the issue with President Obama?

Foreign Secretary: I think the situation in the region including what happens in Afghanistan and what is happening in Pakistan will certainly come up during discussions. As far as this comprehensive strategic review of US's policy which is in the process of being rolled out and being discussed also at various fora, we welcome the very clear expression of will to carry through the struggle against extremism in Afghanistan and its roots in Pakistan, which is contained in the new comprehensive US strategy. India has a direct interest in the success of this international effort. And India is ready to play a constructive role as a responsible power in defeating extremism of all kinds.

Question: President Asif Zardari has recently expressed Pakistan's desire to restart the Composite Dialogue with India. What is India's reaction?

Foreign Secretary: I think it is quite clear that in the present situation what we are looking at is bringing the perpetrators of the terrorist attacks in Mumbai to justice, and credible action to dismantle the infrastructure of terrorism in Pakistan, from which Mumbai and various other attacks on India have taken place in the past. We are waiting.

Question: My first question is a follow-up of the Swiss bank question that was asked sometime back. The US has filed a lawsuit asking for details of American citizens who have accounts in Swiss banks. Is India looking at doing something on the similar lines? My second question, there is a problem with the Western banks lending out to developing countries like India. Is this issue likely to come up in G-20?

Foreign Secretary: On the first question I cannot give you a categorical answer yet. I think we are looking at it. I do not think we have come to a final decision yet on how we do it, which is the best way to approach it. But as I tried to say to you earlier, it is more than just a question of Swiss banks. I think it is a broader issue of transparency and access to information.

On the question on Western banks, the problem is a broader problem. It is not just straight finance but it is various other kinds of liquidity in the banking system. Both at Washington and in the subsequent meetings we have been pressing - frankly we have all been pressing, it is not only India or other developing countries or emerging economies, we have all been pressing including the developed countries - for bank lending to start flowing again as it used to. If you look at the figures now, contraction has been really quite drastic. So, one of the steps and one of the big working groups actually on restoring confidence in the financial system, one of their big tasks is really to make sure that the conditions exist for that flow to start again. This is very important for us. We think it is very important to get the world economy going, equally to get trade going again in the world which for the first time in many many years is shrinking this year. As I said, it is essential for development as well. So, this is one of the outcomes that we would be looking for.

Question: Will the issue of terrorism form part of the Prime Minister's address to G-20?

Foreign Secretary: It is not strictly speaking part of the agenda of the G-20. In these two G-20 meetings, leaders have actually been meeting in order to address specifically the financial crisis and the world economic crisis. I think that pretty much fills their plate. In the other broader conversations on the sidelines of the Summit, I am sure terrorism is one of the issues that will figure.

Question: Obama spoke of constructive diplomacy to bring down tensions between India and Pakistan. How do you see that? And, is there any meeting slated with the Chinese?

Foreign Secretary: The two bilateral meetings that we have slated are these two right now because there really is not much time. So, these are the two that we have scheduled. There will be other conversations, what we call pull-asides, because they will all be there together for a considerable length of time. But, that I cannot predict at this stage. On the issue of constructive diplomacy our views have been quite clear. On how the India-Pakistan process has been most successful when it has been bilateral. It is very hard for any external influence to substitute or to replace an absence of political will intrinsic to the process itself. It takes two hands to clap, and you know getting hands from elsewhere really does not help. We have actually been most productive and we have made the most progress - if you look at the period between the middle of 2003 and until about the end of 2006 - actually when we did it ourselves. I think that is an important lesson to learn for the future.

Question: Already there are subgroups that are forming within the G-20 with UK and USA on one side, continental Europe on the other, China standing singularly, and developing nations on one side. There are already barriers. Lula is saying that it is a white and blue-eyed people who have caused this crisis. Do you really see a common solution emerging out of this?

Foreign Secretary: As I said, this represents about 85 per cent to 90 per cent of world GDP, depending on whose figures you use. Unless we act together, we are not going to solve a crisis of global proportions and of such depths. It is something quite unprecedented since the Second World War. I do not see us being able to solve it unless we act together. So, I would assume that while we might have differences in tactics, in approach - each one might stress different portions of what we would like to see done - but ultimately our common interest will override these differences. There will be differences. That is what the whole point of sitting around the table is. It is to sort out of these differences because we each come from our own situations. Each of us naturally will see parts of the solutions much more important for themselves. But ultimately I would assume that our common interest in getting the world economy going again, and fixing the financial system would override these differences because none of us can do it alone, none of us. And certainly, if we each chase individual solutions of our own preference, nothing will happen. The problem would not be solved. So, in that sense I am more of an optimist.

Question: Just a follow up on that, Sir. In ...(inaudible)... of meeting you cannot do that. There are already things going on right now.

Foreign Secretary: But this is why the whole preparatory process is important. If we can get a lot of the detail out of the way in the preparatory process - which is what the Working Groups have done, Finance Ministers have done - then really at the Summit level you can concentrate on the big issues, and on, in a sense, unifying thinking so that at the end of it you emerge with a much clearer idea of what is possible, what can be done, what is likely to be done.

Question: I would like you to take you back to Pakistan, Mr. Menon. Since 26/11 India has had a consistent position. I know the investigations into today's attack in Lahore* and the operations there are not yet over. But India has had a consistent position that there are elements in the Pakistan State that believe in using terror as an instrument of state policy. Would you continue to say that that is the Indian stand today also because will that wash on the world stage today when attacks in Pakistan are mounting at such a pace?

Foreign Secretary: We have an attack today, which is clearly a terrorist attack, which is now what seven hours old? I do not think anybody should jump to conclusions about who did it, how it is done, why; or should, therefore, then go to even bigger conclusions about describing the nature of the relationship between terrorist elements in Pakistan and parts of the Pakistan establishment. I mean those are huge conclusions to draw on an absolute absence of information. So, I will be very careful before jumping to all the conclusions that you have mentioned on the basis of what happened today. Our basic judgment and assessment is based on our experience over several years, in fact over decades, and over what we have seen. So, it is not going to waver from day to day. This is not something that changes with the weather or with one event or the other. We will have to see. And let us see. Before we jump to conclusions about what happened in Lahore today and how it affects our assessment, let it play itself out and let us see who actually did it and how it was done and why it was done as well.

Question: Mr. Menon, on G-20 a lot of what we have heard from the Indian side in the public domain has been rather defensive, that we are looking to fight against protectionism. I am just wondering what our views are on certain ideas that have come up. For example, the People's Bank of China Chairman had spoken about the need to move away from the dollar standard and have greater reliance on SDRs. Does India have a position on these kinds of changes?

* In a terrorist attack on the Police training school near Lahore eight trainees were killed, 95 injured and number of them were taken hostage. The Pakistani security forces succeeded in taking control of the training school after a grim eight-hour gun battle. The training school at Manawan is a mere 10 km from the Wagah border with India.

Foreign Secretary: If you look at what Prime Minister said at the first meeting in Washington, we had spoken about the use of SDRs, about the need to greatly increase the numbers of SDRs and to allocate SDRs so that in effect I think we are all addressing the same problem. We see not just a liquidity problem, a temporary and a shortage of credit as somebody said there. But we also see the problem of what the kinds of stimulus packages that we are talking about, the effects that that will have on currencies, on exchange rates and on reserves ultimately. So, I think there are larger issues here which we are all grappling with. I think many of us have ideas, some of which have been expressed in the public domain, some in the course in the course of the preparatory process since we were very involved in the preparatory process at all levels. I think most of our work has been done there. Maybe that is why you have this impression. But yes, I think we need to look at several imaginative, innovative ideas and ways of dealing with these problems. There are issues here which are I think unprecedented. I do not think we have had some of these issues in global economic discourse for a very long time. So, the more ideas, the better. I am not sure that the Summit is the place to actually deal with big new ideas. I think the way to do it is exactly as is happening now. Many new ideas out in the public, in the open; a lot of detailed discussion in preparatory meetings; and then to see levels of comfort, what is feasible what can actually be implemented, because I think people have to get used to these ideas and their implications. I do not these are the kinds of ideas that this Summit, and certainly not this meeting, will take decisions about.

Question: On Pakistan, what is the metric that we are looking at following which you could conceive of a resumption of dialogue? Are we looking at a trial beginning, extradition? When you say 'shut down the infrastructure', can you be more concrete?

Foreign Secretary: We have always avoided setting down timeframes.

Question: I am asking for a metric.

Foreign Secretary: I am not setting down concrete markers. Whichever word you use, ultimately it is the same thing you are asking for. Metric is a fine word. But basically you are saying, "What is your marker, at what stage do you think?" We have made it quite clear. What we expect is credible action against terrorism. Now you will say that it is subjective. Yes, but it has to be credible in our view. Unless we think it is credible, it is not going to be worth it. We want to see credible action against the infrastructure of terrorism in Pakistan. We want to see the perpetrators brought to justice. At that level of generality, I think everybody knows what we mean. Rather than quibbling about whether that involves filing a charge-sheet, or taking them to court, or finishing the prosecution, or sentencing, or judgment, I would rather not get into that.

Question: On CTBT, Sir, you have half-used a phrase that we have not heard from the Gol since 1998, that 'India will not stand in the way'. Could you complete that sentence? Not stand in the way of what?

Foreign Secretary: That is it. We would not stand in the way.

Question: Does it mean India has an open mind?

Foreign Secretary: That is not what I said. No, we cannot because we have a position and it has been consistent. So, it is not an open mind.

Question: A follow-up on the question on international currency to replace the dollar which the People's Bank of China talked about. Subsequently, Russia also said the same thing. China and Russia said that India also has a similar position. Does India have a position on a currency to replace the dollar? Has India thought about it?

Foreign Secretary: Here we have a much more open mind, since you want the phrase finally. As I said, there is a real problem here which needs to be addressed. This is one of the possible ways of addressing this problem. The Chinese are pragmatic people, they have come up with a very specific solution. But I think what solution ultimately the international community adopts will depend on a lot of us, on everybody feeling comfortable with the solution. We will need to work this out among ourselves. We had recognized the need for a solution, to work out a solution, in November in Washington itself. If you look at what PM had said at that stage, he had spoken of the need for a major increase in SDR allocations, of how we should address this problem. So, I think if you go back there you will see that we tried to start this discussion, we identified the problems. I do not think we are at the stage today where either the G-20, or in fact the larger international community is ready to say, "That is the solution that we all want." Not yet. We still need to go through a lot more discussion and reiteration of the problem, I think.

Question: Going back to Pakistan, while the US has been talking about its new policy on Afghan and Pakistan and talking about civilian reconstruction, will we be raising the issue of military aid to Pakistan in any way? Has our position on that changed in any way? And, while Washington expects us to play a role in the region, what is it that we expect of Washington vis-à-vis Islamabad?

Foreign Secretary: We have made it quite clear that for us the links between the Pakistani establishment and terrorist elements is what really causes us concern. So, anything that anybody can do to cut those links, and to persuade Pakistan of its own interest in fighting terrorism and these extremist groups, we would welcome. We have an ongoing conversation with the US, with other friends around the world, where we tell them what we think, what our approach is; which is when we tell them, how we see this evolving. So far I have no reason to believe that people do not accept our diagnosis of the problem. This is important because increasingly it is clear what the problem is. Different countries might have different approaches to how to solve the problem. But that is a different issue. And that is something that I think is normal in the circumstances. We will naturally continue these conversations. I think Mr. Holbrooke wants to come here in early April. So, we are looking forward to that. And we will tell him again what we think.

Question: The subject is G-20. Sir, we are observing a lot of statements and counter-statements of leaders. In spite of that, is India in favour of some global fiscal regulation policy to correct the recession, like the two per cent cut in the GDP somebody objected but the US is in favour of that. So, is there any possibility, is there any effort to reach a global fiscal regulation policy at the Summit?

Foreign Secretary: I think PM was one of the first to say last year itself, long before even the Washington meeting, that what was seen now by way of crisis is a result of both regulatory failure and a failure of surveillance that is supposed to have taken place in the international system. In fact in Washington in November, he spoke of what needs to be done to do that. Now, there are several ways of improving the regulatory system. One is to strengthen national regulation in different ways. The other is to agree a set of international guidelines, standards, benchmarks, which all national regulations will have to meet, or at least to internationally devise a set. The third would be some form of different regulatory functions being brought, some to international level, some at national levels. There are many possibilities of how you do this, how you strengthen the regulatory mechanisms. Most important is to bring all similar activities - by whatever, by hedge funds, by banks, by whoever is involved in these, whoever is dealing in derivatives for instance, in various forms of derivatives - to bring them all into a regulated sector, rather than what actually happened over two or three years which was for most of these derivatives to actually trade risk off on to non-regulated sectors, which has what led to the mess. So, I think that is exactly what has been done in the Working Groups, in the meeting of Finance Ministers, to discuss these issues through. We hope that at the end of the Summit you will hear much more clarity on this, on the regulatory aspects. This is important because if we want to restore confidence and stability into the world financial system, it is very important. Regulation, I think is one of the highest priorities that we will see. So, that we will work for very strongly.

Question: Sir, you mentioned earlier that India expected action on the issue of protectionism. Could you elaborate on that a bit? And also what do you make of the accusations or allegations which have been made India is also very protectionist and that they are ...(inaudible)... placed to be asking for less protectionism from the developed countries.

Foreign Secretary: We do not think we are protectionist. I do not think there is anything we have done which is non-WTO compliant. I do not think that is the issue. Obviously, each country will define protectionism in ways that suit it. But what we have seen not just in terms of a contraction in market but also in terms of various conditions which are attached to recovery packages, stimulus packages and recovery programmes, which favour national firms in Government procurement for instance or which try to limit the movement of natural persons - whether Mode-1, Mode4 - in all these I think we have seen a clear increase in protectionist sentiment and certainly there is much more demand for protectionist steps in several developed economies. That is something that we feel the Summit has a role in opposing. At Washington everybody agreed that there should not be an increase in protectionism. I think everybody realizes that in a sense that would be suicidal for the world economy. That is exactly what happened in the 30s. People put up protectionist barriers. It only hastened and deepened the depression. I think everybody recognizes that has an intellectual construct. But the question really and the trick is how to make that happen in practice. And that is why we think that this G-20 process has been useful because it has given us a chance to discuss all this, not just at the Finance Minister's level but in the Working Groups and in other meetings in the preparatory process. If we can, we would like to see a very strong statement coming out of the leaders eschewing protectionist steps.

Question: Sir, there are reports about your computers in Washington being hacked into by the Chinese. How correct is that report and how safe are your computers worldwide?

Foreign Secretary: We have been through this before. There are a series of attacks against computers. The report that you are mentioning is the one done by a set of Canadian scholars. That itself says that there were attacks mounted on computers in a 103 countries; that of the four servers from which the attacks were mounted three were in China, one was in the US; and that there is no proof to link this to governmental activity in China or in the US. We assume that - and this has happened to us before, we have discussed this - there will be attempts to attack our computers, to hack into them and so on. We do what we can and what we need to prevent it; or even if it does happen, to make sure that the consequences are non-catastrophic and that actually the consequences are minimized to the extent that we can. So, we take both defensive and other measures to try and deal with this. But this is a reality of a world where we all depend on cyberspace. We all use cyberspace. It is open to everybody - good, bad, whatever. Malware is out there. You have a problem as much as we do. I think the media has this problem as well. We have had e-mail identities stolen of some of our personnel and then used. This is a reality of today's life. But we will do whatever we can to minimize the effects of this and to counter it wherever it comes from.

Question: This is about Mr. Obama's strategy for Pakistan and Afghanistan. Mr. Obama wants India and Pakistan to work together to sort out the hassles in the region including China, Russia and so on. Considering the Pakistanis sensitivities about India's active involvement in Afghanistan's reconstruction, is that a workable proposition? What is your take on that? Secondly, the NATO forces are looking for an alternative supply route to Afghanistan and Iran says that it is now ready to let India and others use Chabahar to Afghanistan. Are we likely to use that route for our exports to Afghanistan and Central Asia? How do you look at the possibility of that route being used for NATO supplies to Afghanistan?

Foreign Secretary: I am not quite sure what you expect on the first question. As I said, we are ready to play a constructive role as a responsible power in the region in defeating extremism of all kinds. That is the goal of the strategy. We are ready to work with the US, with other regional powers, to see how we that. On other people's sensitivities, what might happen, could it happen, I am not an astrologer. This is not my business. We will do what we have to in our own interest, in our national interest. On the Chabahar route, yes, it is available. It is now feasible now that we have done the Zaranj-Delaram road in Afghanistan. We would welcome people using it because we did after all make a sizeable investment both in terms of money but more important in terms of lives in building that road. We think it is important. It seems to have helped to generate a fair amount of economic activity in Nimroz province and around in southwest Afghanistan. In fact the town itself has grown from 50,000 to a 100,000 people just in the last two years as the road was being built thanks to the economic activity that the road has generated. But it is more than that. I think it is a linkage to Chabahar port. We will be very happy to see that. This was one of the subjects that we discussed with the Iranians when Mr. Jalili was here on Saturday. It is something that we are both looking forward to seeing used.

Question: Sir, can you give us the latest information on India's humanitarian assistance to Sri Lanka? Secondly, Indian Prime Minister's Principal Secretary has visited Colombo and come back. Can you give us the update on his visit? Did he meet any dignitaries there?

Foreign Secretary: Yes, he had a very good visit. The Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister met with his counterpart who is the Secretary to the President. He also called on the President. There were three main purposes to this visit. One was to urge upon the Government of Sri Lanka that they take steps towards a credible devolution and a political package which could be seen as contributing to meeting the needs of all the communities in Sri Lanka, particularly the Tamil community and to bring them into the normal political democratic framework; and secondly to see what we could do for reconstruction, rehabilitation in the North especially. We had a fairly detailed discussion of that. Thirdly, to see what we could do on the humanitarian side, which you have mentioned. As you know, we have increased the size of the hospital because of the numbers of people who were coming out. Now I think almost something like 55,000 civilians have come out of the conflict zone and this hospital has been treating fairly large numbers of people in each batch. So, we had to increase its capacity. We have also shipped a new shipment of medicines, end of last week. And we have also got food supplies into the conflict zone both through the ICRC and the UN. This was important because supplies of food into the conflict zone in February had actually dropped considerably because of the fighting. So, we thought it very important that we get it there. You would have seen recent statements by the Government of Sri Lanka that they are ready to work out modalities including a pause of some kind if necessary, to allow civilians to come out of the conflict zone and to bring them out of harm's way. We would welcome that.

As you know, our Minister has said so last month already. He had said publicly that we would welcome that. And we would hope that there is progress towards bringing remaining civilians out of the conflict zone so that at least this kind of situation where each side is blaming the other but civilian casualties continue and where we then have to deal with the consequences in the hospitals, in terms of rehabilitation is avoided, and we can then concentrate on the big job of actually getting people back into normal activity and a normal political life in Northern Sri Lanka. So, all in all we were very heartened by the results of the Principal Secretary's visit. It was a very useful visit.

Question: Are you planning to send more doctors?

Foreign Secretary: We have sent more doctors actually last week to the field hospital.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.

Foreign Secretary: Thank you.

211. Interview of the Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission Montek Singh Ahluwalia with the Hindu.

New Delhi, March 31, 2009.

[Planning Commission Deputy Chairman Montek Singh Ahluwalia left early on Monday for London for the preparatory sherpa meeting ahead of the G-20 summit of Heads of State on April 2, which is to be attended by Prime Minister Manmohan Singh.

In an exclusive interview with The Hindu prior to his departure, Mr Ahluwalia spoke at length on issues pertaining to the global financial crisis, the steps that need to be taken to combat the resultant slowdown and India's expectations from the summit.]

Q: What is the backdrop of the G20 London summit?

A: The summit is taking place at a time when there is global crisis of extraordinary magnitude, the worst in 60 years. I think all the leaders understand that the summit's aim is to look at the global economic situation, to review what has been achieved in the areas identified in November last year when they met in Washington and, may be, to give some messages on what should be done in future.

Q: What is India's expectation from the summit?

A: Obviously, we are interested in all the different elements of the global crisis which needs a global response. India is one of the 20 countries which represent about 70 per cent of the world GDP and we hope the summit comes out with a global message which meets our expectations. We need a revival of the global economy, we need the financial system in industrialised countries to get fixed as soon as possible, without which it is difficult to envisage a revival of confidence. We think that the global community needs to take some special measures to make sure that the developing countries are helped at a time when a crisis that was not of their making is having a very severe effect on them.

The whole shrinkage of private capital flows from emerging markets is massive, something like US$ 700 billion. Obviously, this will have an adverse effect on growth of many developing countries and I think that this withdrawal of capital has occurred not because of anything that has gone wrong in developing countries but because the financial systems in the industrialised countries malfunctioned. So the global community needs to take corrective steps so that some revival of capital flows takes place till the multilateral institutions step in. There is also the larger issue of financial architecture. We need to make sure that in a globally integrated world where a crisis in one part of the system can affect the whole world, we should have a global governance framework that can anticipate such crises and then take corrective action.

Q: From the Indian perspective, what should be the ingredients of these special measures?

A: First of all, it is very important that a coordinated effort is made by all major economies, including India, to take steps to de-lever the crisis. Since this is a period when governments have to actively intervene, it is our view that both monetary and fiscal policy should be actively used to restore growth momentum. On our own front, we would certainly tell the assembled leaders that we are doing what is necessary. We have had a major relaxation of monetary policy, we have had a major fiscal stimulus, we have tried to make sure that the more vulnerable sections of our population get an adequate flow of support through the NREG programme and we would like to see the rest of the world also take steps to stimulate their economies.

Secondly, I think it is very important that the global economies remain open. We are very concerned that there are protectionist noises being made and I want to emphasise that we must distinguish between a protectionist noise and actual protectionist action. The fact is that a protectionist noise actually gets converted into action unless there is a strong political leadership. When the leaders met in Washington in November, they had said that we must have a 'standstill' agreement -- in the absence of an agreement on the Doha Round -- that we will not increase protectionism. Actually, every country has taken some action but, by and large, the protectionist actions taken have been minor.

But protectionist pressures are rising and we are very concerned, for example, over financial protectionism. We support the fact that industrialised countries are trying to save their banking system. So when the banking sector has problems, we have to recapitalise banks. But some governments have said that one of the conditions of recapitalising is that they will preferentially increase domestic lending.

This is protectionist. As a result, trade finance has dried up as banks are focusing on their own home turf. This hurts developing countries because if they have an incentive not to lend to trade, then I think trade will decline. So we are opposed to that.

Then finally, I think in the area of multilateral institutions, we can increase the flow of resources to developing countries through institutions like the IMF and the World Bank. Fortunately, India has no intention of going to the IMF as our reserves are very ample. But for developing countries as a whole, it's very important that the IMF is adequately financed. The present position is that the IMF's total resources are $ 250 billion, which is exactly equal to India's foreign exchange reserves. Now how can the IMF solve the problems of the world if its resources are equal to only India's reserves? On the one hand it tells you that India is very adequately protected, but it also certainly tells you that the IMF is not adequately funded. So we want more of that.

Q: What about funding of regional development banks?

A: We are very keen that regional development banks should increase their lending at this time when countries are experiencing a withdrawal of private capital. I think the multilateral institutions should step in, may be temporarily, to offset this outflow. The ADB, for example, has a long-standing demand to increase its capital by 200 per cent in order to support higher levels of lending. India is very keen to do that. So are the Japanese and other countries in Asia are in favour of it and we have to see whether we can get endorsement by the summit. So I think on all these fronts, we need to find ways of finding more resources.

The US Treasury Secretary had said that the IMF needs an additional $ 500 billion, which is almost a trebling of its resources. That is more or less our estimate also. In Davos in January this year, when an official spokesman of the IMF said that they needed a doubling from $ 250 billion to $ 500 billion, we said that IMF needed a trebling of resources to $ 750 billion. One of the issues that comes up is that how does it get these resources. Do you just borrow them in an ad hoc manner which is a temporary solution or do you increase the IMF quota. And if you increase the IMF quota, how do you rebalance the voting share, because you could follow a rule or a formula for the additional quota which is different from the existing share and that would help to rebalance. We think that should be done so that the emerging market countries which have gained in their position in the global markets have their economic strength reflected in their voting share.

Q: But what about a greater voice for developing countries?

A: We have been arguing for a greater voice for developing countries in most of the fora where critical decisions are made. One of the key issues in the financial crisis is -- what are going to be the supervisory and regulatory rules imposed on the financial system of the world to make it less vulnerable to crisis. The international regulatory forum for banking supervision is the Basel Committee and there is the Financial Stability Forum (FSF) which brings the different groups together.

In the past, India has not been a member of these and we had argued that the group should be broad-based. There is already success in that because the FSF has been expanded and the countries in the G20, which were earlier not a part of the forum, have been made members. There are two groups, the BRIC countries have been brought in on the same level as the G7 in terms of number of seats. The non-BRIC G20 countries have been brought in a second tier. Similarly, the Basel Committee has also been expanded and India is now included. I think these are important systemic changes which democratise the system.

At the Finance Ministers' meeting, it was agreed that the heads of both the World Bank and the IMF should no longer be a closed selection process in which there is some informal understanding that the World Bank head will be an American and the IMF head will be a European. Rather it should be an open competitive system. Obviously, the bigger countries will have a larger say because they have a larger voting power, but the process will be open and all the countries will vote for their preferred candidate.

Q: What about the differences in perception on the corrective steps required? The US is banking more on fiscal stimulus packages but the European countries want stricter financial regulation...What is India's stand in this regard?

A: India's position on this is very clear. First of all, these are two separate issues. There is the issue of what you do with the global economy today and the issue of how do you regulate the financial system so that these kinds of problems do not happen in future. We are quite clear that we need to act on both fronts. We need to do something to take care of the global situation today, but we also need to change the system of regulation and improve it.

I think there is a lot of agreement among different countries that the perimeter of regulation should be expanded. We should cut out regulatory arbitrage. Shadow banks which were doing the same thing as banks, particularly in the United States and also in Europe, should be subjected to similar regulation. Otherwise, you are basically legitimising an area for non-regulatory activity by institutions that become very large. This is not a very serious problem at all in India because the non-banking sector is still very small. But in the US, the non-banking sector is as big as the banking sector.

As you know, we have ourselves internally been very cautious, but we are certainly in favour of more effective international regulation and particularly for systemically important institutions which operate across borders because it is these institutions that can transmit contagion from one part of the world to another part of the world. I don't think the Americans dispute that either. You may occasionally have differences over how much regulation, but even the Europeans say they want more regulation but regulation should not kill innovation. The Europeans perhaps want tighter regulation on hedge funds; the Americans feel that the problem was not because of hedge funds, it was because of leveraging and the leveraging was done by regulated institutions. So they are more in favour of registering hedge funds and getting more information, but these are matters of detail.

There is complete agreement that we need stricter regulation as the present system of regulation and supervision has been shown to be inadequate. I do not think that the US has any different view. We need a better system, but what that better system is going to be has already been fixed by the leaders and it will go back to the regulators, Basel Committee and others. It's the regulators that will then determine as to what is the global standard that we should aim at. Now one good development is that we are part of that system because we are now represented. It is not as if some G7 regulator will come up with a solution and we have to implement it. We are part of finding the global consensus.

Even when the global consensus is determined, regulation will be national. National regulatory authorities will be looking at the global standards while allowing their own regulation as global regulation. In the case of systemically important institutions which operate across borders, there is, I think, agreement that we should have some sort of system of a college of supervisors.

Q: How is this system of college of supervisors likely to function?

A: Typically, let me say that you have a banking institution which is also doing investment banking activity and some part of it is also doing insurance activity. In the home country, the college of supervisors should include the regulators of these three segments. Across countries, the college of supervisors should include supervisors in the host countries where this entity has a significant presence. So this will be a completely new idea because up to now we have not had supervision by a college including international representation.

Q: Will this college have statutory powers to point out where a country is going wrong?

A: I don't think it will have global statutory powers. Each regulator will control what an institution does in its own country. But being part of the college, it will become a part of the supervision of that institution by others. So hopefully, by being a member of this organisation you will have a better sense of the possible problems. An Indian member of the supervisory college cannot stop the institution from doing something somewhere else. But based on what they learn, they can stop it from doing whatever they are doing in India. So in that sense, they don't have a global regulator.

Sometime ago, there was an impression that some people would like to have a global regulator. I don't think that is possible as it is actually not practical. Today, I don't think there is any country actually arguing for a global regulator. They want national regulation but they want the standards to be made globally more acceptable and national standards to be aligned and cooperation among supervisors. Now that's quite a big change from the past and very significant for forward development.

Q: Everyone knows that the reckless behaviour of US financial institutions that led to the current global crisis. Do you think that the London summit can work out a mechanism to correct the situation and ensure that it does not happen again?

A: A lot of what you said relates to where you put the blame on the crisis. Now that's an important issue and I don't want to go into it. I don't think the leaders are going into this meeting on the blame-game point of view. But they are going into the meeting saying that look, whatever happened is pretty bad and how do we stop it from happening in future.

The key answer to that is a better system of financial supervision and regulation and two, the IMF as a global monitoring body interacting with the Financial Stability Forum with the responsibility of becoming an early warning system to be able to spot difficulties. Now there is a lot of scepticism about whether the IMF can actually do that job and it is a very difficult job. Everybody is agreed to improve the regulation and in addition to that, we need an international institution which specialises in trying to see whether the dangers to stability are mounting.

Historically, the IMF has tended to be viewed as having a lot of clout when it is dealing with countries that have to borrow from it and having no clout at all when it is dealing with countries that don't have to borrow from it. .

Q: During the East Asian meltdown, the IMF had no inkling of what was going on? So can it be trusted in a wider global crisis?

A: That's true, but let me put it this way. In trying to build an international financial architecture, you are engaged in a really creative act in trying to set up systems that will strengthen themselves over time. There's nothing you can do in three days from now that will be a guarantee. One can be very cynical and point out that what's the use of this agreement which is saying things it does not mean anything in practice. Now some of what they are saying is very substantive. Like for example, we will expand the perimeters of regulation, we will set up a college of supervisors, we will set up global standards.

They are also saying that we will set up the IMF as an international organisation charged with studying problems of vulnerability and financial instability and being an early warning system.

It's true that in the past, the IMF has not done a good job. But let me say that it is a very difficult job to do. But all said and done, there is a lot of scepticism and there is a feeling that the IMF has actually not been very effective in being able to raise issues of stability when the problems rests with industrialised countries. They have been quite willing to identify problems in developing countries but even there, there are many instances where they missed signs of these problems. Now, can you overcome this? We have to see. Obviously, no one is saying they are confident that the IMF can do it. But what they are saying is that if it has to be done, it must be given to the IMF and then find and work out why it is finding it difficult and how we can strengthen them. They must become more self critical and I think peer review also very important.

Countries must realise that the current crisis is serious. And that does not mean only the emerging market countries. If the problem emerges in any of the major blocs of the world - whether it is the US, Europe or Japan - we can see that in a world of global integration it can badly affect the other blocs. It's not that the bad effect is only on the developing countries. I think they have seen that it is in their interest to try and spot when there are problems.

Q: When compared to the fiscal stimulus packages announced by the US and China, do you think that the packages announced by India are good enough to combat the slowdown?

A: That's a very important question. There is a misunderstanding on the extent of stimulus in India. That is because if you define the fiscal stimulus to be the extent to which the fiscal deficit is allowed to worsen. India's fiscal stimulus is very substantial. The IMF itself has documented that it is over three percentage points of the GDP. The problem is that some of that happened not because of what we call fiscal stimulus but because of other increases in expenditure that occurred during the course of the year. Some of them may have occurred even before the crisis. But nevertheless, the bottom-line is that while new expenditures took place, we did not try to cut other expenditures.

Actually, as a conscious management decision, we lived with a higher fiscal deficit. I think the fiscal stimulus was not just what was announced in December 2008 and January this year. If fiscal stimulus is (measured) by how much the fiscal deficit widens, to that extent the fact that you gave a Pay Commission increase but didn't try to offset it by higher taxes or cutting other expenditure is a fiscal stimulus. Even the fact that your revenues turned out to be less than what was expected is a kind of automatic stabiliser leading to a fiscal stimulus.

So I think India's fiscal stimulus is actually not small. In fact, many people think that India does not have fiscal space and, therefore, the fiscal deficit has been allowed to widen too much. India's fiscal policy thus cannot be criticised on both counts. You cannot say your fiscal stimulus is too small and simultaneously say that your fiscal deficit is too large. In my view, the fiscal stimulus is not too small because it must be looked at in totality.

Now we come to the question whether we are being irresponsible by allowing the fiscal deficit to increase as much as we have. The answer is no. And the reason for that is we are facing a massive shock of demand because of the shrinkage of exports and financial disruptions which is affecting investment activity. Now if you face such a shock of demand in a world where exports are not going to increase, you have a choice. You can either let the multiplier effect work and get a depressed level of output or you can offset this loss of demand by injecting new demand which will generate feedback through a multiplier. That is what we have done.

The only argument one could make is have we done the fiscal deficit increase in the best possible way. Some people might say that by not allowing the oil price to rise in the first half of the year when oil prices shot up, that itself contributed to a big fiscal deficit. Some others might say that is not the best way of doing it, you should have raised oil prices and done the fiscal stimulus in the form of infrastructure spending. But there is no doubt that in the short run, by allowing the gap on the oil front to widen, you are actually doing a fiscal stimulus. And then you have to consider whether we have allowed the fiscal deficit to become too large. I don't think so, given the nature of the global shock.

Q: China has questioned the status of the US dollar as the world reserve currency. What is India's view on that?

A: I have seen the article published by the Governor of the Bank of China wherein he raised the issue that an international reserve currency has to observe certain kinds of discipline which, in his view, the US dollar is not in a position to meet and therefore is not a suitable international currency any longer. He suggested that we should rely on the SDR (special drawing rights). I think the issue of what is the most stable form of having a reserve currency is a very real issue. So the problem he is addressing is a legitimate problem. It is true that potentially, the dollar is not the only reserve currency. There is the Euro, there is the Japanese Yen, but the way it has worked, the dollar has been seen by most people and most countries at a dominant position. As far as the SDR is concerned, there are two separate issues. India's view is that we should have an expansion of the SDR and that it can play a useful role by being expanded, including therefore, by encouraging people to hold their reserves in the form of SDRs.

But you know, at the practical level, there is inadequate consensus to allow that to happen because the SDR is a very restrictive form of currency. The IMF's ability to control it is very restrictive. For example, if we are to move to an SDR-based system, we will have to redefine the rules. Today, it is extremely difficult to expand the SDR as we need an 85 per cent majority and what is more, if you have to contract it, you would still need an 85 per cent majority. Keynes had said that when we move to a globally integrated world, the IMF should be able to create a global currency.

The SDR is only a very small step towards that. So as practical matter, the only choice we have is to let the SDR's role expand and let the IMF push in new SDRs which will give everybody a little bit of liquidity. India is definitely in favour of that and we have argued in the discussions leading up to the G20 that there is a case for a significant fresh issue of SDRs.

Q: Did the Washington summit play down the culpability of the US and Europe?

A: You know, I think to talk about culpability, international summits are not the place where you discuss these issues. Another way of focusing is that the Washington Summit did not come to an analysis of what caused the crisis, except in very general terms. The US did own up to the crisis but there was no clear understanding of what caused the crisis.

I think today there is a better understanding and a lot more recognition that there was a regulatory failure. Remember, that monetary policy and controls and things like that, both in Britain and in the US, is not in the hands of the political leadership. They are in the hands of politically-appointed regulators. Today there is a perception that these regulatory authorities failed and had they acted more prudentially, this crisis would not have occurred or whatever happened would have been less damaging.

Q: The current crisis is giving rise to protectionism. Do you think it is a short-term reaction?

A: There is no doubt that the rise of protectionism will create problems for all members of the world economy, including us, and we often make the point that at least as developing countries there is a lot of doubt and suspicion about the fairness of the global economic system. We have been very successful, I think, in opening up our economy and showing people that opening up the economy to the world gives you many opportunities and while here and there it might cause problems, the opportunities it opens up are worth those problems.

Now if as a result of protectionism, those new opportunities begin to disappear or even to be reduced, it will reduce the support for globalisation. And it is not that this will actually help the countries that practise it. They know from their own history that the Great Depression was greatly exacerbated by their resort to protectionism. One of the biggest disasters of 1930 was that industrialised countries resorted to protectionism amongst themselves and sent the world trade into a tailspin. I think it is a no-brainer that we must avoid repeating the mistake of history. I think they know that and they say it. So I think we need to strengthen the resolve to fight against protectionism. You know, here the leadership has to come from countries that have more stake in the global economy which is the industrialised countries. We hope that they will show that leadership and stand firm, explain to their own public that these sort of knee-jerk reactions are not in the interest of their own economy, quite apart from the fact that they will hurt us. And, of course, when they hurt us there will be a danger of retaliation which we cannot control.

212. Statement by Prime Minister Dr Manmohan Singh on his departure to UK to attend the G-20 Summit.

New Delhi, March 31, 2009.

I leave today to attend the second meeting of the leaders of the G-20 in London.

The G-20 has an important role to play in addressing the global economic and financial slowdown by taking coordinated and purposeful action. A considerable amount of preparation has been done for the Summit. These preparations relate to provision of coordinated fiscal stimulus by major economies to offset the decline in private demand, agreement on a set of principles to plug loopholes and weaknesses in the supervisory and regulatory arrangements for the financial institutions and the need to undertake effective measures designed to provide emerging and developing countries adequate resources to offset the effects of global slowdown on their economies. It is important and necessary for the Summit to take credible decisions which will help to halt and reverse the current slowdown and to instil a sense of confidence in the global economy.

It is an unfortunate reality that the effects of the slowdown have spread across the world, and developing countries, particularly those in Africa, are facing its worst consequences. There are some issues which require particular focus such as the need to ensure the adequate flow of finances to the developing countries to overcome the reversal of international capital flows, and not retard progress towards the attainment of the Millennium Development Goals, the need to avoid protectionism in the trade of both goods and services, facilitation of trade finance, and reform and restructuring of international financial institutions. The time has come for the international economic and financial architecture to reflect contemporary economic strengths.

India has benefitted from growing global interdependence as manifested in the high growth rate that we have achieved over the last five years. We would like to ensure that our economy continues to expand at a healthy rate to meet the principal challenges of eradicating poverty and ensuring balanced and inclusive socio-economic development for our people. Our economic, financial and banking institutions have shown great resilience and the fundamentals of our economy remain strong.

Besides a bilateral meeting with Prime Minister Gordon Brown, who is the host of the meeting, I also look forward to my meeting with US President Barack Obama. This will be our first meeting and will be an opportunity for us to review our bilateral relations, as well as hold discussions on important regional and global issues such as terrorism, the situation in Afghanistan, energy security and climate change.

213. Remarks of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the dinner hosted by the British Prime Minister Gordon Brown on the occasion of the G-20 Summit.

London, April 1, 2009.

I would like to begin by thanking Prime Minister Gordon Brown and the Government of the UK for the warm welcome we have received and for the excellent arrangements made for the meeting. I would also like to welcome President Barack Obama to his first meeting of this Group.

The problems facing the world economy are well known and need no elaboration. The only point to note is that the downturn is much deeper than we thought when we met in Washington D.C. in November last year, and the prospects of a recovery have receded to 2010 at best. This is the worst recession in sixty years and is generating negative expectations which threaten a downward spiral if not corrected. The pain is being felt both in industrialised countries and in developing countries.

A global crisis requires global solutions. In Washington D.C. we pledged to take action to revive the world economy and also to bring about basic reform of the financial sector to reduce the likelihood of similar severe crises in future and to build institutions that can intervene more effectively if we do. We have made considerable progress in several areas, but I believe much more needs to be done.

The world is looking to us to show that we can act cooperatively in a manner commensurate with the scale of the crisis. As we deal with the immediate problems, we must also be careful not to sacrifice the gains of openness of trade, direct investment and immigration. It will be a test of the leadership of the G-20 whether we can craft a strategy that meets all these objectives.

There can be no doubt that restoration of the banking system in the industrialised countries to full functionality is precondition for successful revival of the global economy. This is primarily a task for the Governments of the individual countries concerned. It is a task that will require commitment of resources on an unprecedented scale. The IMF has estimated that the write down of toxic assets needed may be as high as $2.8 trillion in the US and $1.4 trillion in Europe and Japan. Many Governments, most recently the United States, have made large commitments of resources to deal with the problem of tainted assets and also to recapitalise the banking system. More may well be needed.

A rescue effort on this scale will place a huge burden on tax payers and this has given rise to considerable public anger, which is entirely understandable. However, it has to be explained to tax payers, and also their elected representatives, that anger at the irresponsible, and even morally reprehensible behaviour on the part of managements of financial institutions, should not come in the way of efforts to resurrect the system.

I recognise that this is ultimately a political problem that has to be handled by each national government. This Summit can help by sending a clear message that the problem affects many industrialised countries and has to be tackled if we want to bring about an economic revival and tackle unemployment. The main reason why we can expect to avoid a repeat of the Great Depression is that governments know a great deal more about the role of contra-cyclical policies and they are also willing to act. However, contra-cyclical policies will not have their full expansionary effect if credit does not flow to where it should. We have to explain to the public that reviving the banks is important not for the banks, as is sometimes perceived by the public, but for the economy, for employment, and for global prosperity generally.

Active contra-cyclical policy must be a priority item on our agenda and global markets are looking to see if we are united on this issue. We have seen a massive contraction in consumer demand in industrialised countries arising from the wealth effect of the decline in house prices and in stock market values. This is compounded by uncertainty about future employment prospects. The emergence of excess capacity in several sectors is bound to discourage private investment. Some contraction of demand in countries where current account deficits were too high was to be expected. Ideally this should have been offset by expansion in surplus countries. For whatever reason, this orderly adjustment could not be brought about. We are now seeing a contraction that has overshot and contra cyclical stimulus is therefore necessary in all countries.

Most industrialised countries, and also developing countries, have responded by using monetary policy fairly aggressively to counter the downturn. They have also resorted to a fiscal stimulus to varying degrees. I recognise that it is not easy to determine the level of fiscal stimulus that is appropriate for different countries in different circumstances. But we do know that expansionary policies are most effective when they are coordinated. I hope the Summit will give a clear signal that we are willing to act in a coordinated, or at least in a credible concerted manner, to ensure that the downslide is minimised.

The International Monetary Fund had estimated that a discretionary fiscal stimulus of about 2 per cent of GDP in 2009 would be needed, in addition to the operation of automatic stabilisers. This was to be followed by a similar order of stimulus in 2010 to achieve the objective of moving from an unavoidable decline of around 1% in 2009 to a modest positive growth of about 2% in 2010.

Available information suggests that whereas the actual stimulus of the G-20 countries in 2009 is approximately equal to the Fund target, what is currently planned for 2010 may be too little. Many observers have also commented that the modest global recovery projected for 2010 may be over optimistic. I recognise that there are time lags in the system and the effects of actions already taken may be felt only in the coming months, but it does seem that the risks lie in doing too little rather than too much, and we are not doing enough to ensure recovery in 2010.

If we cannot agree to do more, we should at least send a clear message that we will watch developments carefully in 2009 and act speedily to do more if necessary. The IMF should be tasked with monitoring developments in this area and reporting back periodically.

Let me now turn to the steps needed to ensure the revival of growth in the developing countries. These countries have suffered a double shock. They have seen a collapse in world trade, with an unprecedented decline of almost 9 per cent in trade volume in 2009. They have also suffered a massive decline of private capital flows estimated by the Institute of International Finance at close to $700 billion in 2009, with little prospect of a significant revival in 2010. To some extent, financial protectionism, built into the conditions for assisting banks in industrialised countries, may have encouraged this trend, though there are of course many other factors.

We in India have been fortunate in having weathered the global downturn better than many others. Our growth rate, which was close to 9% in the previous 5 years, will fall below 7% in 2008-09. Like other countries, we have made aggressive use of both monetary and fiscal policy, with a total fiscal stimulus or expansion of the fiscal deficit above the planned level of almost 4 percentage points of GDP in 2008-09. We hope to be able to achieve a similar growth rate in 2009-10, with continuing reliance on monetary and fiscal policy. We recognise the importance of fiscal sustainability and it is our firm intention to return to a fiscally sustainable path after 2010. The additional fiscal stimulus we have undertaken will raise our debt to GDP ratio by a few percentage points above what it would otherwise have been, but this is relatively modest compared to what would have happened had our banks suffered a financial crisis. Effective regulation of the banking system has gained us much more than any additional strain imposed by temporary fiscal expansion. Besides, since most of the fiscal stimulus will be directed to increased investment in infrastructure, it will in the medium term contribute to growth and thus help reduce the debt ratio automatically.

Expansionary policy at home in an environment where exports are weak and private capital flows have dried up would normally lead to pressure on the balance of payments. In our case this has been partly offset by the fall in oil prices, but even so, India's current account deficit in 2009-10, is likely to be about 1.4 per cent of GDP. We expect to be able to finance this without difficulty and in any case our strong foreign exchange reserves position enables us to cope with any shortfall in capital flows we may experience.

While India will be able to manage, many other developing countries may not be in the same position and this is where the international community can help. We must ensure that countries hurt by the massive withdrawal of private capital that has taken place, which is unlikely to be reversed in 2010, are able to rely upon an increased flow of resources from the international financial institutions. This will help these countries to maintain a higher level of demand than would otherwise be possible and thus help global revival.

There are several steps we can take which will demonstrate our willingness to help.

We must declare our resolve to increase the resources available with the IMF substantially, by around $500 billion over the next two years. This can be done initially through bilateral arrangements, an expansion of the NAB and other borrowing by the Fund. However, we should also signal that these are interim steps pending an increase in Fund quotas. The next quota review, normally due in 2013, should be advanced as much as possible, and we should aim at a doubling of IMF quotas at the very least.

In addition to increasing resources with the IMF, we should also signal that the conditions associated with the use of Fund resources are made more appropriate and flexible. Unless this is done, countries will prefer to build foreign exchange reserves which would be counter-productive in current circumstances.

We should also agree on a fresh allocation of SDRs of around $250 billion. This would provide the developing countries with about $80 billion of usable resources at a time when liquidity is exceptionally tight.

We support the sale of a part of the Fund's gold to support concessional lending to low income countries through the Fund's concessional windows.

The multilateral development banks can play an important role in maintaining the flow of resources to developing countries over the next two years. As an immediate step, we must endorse a 200% increase in the capital of the Asian Development Bank which can be approved by its Board of Governors in May.

The World Bank should also expand its lending in the next two to three years in a manner which helps to fill the gap left by the withdrawal of private capital flows. By directing its lending to infrastructure development and recapitalisation of the banks, it would help to support contra-cyclical policy in a manner which stimulates an early resumption of growth in these economies. To perform this role, the Bank's present single borrower limits need to be urgently reviewed. Its debt to capital ratio also needs to be made more liberal.

We must also take concrete steps to revive trade finance which has been badly hit in part, I regret to say, because of financial protectionism. Export credit agencies can expand their lending. The IFC pool to support trade finance can be substantially expanded, with bilateral assistance from countries in a position to contribute.

An issue of vital concern to developing countries is the rise of protectionist sentiment in the industrialised world. This phenomenon is not surprising, given the downturn in economic activity and the rise in unemployment. However, it will be a test of leadership whether we can persuade the public that we must not repeat past mistakes. We know that the Great Depression was as deep and prolonged as it was because countries resorted to protectionism which triggered retaliatory protectionist responses, leading to a downward spiral.

Leaders of the developing countries have struggled to overcome the doubts and fears of our public to persuade them of the merits of integrating with the global economy. I believe we had substantial success in this effort, and the open economy has brought prosperity to an ever widening circle, in both developing and industrialised countries. These hard won gains will be destroyed if industrial country markets are not kept open in these difficult times. I must emphasise that this is an area where leadership must come from the industrialised countries. I hope the Summit communiqué will contain firm commitment of our intentions to keep our markets open.

Let me now turn to issues of longer term reform of the global financial system. The crisis we have experienced has drawn attention to some basic flaws in the functioning of the banks and other parts of the financial system which enabled a dangerous build up of risks. This experience shows that it is not enough to rely on light regulation of the financial system, combined with market enforced discipline and enlightened managements using in house risk management techniques. We have to move to stronger regulation and improved supervision if we are to prevent a repeat of the crisis. Valuable work has been done by the working groups set up to chart the broad directions of reform in this area. We should endorse the recommendations emerging from this work and entrust the recently expanded Financial Stability Forum and the expanded Basel Committee on Banking Supervision to prepare detailed proposals which can then be used by national regulators to align our national regulations with the new global standards. I think we all agree on the need to expand the perimeter of regulation to cover the non-banking sector, the need to redefine capital requirements to avoid procyclicality, the need to avoid a build-up of excessive leverage and the need to subject systemically important institutions to supervision by a college of supervisors. We should also endorse sharing information and bringing tax havens and non-cooperating jurisdictions under closer scrutiny.

In addition to improving regulation in our individual countries, we also need to develop an effective early warning system which can spot a build up of risks which would threaten global financial stability. This task must be assigned to the IMF in consultation with the expanded FSF. The IMF is the logical institution to deal with this task but I must add that its capacity to undertake even-handed surveillance needs to be greatly strengthened if it is to perform the task well. This is ultimately connected with the governance and accountability of the institution.

The world has changed greatly since the multilateral institutions were established and the role of these institutions needs to be redefined and their mandate suitably revised. The representation of the developing and emerging market countries in the decision making levels of these institutions also needs to be improved. Better representation is essential if the institutions are to have the legitimacy they need to play their role in an increasingly integrated world in which actions taken in one country affect many other countries.

These are longer term issues of institutional reform which we must address once the immediate priorities of crisis management are handled.

214. Press Conference of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the conclusion of the G-20 Summit.

London, April 2, 2009.

Opening Remarks (Prime Minister):

1. We met in London at a significant moment for the world economy and therefore for the world as a whole. I am grateful to Prime Minister Gordon Brown for the initiative that he has taken to host this second Summit of leaders of the G-20, and for the excellent arrangements that were made for our meetings.
2. The purpose of this Summit meeting was to take forward the search for solutions to the economic crisis facing the global economy today. The world is going through the worst recession since the Great Depression. We have fared much better than others though we are also affected. This is a global crisis requiring global solutions.
3. Earlier today and yesterday evening, we discussed various ways in which the crisis can be addressed. All countries have used monetary policy. An effective fiscal stimulus is also being resorted to by all major economies. There was agreement that credit flows to developing countries also must be restored. There was also agreement that we must tackle the crisis in a way which does not create other problems for the future. For instance, protectionism or restrictions on the free flow of trade and persons would be counter productive. Nor can development be halted or sacrificed in the search for solutions to the financial crisis. Hence the need for special attention to the needs of developing countries.
4. I was happy to note that our views received wide acceptance and support.
5. We emphasised the need to make good the decline that has taken place in capital flows to developing countries by providing adequate resources to the international financial institutions. I am happy to say that the G-20 have agreed to expand the resources of the IMF and the ADB and to also bring forward the quota review in the IMF. The leaders have also agreed to a fresh issue of SDRs. These are positive decisions. Together they involve a massive provision of $ 1.1 trillion to emerging market economies. India does not need IMF funding but we have been in favour of expanding IMF resources as this will help developing countries that need assistance. It will restore confidence about emerging markets.

6. We also discussed and agreed on broad direction for improvements in regulatory and supervisory structure for the world's financial system. These will take time to take effect but they are very important. They will be carried forward by the Financial Stability Forum (FSF) and the Basle Committee on Banking Supervision, the two key standard setting bodies. India is now a member of both bodies. Broadening representation in these bodies is an important improvement. The directions of the reform of financial regulation and supervision that have been agreed are in line with our own thinking in India.

7. This meeting has shown the utility of the G-20 Leaders' process, and we took forward to the next Summit meeting of G-20 leaders in the second half of the year, and to the early implementation of what has been agreed today. There is a continuing need to redefine the role of our institutions of global economic governance to deal with the problems of today and to reflect contemporary realities.

8. As you know, I also had an opportunity to meet Prime Minister Gordon Brown yesterday, where we reviewed our bilateral relationship and discussed ways of taking India-UK relations forward. India and the UK enjoy a close partnership in diverse fields of human endeavour. We are determined to and confident of carrying this partnership forward.

9. Earlier this afternoon I met with President Barack Obama of the United States of America. This was our first meeting and was marked by exceptional warmth and cordiality. We reviewed our bilateral relations. I thanked President Obama for all that he has done in the US Senate and outside in the past few years to make possible the transformation of India-US relations, and to bring to fruition our civil nuclear initiative. Today we discussed several positive and constructive steps to take the India-US global partnership forward.

10. We discussed regional and global issues, including the threat that terrorism emanating from our neighbourhood poses to all free societies, and the international efforts that are required to deal with this problem. We had a significant convergence of views and approaches in this regard. President Obama informed me of the new comprehensive US strategy for Afghanistan and Pakistan. I welcomed his clear enunciation of the problems and the goals. India will continue to play a constructive role, working to build peace and stability in our periphery.

11. I leave London satisfied that my bilateral and other meetings have been productive and useful, and that the G-20 Leaders Summit has shown a way forward. The process of overcoming the global crisis will not be easy. Given the goodwill and the meeting of minds among leaders that was possible in London over the last two days, the world has a basis to begin solving the crisis. The international community can and must work together to do so.

Interaction with the media

Question: (inaudible).....

Prime Minister (Dr. Manmohan Singh):..(inaudible) will make a substantial difference to the outcome of economic development in the next two or three years.

I should also mention that in addition to attending G-20 meeting I had a very good meeting with Prime Minister Gordon Brown. On the sidelines I had very good meetings with President Hu Jintao, President Medvedev of Russia, His Majesty the King of Saudi Arabia, the Prime Minister of Japan, and several other world leaders. I benefited enormously from exchanges with my colleagues represented on the Committee of 20. And I have just had a very useful, productive meeting with President Obama in which we discussed the development of our relations bilaterally, how can the problems of our region be resolved through cooperative interaction between our two countries, how can the global issues like energy security, like climate change, can be dealt with by India and the United States working together. So, I go back home very satisfied with the outcome both of the Summit and my meetings with world leaders, particularly President Barak Obama.

Question (Shrinjoy Choudhuri, Times Now): Sir, you just said you met President Obama. Did the issue of Afghan and Pakistan come up? And have you got any indication from the United States that they are willing to put pressure on Pakistan on checking terror and also on Mumbai?

Prime Minister: We did discuss the developments in Afghanistan and Pakistan. We both agreed that our two countries must work together to counter the forces of terror.

Question (Natasha Bretton, Dow Jones): There has been lots of discussion (inaudible) Would India consider..?

Prime Minister: A little louder. I am not able to hear that.

Question (Natasha Bretton, Dow Jones): I would like to ask whether India, like Mexico indicated last week, ...could be interested in making use of the new IMF credit line? And also you said many countries will ... of resources. I wanted to ask what India's contribution would be to that. Thank you very much.

Prime Minister: As far as India's contribution is concerned, the question arises that we should contribute. We can consider contribution in proportion to our quotas in the IMF. As far as drawl by Mexico is concerned, we are happy that conditions have been relaxed so that Mexico has found it possible to borrow about 47 billion dollars. It augurs well I think. In the past, the high conditionality attaching to IMF loan was one of the factors which deterred developing countries. And since then the IMF has realized that it needs to do something to soften terms and conditions. That Mexico is the first recipient of the loan under the new facilities is a welcome development. It sets a precedent. As far as India is concerned, India has no intention of going to the IMF. Our reserves are about 250 billion dollars. We do not visualize that there is going to be a need in the near future for India to go to the IMF.

Question (Sachidananda Murthy, Malayala Manorama): Sir, a quick read of the communiqué issued by G-20 has two or three areas of concern for India. I would like you to clarify on them. One is that article 12 of the communiqué says that all countries and their economies would be under the surveillance of IMF. What kind of surveillance? You know how sensitive IMF conditions and others of India. The second concern is regarding that there will be an early conclusion of the Doha Round of talks. So, will there be more pressure on India because India has taken a tough position? And the third concern, Sir, ...

Prime Minister: Let me answer one at a time. I cannot handle three questions. Could you repeat the first question?

Question (Sachidananda Murthy, Malayala Manorama): Sir, article 12 of the communiqué says that all countries and their economies would be under the surveillance of the IMF. The word used is surveillance.

Prime Minister: Let me say that as far as the developing countries are concerned there has already been, all these years, excessive surveillance of the developing countries' economies. The real imbalance in the functioning of the IMF has been that there has been too little surveillance of the affairs of the developed countries. I see this statement as a statement which will induce the IMF to an even-handed approach towards surveillance because we all know that the present crisis does not originate in the periphery, in Asia or in Latin America. It originates in the heart of capitalism and it is the laxity of regulation and nobody pointed it out earlier. So, part of the blame must be shared by the IMF.

Question (N. Ravi, The Hindu): Mr. Prime Minister, after your meeting with President Obama what is the sense that you came away with on the direction in which India-US relations broadly?

Prime Minister: We have a global strategic partnership with the United States. What President Obama and I have discussed is that we both are agreed that there are enormous opportunities to further strengthen our relationship to make this partnership more productive, more durable in diverse fields.

Question (Iftexhar Qaiser, Geo TV): Are you willing to start dialogue on Kashmir with Pakistan? And are you satisfied on the investigations which are taking place in Pakistan regarding Mumbai attacks?

Prime Minister: Let me say that we expect Pakistan to do all that is required to bring the culprits of Mumbai terror attack to book. We have supplied Pakistan answers all the questions that they raised. Now the ball is in the court of Pakistan. It has to convince us that it is absolutely sincere in bringing to book the culprits of the attack on Mumbai. As far as Kashmir is concerned, we have always said that we are willing to discuss bilaterally all outstanding issues which have bedeviled the relationship of our two countries. But let me say that these relations or these discussions cannot proceed if hundreds of people, as happened in Mumbai, are being killed. Therefore, Pakistan has the opportunity to assure the world that it is absolutely sincere in its statements that the territory of Pakistan will not be used to promote acts of terror directed against India. This is a minimum precondition for any discussions between India and Pakistan.

Question (Smita Prakash, ANI): Mr. Prime Minister, you are heading towards the end of your first term as Prime Minister. What would you say is your legacy. Mr. Obama just a few minutes back said it was unleashing India's economic power. What would you say are the milestones of your first term? Also, Sir, what were the challenging moments? Anything you would have done differently?

Prime Minister: Our biggest achievement has been to get the economy moving forward at the rate of nine to ten per cent per annum. As I mentioned to President Obama, our biggest challenge is to get rid of chronic poverty, ignorance and disease, which still afflict millions and millions of our citizens.

And we need a very high rate of growth which is an essential condition, though not a sufficient condition, of getting rid of poverty. Therefore, I take some credit for the fact that for nearly five years the average growth rate of the economy has been 8.6 per cent. We have also made every effort to make this growth process more inclusive to ensure that our farmers benefit, that our agricultural workers benefit, the employment guarantee programme, the investments that we have made in the farm sector, the Bharat Nirman programme, the food security mission that we have launched, and the Jawaharlal Nehru Urban Renewal Mission to improve living conditions in metropolitan areas including slum-dwellers, the National Rural Health Mission today under which six lakh mahila workers are working in our villages as Accredited Social Health Workers. So, I think these are some of the achievements of our Government. But I would be the last one to say that we have achieved. There are lots of things we would have liked to accomplish. But there are compulsions.

Question (Shigeki Tosa, Ashai Shimun): Thank you, Prime Minister. Some are saying that this meeting shows the end of the G-8 era and the beginning of the G-20 as the most important forum to discuss the international issues. Would you agree with this? And would you hope that this forum can meet regularly and become an institution to replace the G-8?

Prime Minister: It depends on what this forum actually achieves. This was the second meeting. There will be a third meeting though the dates and the time has not been specified. If the Group of 20 can find credible answers to the major global issues, it would certainly carve out for itself a place of honour. I sincerely hope that the way the first two meetings have gone, there is a lot of hope that the Committee of 20 consisting of people from different parts of the world - Russia is there, China is there, Europe is there, major developing countries are there - I think that is a unique combination. If it succeeds in dealing with the global problems in a cooperative manner, I think it would have served its purpose.

Question (Gautam, The Hindustan Times): Sir, you were among the first to flag the issue of protectionism at the Washington Summit. Now also in the statement we see that countries are being encouraged to fight protectionism. But there is the strange line here which says that we extend this pledge to the end of 2010. So, are you saying the end of protectionism will end at 2010 and we can go back to our old ways after that?

Prime Minister: No, these are emergency measures. The hope is that by 2010 the world economy would revive, in which case the normal WTO guidelines would become operative.

Question (Gurdeep Singh, UNI): Apart from being brought on the Basel Committee and the Financial Stability Forum, what do you see are the other gains of the G-20 Conference to India?

Prime Minister: The fact that India is now accepted as a major player on the world economic scene itself is a great achievement. And the fact that the developing countries are going to benefit by increased resource flows of 1.1 trillion dollars, we will also benefit because we have trade relations with these countries, and if their economies flourish, it will also spillover into some good for our economy as well. We have a vested interest in the world economy doing well because that is a precondition for our exports flourishing.

Question (Shivnath, NDTV): Dr. Singh, looking at the issue of representation within the IMF and communiqué talking about greater transparency, by when do you see the fact that emerging countries like India would have a say, because there was a lot of talk about China in the statement? One is that. Secondly, the way the Summit has talked about solutions and a roadmap, how soon in your assessment as an economist do you think things will start falling into place, because people have started writing off 2010 as well?

Prime Minister: As of now there is agreement only to increase quotas, to undertake a review of quotas. As far as rebalancing of quotas is concerned, I think it is not still on the cards even though there was a demand by developing countries including myself that the Summit should endorse rebalancing of quotas in the IMF which would have recommend the rebalance of the power structures. Quite frankly, I cannot say today that we have as of now an agreement to rebalance the quotas in the IMF. But I have every reason to hope that there is a paragraph in the Summit in which the Chairman has been asked to talk to various members, various Finance Ministers, to come up with new innovative ideas about a long-term reform of the international financial institutions. I do hope that when the Chairman reports on that subject this particular issue will figure as one of the items.

Question (Vaidyanathan, Indian Express): Sir, one thing when you look at the entire text of the G-20 leaders' statement, one or two things which kind of puzzle me are the WTO Director-General saying that all the infringements which 17 countries out of 20 members have done are well within the means, which means that protectionism is not really high on the agenda, which Mr. Brown also talked about in the press conference today. And the other was, about this global stimulus package, a coordinated effort to fiscal stimulus. Yes, we have 1.1 trillion dollars coming into the global economy. But how much of it is all developed and developing countries pushing their economy together?

Prime Minister: That only time can tell. But you have for the first time a statement by the major powers of the world that they recognize that they have a cooperative responsibility to put their shoulders together to revive the world economy. As far as protection is concerned, I think it is a fact. Although 17 out of 20 countries had I think infringed the Washington communiqué, the WTO itself has said the amounts involved are not very large. So, therefore, the problem still can be contained if there is a determination to do so. And the Summit has endorsed that protectionism is bad and I do hope that it would have a salutary effect. From our point of view we have highlighted that protectionism is not mainly protection of goods, but protectionism of services, protectionism in financial services is also something which is worrisome. I think that has also to be attended to. We know for example that many of the banks in the developed countries who have received help from their governments to solve their problems are not lending to developing countries. That is also protectionism. We also know that some branches of the foreign banks in our country have stopped lending to Indian entities. That also is protectionism. So, I hope that protectionism of all sorts will I think be looked down upon by the world community.

Question (Devender Malik, All India Radio): Sir, during your first meeting with the US President Obama, was the issue of H1B visas discussed as far as the Indians in US are concerned?

Prime Minister: I raised the issue of protectionism in general. I did not go specifically into H1B visas. But I did raise the issue of protectionism. And both of us agreed that everything in our power has to be done to roll back protectionism.

Question (Pawan Kumar, Zee TV): The issue of tax havens has been has been discussed at length over here. Recently, Mr. Lal Krishna Advani raised the point of black money. Have you discussed with any of the leaders here in general or particularly with the European countries on something like that?

Prime Minister: Yes, if you look at the communiqué there is an explicit reference to tax havens and also that information with regard to tax matters should become available. I think that is the direction in which we should move. If information relating to tax matters becomes available to all governments I think the problems that have arisen with regard to tax havens would disappear.

Question (V.S. Arun, Deccan Herald): Sir, in your speech last night you had expressed fears that if measures are not taken immediately, recovery even by 2010 would be difficult. Now, with today's statement are you hopeful that these fears have receded?

Prime Minister: I am certainly more hopeful now than I was yesterday. Yesterday if you had looked at the newspapers you would have noticed people were highlighting the divergence in the viewpoints of the French, the Germans, the Anglo-Saxons. Fortunately I think those differences did not surface and the Committee as a whole has endorsed the package. I think that augurs well for the future recovery of the world economy.

Question (Sushil Choudhury, Dainik Ganadoot): Sir, what is the main and important contribution for G-20 Summit from India?

Prime Minister: I think we are part of the 20 countries, we have made important contribution. Our concern was that the developing countries' problems should not be lost sight of, that the resource flows which have declined should be made good by increased multilateral flows. And that is why our emphasis on increasing the resources of the IMF, increase in the allocation of the SDRs, increased resource flows becoming available from the World Bank, increase in quota of the Asian Development Bank of which we will be direct beneficiaries. So, all these measures are I think are a result of efforts we have made. I am not saying we were the only one. I think many other developing countries felt alike and the fact that the developing countries felt strongly I think we were able to get an endorsement of resource flows of 1.1 trillion dollars to the developing countries through multilateral development institutions including the IMF.

Question (Jayant Ghoshal, Ananda Bazar Patrika): Yesterday we got copy of your speech at the dinner. And today we got the copy of the Joint Communiqué. I found lot of strong similarities between these two. What you said yesterday on protectionism, on the role of IMF, even this surveillance issue also you have mentioned, monitoring and the relevance of global regulation. In the Joint Communiqué, I found a follow-up of your yesterday's speech. Can I interpret it in that way that economist Manmohan Singhji influenced the draft of the communiqué today?

Prime Minister: I think I will put it differently. I will say, all right-thinking men think alike when dealing with global issues of great seriousness as the revival of the world economy.

Question (Jayant Ghoshal, Ananda Bazar Patrika): ... have given in a speech today and yesterday you have said all these things.

Prime Minister: Because I was given the chance last night by Prime Minister Gordon Brown, first President Obama spoke, then he asked me to speak. The agreement was that if you speak at the dinner, you will not speak in the Plenary. So, I got a chance to speak early enough and I thought I should have my say so that it could reach the gentlemen of the press in time.

Question (Shamsul Haq, Frankfurt Newspaper): I will ask the last question in Hindi. I wanted to know the future of your party in the coming elections; and whether the elections in India will be transparent? Please answer to these two questions.(original in Hindi)

Prime Minister: I can guarantee that the elections will be transparent. I am also confident that in the coming elections the Congress Party will emerge number one party. (original in Hindi)

215. Statement issued by the leaders at the end of the G-20 Financial Summit.

London, April 2 2009.

1. We, the Leaders of the Group of Twenty, met in London on 2 April 2009.
2. We face the greatest challenge to the world economy in modern times; a crisis which has deepened since we last met, which affects the lives of women, men, and children in every country, and which all countries must join together to resolve. A global crisis requires a global solution.
3. We start from the belief that prosperity is indivisible; that growth, to be sustained, has to be shared; and that our global plan for recovery must have at its heart the needs and jobs of hard-working families, not just in developed countries but in emerging markets and the poorest countries of the world too; and must reflect the interests, not just of today's population, but of future generations too. We believe that the only sure foundation for sustainable globalisation and rising prosperity for all is an open world economy based on market principles, effective regulation, and strong global institutions.
4. We have today therefore pledged to do whatever is necessary to:
  - restore confidence, growth, and jobs;
  - repair the financial system to restore lending;
  - strengthen financial regulation to rebuild trust;
  - fund and reform our international financial institutions to overcome this crisis and prevent future ones;
  - promote global trade and investment and reject protectionism, to underpin prosperity; and
  - build an inclusive, green, and sustainable recovery.

By acting together to fulfil these pledges we will bring the world economy out of recession and prevent a crisis like this from recurring in the future.

5. The agreements we have reached today, to treble resources available to the IMF to $750 billion, to support a new SDR allocation of $250 billion, to support at least $100 billion of additional lending by the MDBs, to ensure $250 billion of support for trade finance, and to use the additional resources from agreed IMF gold sales for concessional finance for the poorest countries, constitute an additional $1.1 trillion programme of support to restore credit, growth and jobs in the world economy. Together with the measures we have each taken nationally, this constitutes a global plan for recovery on an unprecedented scale.

Restoring growth and jobs

6. We are undertaking an unprecedented and concerted fiscal expansion, which will save or create millions of jobs which would otherwise have been destroyed, and that will, by the end of next year, amount to $5 trillion, raise output by 4 per cent, and accelerate the transition to a green economy. We are committed to deliver the scale of sustained fiscal effort necessary to restore growth.

7. Our central banks have also taken exceptional action. Interest rates have been cut aggressively in most countries, and our central banks have pledged to maintain expansionary policies for as long as needed and to use the full range of monetary policy instruments, including unconventional instruments, consistent with price stability.

8. Our actions to restore growth cannot be effective until we restore domestic lending and international capital flows. We have provided significant and comprehensive support to our banking systems to provide liquidity, recapitalise financial institutions, and address decisively the problem of impaired assets. We are committed to take all necessary actions to restore the normal flow of credit through the financial system and ensure the soundness of systemically important institutions, implementing our policies in line with the agreed G20 framework for restoring lending and repairing the financial sector.

9. Taken together, these actions will constitute the largest fiscal and monetary stimulus and the most comprehensive support programme for the financial sector in modern times. Acting together strengthens the impact and the exceptional policy actions announced so far must be implemented without delay. Today, we have further agreed over $1 trillion of additional resources for the world economy through our international financial institutions and trade finance.

10. Last month the IMF estimated that world growth in real terms would resume and rise to over 2 percent by the end of 2010. We are confident that the actions we have agreed today, and our unshakeable commitment to work together to restore growth and jobs, while preserving long-term fiscal sustainability, will accelerate the return to trend growth. We commit today to taking whatever action is necessary to secure that outcome, and we call on the IMF to assess regularly the actions taken and the global actions required.

11. We are resolved to ensure long-term fiscal sustainability and price stability and will put in place credible exit strategies from the measures that need to be taken now to support the financial sector and restore global demand. We are convinced that by implementing our agreed policies we will limit the longer-term costs to our economies, thereby reducing the scale of the fiscal consolidation necessary over the longer term.

12. We will conduct all our economic policies cooperatively and responsibly with regard to the impact on other countries and will refrain from competitive devaluation of our currencies and promote a stable and well-functioning international monetary system. We will support, now and in the future, to candid, even-handed, and independent IMF surveillance of our economies and financial sectors, of the impact of our policies on others, and of risks facing the global economy.

Strengthening financial supervision and regulation

13. Major failures in the financial sector and in financial regulation and supervision were fundamental causes of the crisis. Confidence will not be restored until we rebuild trust in our financial system. We will take action to build a stronger, more globally consistent, supervisory and regulatory framework for the future financial sector, which will support sustainable global growth and serve the needs of business and citizens.

14. We each agree to ensure our domestic regulatory systems are strong. But we also agree to establish the much greater consistency and systematic cooperation between countries, and the framework of internationally agreed high standards, that a global financial system requires. Strengthened regulation and supervision must promote propriety, integrity and transparency; guard against risk across the financial system; dampen rather than amplify the financial and economic cycle; reduce reliance on inappropriately risky sources of financing; and discourage excessive risk-taking. Regulators and supervisors must protect consumers and investors, support market discipline, avoid adverse impacts on other countries, reduce the scope for regulatory arbitrage, support competition and dynamism, and keep pace with innovation in the marketplace.

15. To this end we are implementing the Action Plan agreed at our last meeting, as set out in the attached progress report. We have today also issued a Declaration, Strengthening the Financial System. In particular we agree:

- to establish a new Financial Stability Board (FSB) with a strengthened mandate, as a successor to the Financial Stability Forum (FSF), including all G20 countries, FSF members, Spain, and the European Commission;
- that the FSB should collaborate with the IMF to provide early warning of macroeconomic and financial risks and the actions needed to address them;
- to reshape our regulatory systems so that our authorities are able to identify and take account of macro-prudential risks;
- to extend regulation and oversight to all systemically important financial institutions, instruments and markets. This will include, for the first time, systemically important hedge funds;
- to endorse and implement the FSF's tough new principles on pay and compensation and to support sustainable compensation schemes and the corporate social responsibility of all firms;
- to take action, once recovery is assured, to improve the quality, quantity, and international consistency of capital in the banking system. In future, regulation must prevent excessive leverage and require buffers of resources to be built up in good times;
- to take action against non-cooperative jurisdictions, including tax havens. We stand ready to deploy sanctions to protect our public finances and financial systems. The era of banking secrecy is over. We note that the OECD has today published a list of countries assessed by the Global Forum against the international standard for exchange of tax information;
- to call on the accounting standard setters to work urgently with supervisors and regulators to improve standards on valuation and provisioning and achieve a single set of high-quality global accounting standards; and
- to extend regulatory oversight and registration to Credit Rating Agencies to ensure they meet the international code of good practice, particularly to prevent unacceptable conflicts of interest.

16. We instruct our Finance Ministers to complete the implementation of these decisions in line with the timetable set out in the Action Plan. We have asked the FSB and the IMF to monitor progress, working with the Financial Action Taskforce and other relevant bodies, and to provide a report to the next meeting of our Finance Ministers in Scotland in November.

Strengthening our global financial institutions

17. Emerging markets and developing countries, which have been the engine of recent world growth, are also now facing challenges which are adding to the current downturn in the global economy. It is imperative for global confidence and economic recovery that capital continues to flow to them. This will require a substantial strengthening of the international financial institutions, particularly the IMF. We have therefore agreed today to make available an additional $850 billion of resources through the global financial institutions to support growth in emerging market and developing countries by helping to finance counter-cyclical spending, bank recapitalisation, infrastructure, trade finance, balance of payments support, debt rollover, and social support. To this end:

- we have agreed to increase the resources available to the IMF through immediate financing from members of $250 billion, subsequently incorporated into an expanded and more flexible New Arrangements to Borrow, increased by up to $500 billion, and to consider market borrowing if necessary; and
- we support a substantial increase in lending of at least $100 billion by the Multilateral Development Banks (MDBs), including to low income countries, and ensure that all MDBs, including have the appropriate capital.

18. It is essential that these resources can be used effectively and flexibly to support growth. We welcome in this respect the progress made by the IMF with its new Flexible Credit Line (FCL) and its reformed lending and conditionality framework which will enable the IMF to ensure that its facilities address effectively the underlying causes of countries' balance of payments financing needs, particularly the withdrawal of external capital flows to the banking and corporate sectors. We support Mexico's decision to seek an FCL arrangement.

19. We have agreed to support a general SDR allocation which will inject $250 billion into the world economy and increase global liquidity, and urgent ratification of the Fourth Amendment.

20. In order for our financial institutions to help manage the crisis and prevent future crises we must strengthen their longer term relevance, effectiveness and legitimacy. So alongside the significant increase in resources agreed today we are determined to reform and modernise the international financial institutions to ensure they can assist members and shareholders effectively in the new challenges they face. We will reform their mandates, scope and governance to reflect changes in the world economy and the new challenges of globalisation, and that emerging and developing economies, including the poorest, must have greater voice and representation. This must be accompanied by action to increase the credibility and accountability of the institutions through better strategic oversight and decision making. To this end:

- we commit to implementing the package of IMF quota and voice reforms agreed in April 2008 and call on the IMF to complete the next review of quotas by January 2011;
- we agree that, alongside this, consideration should be given to greater involvement of the Fund's Governors in providing strategic direction to the IMF and increasing its accountability;
- we commit to implementing the World Bank reforms agreed in October 2008. We look forward to further recommendations, at the next meetings, on voice and representation reforms on an accelerated timescale, to be agreed by the 2010 Spring Meetings;
- we agree that the heads and senior leadership of the international financial institutions should be appointed through an open, transparent, and merit-based selection process; and
- building on the current reviews of the IMF and World Bank we asked the Chairman, working with the G20 Finance Ministers, to consult widely in an inclusive process and report back to the next meeting with proposals for further reforms to improve the responsiveness and adaptability of the IFIs.

21. In addition to reforming our international financial institutions for the new challenges of globalisation we agreed on the desirability of a new global consensus on the key values and principles that will promote sustainable economic activity. We support discussion on such a charter for sustainable economic activity with a view to further discussion at our next meeting. We take note of the work started in other fora in this regard and look forward to further discussion of this charter for sustainable economic activity.

Resisting protectionism and promoting global trade and investment

22. World trade growth has underpinned rising prosperity for half a century. But it is now falling for the first time in 25 years. Falling demand is exacerbated by growing protectionist pressures and a withdrawal of trade credit. Reinvigorating world trade and investment is essential for restoring global growth. We will not repeat the historic mistakes of protectionism of previous eras. To this end:

- we reaffirm the commitment made in Washington: to refrain from raising new barriers to investment or to trade in goods and services, imposing new export restrictions, or implementing World Trade Organisation (WTO) inconsistent measures to stimulate exports. In addition we will rectify promptly any such measures. We extend this pledge to the end of 2010;
- we will minimise any negative impact on trade and investment of our domestic policy actions including fiscal policy and action in support of the financial sector. We will not retreat into financial protectionism, particularly measures that constrain worldwide capital flows, especially to developing countries;
- we will notify promptly the WTO of any such measures and we call on the WTO, together with other international bodies, within their respective mandates, to monitor and report publicly on our adherence to these undertakings on a quarterly basis;
- we will take, at the same time, whatever steps we can to promote and facilitate trade and investment; and
- we will ensure availability of at least $250 billion over the next two years to support trade finance through our export credit and investment agencies and through the MDBs. We also ask our regulators to make use of available flexibility in capital requirements for trade finance.

23. We remain committed to reaching an ambitious and balanced conclusion to the Doha Development Round, which is urgently needed. This could boost the global economy by at least $150 billion per annum. To achieve this we are committed to building on the progress already made, including with regard to modalities.

24. We will give renewed focus and political attention to this critical issue in the coming period and will use our continuing work and all international meetings that are relevant to drive progress.

Ensuring a fair and sustainable recovery for all

25. We are determined not only to restore growth but to lay the foundation for a fair and sustainable world economy. We recognise that the current crisis has a disproportionate impact on the vulnerable in the poorest countries and recognise our collective responsibility to mitigate the social impact of the crisis to minimise long-lasting damage to global potential. To this end:

- we reaffirm our historic commitment to meeting the Millennium Development Goals and to achieving our respective ODA pledges, including commitments on Aid for Trade, debt relief, and the Gleneagles commitments, especially to sub-Saharan Africa;
- the actions and decisions we have taken today will provide $50 billion to support social protection, boost trade and safeguard development in low income countries, as part of the significant increase in crisis support for these and other developing countries and emerging markets;
- we are making available resources for social protection for the poorest countries, including through investing in long-term food security and through voluntary bilateral contributions to the World Bank's Vulnerability Framework, including the Infrastructure Crisis Facility, and the Rapid Social Response Fund;
- we have committed, consistent with the new income model, that additional resources from agreed sales of IMF gold will be used, together with surplus income, to provide $6 billion additional concessional and flexible finance for the poorest countries over the next 2 to 3 years. We call on the IMF to come forward with concrete proposals at the Spring Meetings;
- we have agreed to review the flexibility of the Debt Sustainability Framework and call on the IMF and World Bank to report to the IMFC and Development Committee at the Annual Meetings; and
- we call on the UN, working with other global institutions, to establish an effective mechanism to monitor the impact of the crisis on the poorest and most vulnerable.

26. We recognise the human dimension to the crisis. We commit to support those affected by the crisis by creating employment opportunities and through income support measures. We will build a fair and family-friendly labour market for both women and men. We therefore welcome the reports of the London Jobs Conference and the Rome Social Summit and the key principles they proposed. We will support employment by stimulating growth, investing in education and training, and through active labour market policies, focusing on the most vulnerable. We call upon the ILO, working with other relevant organisations, to assess the actions taken and those required for the future.

27. We agreed to make the best possible use of investment funded by fiscal stimulus programmes towards the goal of building a resilient, sustainable, and green recovery. We will make the transition towards clean, innovative, resource efficient, low carbon technologies and infrastructure. We encourage the MDBs to contribute fully to the achievement of this objective. We will identify and work together on further measures to build sustainable economies.

28. We reaffirm our commitment to address the threat of irreversible climate change, based on the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities, and to reach agreement at the UN Climate Change conference in Copenhagen in December 2009.

Delivering our commitments

29. We have committed ourselves to work together with urgency and determination to translate these words into action. We agreed to meet again before the end of this year to review progress on our commitments.

216. Communiqué on the Meeting of Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors of the G-20 countries.

London, September 5, 2009.

1. We, the G20 Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors, met ahead of the Pittsburgh Summit to assess our progress in delivering the Global Plan for Recovery and Reform and agree further actions to ensure sustainable growth and build a stronger international financial system. We reiterated the need for swift and full implementation of all the commitments made at the Washington and London Summits and have agreed the further necessary steps to strengthen the financial system, as set out in the accompanying declaration.

2. Our unprecedented, decisive and concerted policy action has helped to arrest the decline and boost global demand. Financial markets are stabilising and the global economy is improving, but we remain cautious about the outlook for growth and jobs, and are particularly concerned about the impact on many low income countries. We will continue to implement decisively our necessary financial support measures and expansionary monetary and fiscal policies, consistent with price stability and long-term fiscal sustainability, until recovery is secured.

3. We must build on what we have already achieved and tackle the significant challenges that lie ahead. It is vital for growth that we act to support lending, including dealing with impaired assets and conducting robust stress tests where necessary. We must promote employment through structural policies, active labour market policies, and training and education. We will work to address excessive commodity price volatility by improving the functioning and transparency of physical and financial markets and promoting a closer dialogue between producer and consumer countries. We welcome the swift implementation of the $250 billion trade finance initiative and reaffirm our commitment to fight all forms of protectionism and to reach an ambitious and balanced conclusion to the Doha Development Round.

4. We agreed the need for a transparent and credible process for withdrawing our extraordinary fiscal, monetary and financial sector support as recovery becomes firmly secured. Working with the IMF and the FSB we will develop cooperative and coordinated exit strategies, recognising that the scale, timing and sequencing of actions will vary across countries and across the types of policy measures.

5. We will work to achieve high, stable and sustainable growth, which will require orderly rebalancing in global demand, removal of domestic barriers and promotion of the efficient functioning of global markets. The need to combat climate change is urgent, and we will work towards a successful outcome in Copenhagen.

6. We have made significant progress in strengthening the IFIs, but more needs to be done. We are close to completing the delivery of $850 billion of additional resources agreed in April, including an expanded, more flexible New Arrangement to Borrow; and $50 billion to support social protection and safety nets, boost trade and safeguard development in low income countries. We welcome the overhaul of the IMF's lending facilities. We encourage the Multilateral Development Banks to make full use of their balance sheets and reaffirm our commitment to ensure they have appropriate capital, recognising that they are fully on track to deliver $100 billion of additional lending. In the period ahead we need to focus on providing resources to low income countries to support structural reforms and infrastructure development.

7. We look forward to prompt implementation of the 2008 IFI governance reforms, and will complete World Bank reforms by Spring 2010 and the next IMF quota review by January 2011. We recognise that the IMF should remain a quota-based organisation; and as part of the reforms, the voice and representation of emerging and developing economies, including the poorest, must be significantly increased to reflect changes in the world economy. To achieve this we look forward to substantial progress in Pittsburgh. We also reaffirm our commitment to increase accountability, strengthen the involvement of Fund Governors in strategic oversight, and agree to move to an open, transparent and merit-based selection of IFI management. To improve the role and effectiveness of the Fund in supporting stronger cooperation and ensuring a more sustainable global economy and international financial system, candid, even-handed, and independent surveillance will be vital. We call on the IMF, working with other international institutions, to continue assessing our actions to secure a sustainable recovery.

217. Declaration of the Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors of the G-20 countries on Further Steps to Strengthen the Financial System.

London, September 5, 2009.

We, the G20 Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors, reaffirmed our commitment to strengthen the financial system to prevent the build-up of excessive risk and future crises and support sustainable growth.

We have made substantial progress in delivering our ambitious plan, which will ensure a robust and comprehensive framework for global regulation and oversight. The Financial Stability Board and the Global Forum on Transparency and Exchange of Information have expanded their mandate and membership. The regulatory bodies have agreed to more stringent capital requirements for risky trading activities, off-balance sheet items, and securitised products; they have developed proposals to address procyclicality, issued important principles on compensation and deposit insurance, and established over thirty supervisory colleges. But more needs to be done to maintain momentum, make the system more resilient and ensure a level playing field, including the following actions:

1. Clear and identifiable progress in 2009 on delivering the following framework on corporate governance and compensation practices. This will prevent excessive short-term risk taking and mitigate systemic risk, on a globally consistent basis building on and strengthening the application of the FSB principles:
  - o greater disclosure and transparency of the level and structure of remuneration for those whose actions have a material impact on risk taking;
  - o global standards on pay structure, including on deferral, effective clawback, the relationship between fixed and variable remuneration, and guaranteed bonuses, to ensure compensation practices are aligned with long-term value creation and financial stability; and,
  - o corporate governance reforms to ensure appropriate board oversight of compensation and risk, including greater independence and accountability of board compensation committees.

We call on the FSB to report to the Pittsburgh Summit with detailed specific proposals for developing this framework, which could be incorporated into supervisory measures, and closely monitoring its delivery. We also ask the FSB to explore possible approaches for limiting total variable remuneration in relation to risk and long-term performance. G20 governments will also explore ways to address non-adherence with the FSB principles.

2. Stronger regulation and oversight for systemically important firms, including: rapid progress on developing tougher prudential requirements to reflect the higher costs of their failure; a requirement on systemic firms to develop firm-specific contingency plans; the establishment of crisis management groups for major cross-border firms to strengthen international cooperation on resolution; and strengthening the legal framework for crisis intervention and winding down firms.
3. Rapid progress in developing stronger prudential regulation by: requiring banks to hold more and better quality capital once recovery is assured; introducing countercyclical buffers; developing a leverage ratio as an element of the Basel framework; an international set of minimum quantitative standards for high quality liquidity; continuing to improve risk capture in the Basel II framework; accelerating work to develop macro-prudential tools; and exploring the possible role of contingent capital. We call on banks to retain a greater proportion of current profits to build capital, where needed, to support lending.
4. Tackling non-cooperative jurisdictions (NCJs): delivering an effective programme of peer review, capacity building and countermeasures to tackle NCJs that fail to meet regulatory standards, AML/CFT and tax information exchange standards; standing ready to use countermeasures against tax havens from March 2010; ensuring developing countries benefit from the new tax transparency, possibly including through a multilateral instrument; and calling on the FSB to report on criteria and compliance against regulatory standards by November 2009.
5. Consistent and coordinated implementation of international standards, including Basel II, to prevent the emergence of new risks and regulatory arbitrage, particularly with regard to Central Counterparties for credit derivatives, oversight of credit ratings agencies and hedge funds, and quantitative retention requirements for securitisations.
6. Convergence towards a single set of high-quality, global, independent accounting standards on financial instruments, loan-loss provisioning, off-balance sheet exposures and the impairment and valuation of financial assets. Within the framework of the independent accounting standard setting process, the IASB is encouraged to take account of the Basel Committee guiding principles on IAS 39 and the report of the Financial Crisis Advisory Group; and its constitutional review should improve the involvement of stakeholders, including prudential regulators and the emerging markets.

218. Extract Relevant to Prime Minister's visit to Pittsburg for the G-20 Summit Conference from the media briefing by the Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao.

* For the briefing on UNGA, Please See Document No.700.

By way of background, the G-20 came into being in 1999 following the East Asian financial crisis. It is an informal forum comprising major developed countries and leading emerging market economies representing around 90% of global GDP, 85% of world trade and two-thirds of humanity.

The G-20 had been traditionally meeting at the level of Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors. As you are aware, in the wake of the international financial and economic crisis, the first G-20 Summit was held in Washington DC (November 15, 2008) marking the arrival of dynamic emerging market countries at the global high table. The Washington Declaration included:

- Common understanding of the causes of the global crisis
- Strong message for restoring confidence and stability
- Measures for combating the crisis and restoring growth
- Launch of an action plan

The London Summit (April 2, 2009) had issued a Communiqué which addressed the broad themes or issues relating to:

- Ambitious stimulus and growth measures including pledge to mobilize $1.1 trillion in resources for the international financial institutions mainly to sustain growth in emerging markets.
- Strong regulatory package
- Commitment against protectionism in all its forms
- Strengthening and expansion of the Financial Stability Forum (FSF) now called the Financial Stability Board (FSB) and the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision (BCBS)

The steps taken by the G-20 to augment the resources of the multilateral development banks (MDBs) has led to substantial stepping up of World Bank lending to India. Likewise, the G-20 pressure on the Asian Development Bank (ADB) to enhance its capital is likely to increase infrastructure funding for India. The steps taken by the G-20 to stabilize financial markets and the global economy can be expected to lead to an early revival of private capital flows, and a step up in domestic growth through revival of external demand and exports.

The preparatory process for the forthcoming Pittsburgh Summit has included meetings of the G-20 Finance Ministers & Central Bank Governors, as well as meetings of the G-20 Sherpas earlier this month.

The Pittsburgh Summit will take the process forward. Without trying to pre-judge the Summit results or to speculate on the details, the Leaders could be expected to review the international financial and economic parameters since the London Summit and take stock of the improving situation including the emerging “green shoots of recovery” since then. While the earlier G-20 Summits had focused on immediate action to contain a rapidly deteriorating downward spiral, the Pittsburgh Summit is likely to take a more long-term view of the global economy. The Leaders can also be expected to review the Washington and the London Summit measures adopted and implemented so far and their impact. Broadly speaking, they may:

- Exchange views on stimulus and growth measures while planning exit strategies with caution
- Review the regulatory framework
- Reiterate commitment against protectionism
- Focus on reforms of the international financial institutions
- Redress the requirements of mobilizing resources for the poor developing countries
- Send out a strong and clear political message calling for a balanced and successful outcome of the climate change negotiations in the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) at Copenhagen
- Chart a roadmap for the future

In terms of an outcome document, a Summit Declaration/Communiqué is expected to be issued, though as I have said we should refrain from pre-judging the outcome of the Summit.

Question: On the G20 meeting in Pittsburgh, the EU had a summit of Heads of States and Governments where they made several proposals regarding climate change. One was that all G20 States should participate in financing climate change measures in least-developed countries. What does India think of this proposal? Does it support it? Secondly, France and Germany propose that the EU levy a carbon tariff on imports if there will be no agreement in Copenhagen. What does India think of this proposal?

Foreign Secretary: On your question about forums like G20 being seized with the climate change issue, I just wanted to say that obviously all these various mechanisms including the G20 structure give an impetus to the multilateral negotiations under the UNFCCC through a strong political message. But these are not negotiating fora in themselves and cannot substitute for the mechanisms already established under the UNFCCC insofar as climate change issues are concerned.

On the issue of the carbon tariffs and the Indian position on that, as you know climate change is a global environmental concern and it requires a global response. Such a response has to be based on the principle of equity and common and differentiated responsibility and respective capabilities. And most of all it should take into account the imperatives of poverty reduction and economic development in developing countries. So, any long-term goal or any conditionalities that you set should always take into account the centrality of the need of the developing countries in this regard.

Question: Foreign Secretary, what has brought about the change for us to say that we will now cut emissions voluntarily?

Foreign Secretary: You are asking me whether India is ready to accept quantifiable emission targets?

Question: Yes. Because the Minister had first said, during the visit of the Danish Prime Minister, that we were a bit hesitant on this issue a while earlier but then now that has changed. So, what I am asking is what has prompted this change?

Foreign Secretary: Let me put it in context for you. Climate change takes place because of the cumulative accumulation of greenhouse gases in the earth's atmosphere. This has happened over two centuries of industrial activity and high consumption lifestyles in the developed world. There is thus a historical responsibility involved on the part of the developed countries. On the other hand the per capita emissions of developing countries are still very low. For example, India's per capita CO<sub>2</sub> emissions are currently only 1.1 tonnes when compared to over 20 tonnes for the United States and over 10 tonnes for most OECD countries. It is in recognition of these facts that a legally binding emission and production target has been stipulated by the international community under the Kyoto Protocol of the UNFCCC, while there is no such obligation for the developing countries. Despite this India has already declared that even as it pursues its social and economic development objectives, it will not allow its per capita greenhouse gas emissions to exceed the average per capita emissions of the developed countries. We have thus accepted a limit on our emissions, but at the same time provided an incentive to our developed country partners to be more ambitious. The more significant their reduction of emissions will be, the lower the limit we would need to accept for our own.

Question: What is Indian position on the reform of international financial architecture. What are Indian concerns which India will present during G20 summit? What are the initiatives? What would India like to highlight during the summit?

Foreign Secretary: On the issue of the reform of the international financial institutions, I think the most important issue before us is the need for these institutions to reflect ground economic realities as they exist internationally today. The other issues that we are focusing on are the issue of finances, the funding position of these institutions, the need to suitably define their mandate, and the need to strengthen their voice so as to reflect ground economic realities today.

Question: Madam, I think the Prime Minister is skipping UNGA because of the importance of G20. At this time global economic crisis, are we going to contribute to the G20 meeting? What are our expectations from the G20? Where will our Foreign Secretary be between the two?

Foreign Secretary: As I said in my introductory remarks, our expectation is that the forthcoming Pittsburgh Summit would take the process of all the understandings and the issues that have been identified in the previous summit meetings further forward. We do not want to prejudge the outcome of the summit or speculate on the details. The fact that we are an important member of the G20 as an emerging market economy and one of the largest economies in the world today, we will make important contributions to the furtherance and to the progress of this dialogue. As far as the second question you asked about my presence, I will be there during the Pittsburgh meetings. I will be a member of the delegation of the Prime Minister.

Question: Madam, you said the US is sponsoring a resolution on nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation. Who will represent India at this debate? What is our position? Do you envisage a growing global pressure, especially American pressure, over CTBT and non-proliferation issues? Linked with this, the nuclear establishment in India seem to be divided over the country's deterrence capability. What is Government's position at this moment?

Foreign Secretary: The first question you asked refers to the US sponsored meeting. This is a Security Council summit. As you know India is not yet a member of the Security Council. We are aware that the Council members are discussing a draft resolution on non-proliferation, and our Permanent Mission to the United Nations is closely monitoring those developments. That is where the matter stands at the moment.

To your second question, that is a matter you should address to the scientific community. I do not really want to enter into a debate on these issues in this forum.

Question: Madam, you have been listing many items on the agenda of G20. From your point of view what will be the most important things that will be discussed in Pittsburgh? To put it differently, what will be India's specific message in this meeting?

Foreign Secretary: As you know, in the G20 today the summit meetings have been focused on the international financial and economic crisis. The results from the previous have all been positive. We want to cooperate and coordinate our positions and our outlook with other countries within the framework of the G20. As you are aware, the financial crisis has affected all countries in the world including India. This has been felt in terms of trade, in terms of investment, in terms of growth. While it is true that India has been relatively less affected than other countries, the impact has still been considerable because our growth rate has been brought down to the range of six to seven per cent from a range of nine per cent. Now we look forward, with the green shoots of economic recovery being visible, to coordinating efforts with a view to raising our growth rates and restoring trade and investment flows. We would also like to see the Pittsburgh summit follow up on the regulatory measures that are required to ensure that such a crisis, which was in the first place the result of regulatory failure in the developed world, is not repeated. And we remain opposed to protectionism in all its forms covering trade in goods and services, investment, and financial flows. As I said earlier, we hope that the Pittsburgh Summit will also address the issue of reform of international financial institutions. Therefore, we do have a proactive and constructive agenda when it comes to the G20 summit.

Question: Madam, you have also been invited to the bilateral talks in Washington. Could you just tell us what is on the agenda and when are those talks being held?

Foreign Secretary: I will be in Washington on Monday when I will meet Under Secretary Burns, my counterpart at the State Department. He has invited me across to Washington from New York. This will be my first meeting with him and I am looking forward to that meeting. As you know, we have what has been termed as a stand-alone global partnership with the United States. This is a relationship where we are seeking to build a strong dialogue architecture built on the five pillars of strategic cooperation; energy and climate change; education and development; economy, trade and agriculture; science and technology and; health and innovation. So, we have a very productive exchange of views ongoing with the Government of the United States on these issues and I am looking forward to my meetings in Washington.

Question: -- --- not audible

Foreign Secretary: I do not believe we are being diffident at all. I think at every opportunity we have expressed ourselves very clearly and with confidence and clarity. And we will do so at the opportunity provided by the G20 meeting also. The responsibilities of the developed countries, especially in terms of financing of all the technological requirements that we as developing countries need to deal with the effects of climate change cannot be denied. We have proclaimed that need at every opportunity and we will do so even on this occasion.

As far as the UN Security Council Summit is concerned, yes, we have certain positions that we have expressed not just now but also in the past on the provisions that you referred to in the draft resolution. All I want to say on this issue for the moment is that we are in touch with friendly countries in the Security Council about this.

219. Statement of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh prior to his departure for the G-20 Summit at Pittsburg.

New Delhi, September 23, 2009.

I leave today to attend the Summit of G-20 Leaders in Pittsburgh, USA. This is the third Summit of the G-20 Leaders in less than a year. This reflects the seriousness which the G-20 countries attach not just to the recovery of the global economy and financial system, but to a recovery that is coordinated, sustainable and enduring.

The Summits in Washington and London were convened at the height of the global economic crisis, and therefore focused on the urgent and the immediate. The London Summit resulted in ambitious liquidity stimulus measures and growth packages. Importantly, it pledged to mobilize USD 1.1 trillion of resources for international financial institutions, largely to sustain growth in emerging markets. The steps taken by the G-20 to augment the resources of multilateral development banks have led to substantial stepping up of World Bank lending to India.

The global economy and financial markets have shown a distinct improvement since then, but we are still not out of the woods.

Even though our economic growth rate has slowed to 6.7% in 2008-09, India approaches the Pittsburgh Summit with a sense of confidence. Our growth is primarily driven by domestic demand, our savings rate is robust and the external sector has exhibited resilience. Capital flows, especially portfolio flows, have started picking up, and we remain an attractive investment destination.

The Pittsburgh Summit is expected to focus on medium and long-term issues such as a framework for sustainable and balanced growth, strengthening the international financial regulatory system, reforming the mandate mission and governance of the IMF and development banks, strengthening support for the most vulnerable, an open global economy and energy and climate change.

It is necessary for India to engage in the management of the world economy because we have a lot at stake, and a lot to contribute.

I will convey India's interest in seeing the earliest possible return to trend growth and stabilisation of the banking and financial sectors in the advanced economies, because this directly affects our exports, capital inflows and investment. We would like to see a continuous increase in the capital base of multilateral development banks to finance the massive infrastructure needs of emerging markets.

The expansion and strengthening of the erstwhile Financial Stability Forum, and now the Financial Stability Board, and the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision was a step in the right direction to address the regulatory aspects. There is a need to carry the process of governance reform of international financial institutions further to give greater voice and representation to under-represented countries.

We would also like to see a strong message to emerge from Pittsburgh against protectionism in all its forms, whether trade in goods, services, investment or financial flows.

The G-20 process is a continuing one and it is in our interest to ensure that it succeeds both in its short term and long term objectives.

During the Summit I look forward to exchanging views on these and other matters with several of the leaders who will be present, including the new Prime Minister of Japan.

220. Remarks by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Plenary session of the G-20 Summit Meeting.

Pittsburgh, September 25, 2009.

Mr. President,

Let me begin by thanking you for the excellent arrangements made for this Summit and for your warm hospitality.

2. We have discussed the complex challenges posed by the need to revive the global economy. I would like to focus on what this implies for the developing countries.

3. We all know that these countries were in no way responsible for the crisis, but in many ways, they are the hardest hit. In the seven years before the crisis, the GDP of the developing countries grew at an average of 6.5 per cent per year. In 2009 it will grow by only 1.5 per cent, implying a fall in real per capita income.

4. Of course, experience varies across countries. Countries in Asia have generally fared much better. Countries in sub-Saharan Africa and in many other regions have been very badly hit.

5. India too has been affected but, in common with other Asian countries, we have weathered the crisis relatively well given the circumstances. After growing at 9 per cent per year for four years our economy slowed down to 6.7 per cent in 2008-09. In 2009, despite a drought, which will affect agricultural production, we expect to grow by around 6.3 per cent in 2009-10 and then recover to 7 to 7.5 percent growth next year. This relatively strong performance is partly due to the strong stimulus measures introduced in the second half of 2008-09, which have been continued in the current financial year.

6. However, the fact that some of us have fared relatively well does not mean that the crisis has not affected the developing world significantly. The fact that the growth of developing countries as a group will fall to 1.5 per cent indicates the extent of the impact.

7. An estimated 90 million people in the developing world are likely to be pushed below the poverty line. Lower revenues will also lead to lower levels of expenditure on rural infrastructure, health and education. This will not only hurt future growth, but also delay achievement of the Millennium Development Goals. Social and political tensions could increase, undermining the national consensus in support of much needed structural reforms and adjustment.

8. The prospects of convergence, which seemed bright before the crisis, have receded. We must take steps to counter these developments and restore the momentum of growth in the developing world.

9. First, the problem must be tackled at its root by ensuring the quickest possible return to normalcy in the global economy. This requires a commitment that we will not undertake any premature withdrawal of stimulus. We must certainly plan for an orderly "exit" when the time is right, but that time is not now. The global economy may be bottoming out, but it is not expected to reach 3% growth until the end of 2010.

10. The depressed state of the global economy translates into a considerable loss of export demand for the developing countries. Exports of non-oil developing countries are expected to decline by about $900 billion in 2009, compared to the previous year. They will remain well below the trajectory earlier projected for several years. This is bound to reduce production, incomes and employment in the developing countries.

11. The measures taken by the G-20 to increase the flow of assistance will help, and they certainly represent an important achievement in international cooperation. However, the scale of the transfers we have planned will only help the developing countries to manage their balance of payments at depressed levels of economic activity. They cannot counter the effect of the loss of exports.

12. To resuscitate growth in the developing countries, we have to replace lost export demand by expanding other components of domestic demand. The best option is to expand investment. An obvious area where additional investment is needed in developing countries is infrastructure, including energy, transport and other infrastructure for public services. These investments can be made ahead of requirements and therefore are an ideal form of countercyclical activity.

13. The World Bank and the other regional development banks can play a major role by financing such investment. They should expand lending for infrastructure development to emerging market countries which have relied on capital markets in more normal times, but will need support in the medium run, till capital markets recover. The poorer, low-income countries had very little access to capital markets. For them, financing on suitable terms may have to be made available for an even longer period.

14. A strategy of expanding investment demand in developing countries to replace lost export demand will not only help growth in developing countries, it will also contribute to a broader global revival. This is because the import content of investment is typically higher than of exports, which means a significant percentage of the initial increase in demand will spill over into the global economy.

15. The World Bank has announced that the volume of IBRD lending would be increased to $100 billion over the next three years. This is commendable. However, if the capital base of the IBRD is not expanded, they will have to compress lending at the end of the three year period to less than the pre-crisis level. This is surely not acceptable.

16. There is, therefore, an overwhelming case for doubling the capital of the IBRD. Similar increases in capital are needed for the other regional development banks also.

17. I realize there may be hesitation in committing additional public resources for recapitalization. However, we must keep in mind that what is needed for these institutions is small compared to the massive scale of public money used to stabilize the private financial system in industrialized countries. Some additional effort is surely justified to help the developing countries to cope with the spillover effects of a crisis for which they were not responsible.

18. Finally, Mr. President, a word on trade. The collapse in export markets makes it all the more important that the market access of developing countries is not constrained by protectionism. I recognize that when growth is low, and unemployment is high, it is inevitable that protectionist pressures will arise. It will be a test of the collective political leadership of this Group, whether we are able to resist these pressures in our countries. I am happy to note that the Delhi Ministerial succeeded in reviving momentum for the Doha Round negotiations. I venture to suggest that this is an area where the industrial countries can give a lead to achieve a successful outcome.

19. We have done a great deal on finance and what remains is easily doable. We need to address the difficult tasks on the trade front which are now more important for the medium term.

Thank you.

221. Press Conference by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the conclusion of the G20 Summit.

Pittsburgh, September 25, 2009.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening once again and welcome to the press conference by the Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh. The Prime Minister would be making an opening statement. Thereafter he will be happy to take a few questions. Sir, the floor is yours.

Prime Minister (Dr. Manmohan Singh): Ladies and gentlemen, we have had a very productive meeting in which there was a comprehensive discussion among the leaders of the world on a wide range of economic issues.

The communiqué including its summary statement is before you, as is the text of my remarks. This Summit was not meant to be a trillion dollar summit as was the case with the London Summit. Its purpose was to review what has happened since the last meeting in London and chart the way forward in the light of experience. Some of the important issues we discussed are:

1. There will be no pre-mature withdrawal of stimulus.
2. The emergency financing for the International Monetary Fund has been successfully completed. We now have to address the issue of the IMF quota increase by early 2011. We have agreed to shift 5 per cent share to countries that are under-represented in the IMF.
3. We have agreed to help the World Bank and other regional development banks to find the necessary resources based on a review of their capital needs to be completed in the first half of 2010.
4. We have agreed on a new framework for discussing global macro balances, and the contributions individual countries can make through their own policies with a new process of peer review or discussion in the Group of 20.
5. We have discussed the important issue of climate change. The G20 have called for a successful outcome in the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change at Copenhagen.
6. We have agreed that we should work for an early resolution of the Doha round of trade negotiations so as to counter protectionism. The success of the Delhi Ministerial meeting in reviving the process of negotiations was appreciated.

7. We have agreed - and in some ways this is the most important conclusion emerging from the meeting - that the Group of 20 will henceforth be the premier forum for international economic issues. This is an important development to broadening the global governance structure, to incorporate major developing and emerging countries into the new framework.

Thank you.

Question: Mr. Prime Minister, how serious is India's economic crisis and how can the NRIs help? Can you clarify, Sir, Chinese bragging going on around the globe including in the media in India and here in the US?

Prime Minister: There is no economic crisis in India. It is certainly true that as a sequel to the global economic crisis our exports have suffered. That has affected the rate of growth. Even then our economy is growing at the rate of six to six and a half per cent. Therefore, there is no crisis as such in India. As far as the NRIs are concerned, they are very welcome to contribute to India's development through bank deposits, through participation in capital markets both direct and portfolio investment. Portfolios are open to non-resident investments and we very much welcome their participation in processes of economic development in our country.

Question: On behalf of Indian Correspondents resident in the US, who unfortunately will not be travelling with you tomorrow, I would like to wish you a very happy birthday.

Prime Minister: Thank you very much.

Question: I would like to draw your attention, Prime Minister, to a late night announcement by the White House last night which implied that the G20 will be replacing the G8 as the primary vehicle for economic negotiations globally. What in your opinion is the impact of this on the changing architecture of international economic diplomacy?

Prime Minister: I think interdependence of nations is a fact of life. Interdependence in a globalised world means that no country, howsoever powerful it may be, can take on the entire burden of economic adjustment and economic decision-making that may be required to manage the global system in an orderly fashion. It is that perception and that reality which has I think persuaded many people in Europe and the United States that this G8 is ill-equipped to handle all the global issues. With the rise of Asia, with the growth of India, China and Brazil, the economic decision-making has to take into account the views of these countries if it is to have an optimum impact.

Question: President Obama has piloted a Resolution in the UN Security Council asking all countries to sign on to the NPT. What would your response be to that? Is this another irritant in the Indo-US relationship which has seen better days under the previous Administration?

Prime Minister: We have been assured that this is not a Resolution directed at India; and that the US commitment to carry out its obligations under the Civil Nuclear Agreement that we have signed with the United States remains undiluted. That, we have been assured officially by the United States Government.

Question: After three rounds of G20, can you give us a sense of what India's aam aadmi (Common man) has gained from this? How does he benefit in his daily life from these G20 meetings?

Prime Minister: If the world economy collapses, there is obviously some effect on our country. Already the rate of growth of our economy, particularly our exports, has suffered. This has led to a decline in exports of important labour-intensive products like gems and jewellery, leather goods, textiles. No country by itself can ensure that all its goals of economic life can be achieved working to the exclusion of other participants, in the increasingly interdependent world that we live in. There is, therefore, a necessity for India to ensure that the global economic system continues to progress. We need an external environment which is conducive to the growth of our exports. We need an external environment which is conducive to the increasing flow of capital; an international environment which is conducive to increased flows of technology. All these things have a bearing on the rate of growth of our economy.

Question: Sir, the G20 has reaffirmed commitment towards continuation of stimulus packages and also no premature withdrawal of stimulus packages. Given our fiscal situation, do we have any scope for any more stimulus measures? Also given the fact the way inflation is rearing its head again, is not it time to start thinking of some amount of withdrawal of the easy monitoring fiscal policies?

Prime Minister: Our specific circumstances have to respond to our domestic situation. It is certainly true that we have a limited fiscal space and, therefore, the scope for fiscal stimulus, accelerated stimulus, is rather limited. Monetary policy had some scope, but that also would be affected if inflation really becomes a problem. As of now inflation is not a problem. Inflation is under control. But you are right that our options are limited, constrained as we are by the substantial amount of fiscal deficit. Also with the monetary initiatives which the Reserve Bank has taken, the scope gets reduced at the margin.

Question: Over-leveraging of banks in the industrial economies took the whole world almost to the brink of disaster. IMF and World Bank used to advise everybody else. Now, will the IMF and the World Bank have any role in monitoring the economies and banks of industrialised nations?

Prime Minister: There is the IMF, there is the World Financial Stability Board, there is also an agreement in today's meeting that the Group of 20 economies will be monitored by the IMF through an independent process of evaluation, and there will be a sort of peer review. So, obviously I think the process of peer review, if it gets going, will provide opportunities for all Group of 20 countries to exchange views, to discuss, to analyse the weaknesses and the strength of the economies of various countries including the strength of their financial system, the banking system included.

Question: Mr. Prime Minister, you mentioned that India has put a priority, or the G20 leaders put a priority, on concluding the Doha Round in 2010. These negotiations have gone on for some time and there is a perception that the US is maybe not moving as aggressively as it should be to finish that round. I just wanted to know what sort of signal you got from President Obama on this point. Did it appear to you that the United States was interested in wrapping up those negotiations?

Prime Minister: That is certainly what he stated that the United States is as much interested in ensuring that the Doha Round reaches a satisfactory, balanced conclusion as any other country. And I have no reason to doubt his sincerity.

Question: The Foreign Ministers of India and Pakistan are scheduled to meet very soon in New York. How hopeful do you feel about the outcome of those talks and what will India's main message and focus be during those talks?

Prime Minister: India's message is that India seeks to normalise its relations with Pakistan. The only obstacle is that Pakistan should give up its old attitudes regarding the use of terror as an instrument of state policy. We hope that they would carry out investigations based on the material that we have supplied to Pakistan regarding the massacres that took place in Mumbai in November. Although the tragedy took place in India, the conspiracy was hatched in Pakistan, and that has been admitted by Pakistan Government. We sincerely hope that they would carry forward this process of investigation and bring to book all the culprits. If that is done, I have said it in Parliament, we will move an extra mile in order to normalise our relations. We are neighbours, and as neighbours we have an obligation to work together.

Question: On the very eve of this Conference, a sensational disclosure about Iran's nuclear capability has come out. Every big nation has reacted very sharply to it including the United States, England and France. What is India's position about it? Will this disclosure in any way affect the directions taken by G20?

Prime Minister: This is not a subject matter which came up for discussion in the G20. I heard only today about this news being flashed. As far as India is concerned, our position has been a principled position. Iran is a signatory to the NPT. As a signatory to the NPT, it has all the rights which go with its membership of peaceful use of atomic energy, and it must also carry out all its obligations. That is our position and that is the principled position we have taken in the last five years.

Question: Sir, in your remarks you have said that stimulus packages should not be withdrawn now because you believe that there is economic recovery but it has not yet fully reached its goal. As of today food prices in India are not under control and exports position is also not good. What are the steps that you will be taking going from here? Are you going to give any further packages, bring about any major change in policy to uplift the mood?

Prime Minister: I should not like to announce any changes in policies while I am on the foreign soil.

Question: As India takes its seat at the high table in international affairs, we still live in a very unstable neighbourhood. How does India navigate its way through this unstable neighbourhood? Specifically there is a recent report where Gen McCrystal has made some critical observations about India's role in Afghanistan, although he acknowledges that it is useful for the Afghan people. Is there any hint from the US that India should dilute its stakes in Afghanistan?

Prime Minister: No, not to my knowledge. The United States and other European countries have been very appreciative of the role that India has played in Afghanistan. We have not supplied any armed forces; we are there to assist Afghan people in reconstruction and development. We are helping to finance some of the most important projects in the area of power, road transport, health, education. Till today we have committed about 1.3 billion dollars. Not only the Government and the people of Afghanistan appreciated but whenever I have had an opportunity to discuss with the European leaders and the leaders of the United States, they have been of the same view.

As far as the neighbourhood is concerned, I agree with you that we live in an unstable environment. We have to sail in these difficult waters as best as we can.

Question: Sir, through the Summit did you get an opportunity for a one-on-one meeting with President Obama?

Prime Minister: President Obama this time did not give anyone any separate meetings. But I had an opportunity to talk to him last night. I was sitting immediately to his right. I had an opportunity this morning also to talk to him on some important issues. But as a principle, this time he said because of his preoccupation with the Conference he was not able to meet any leader bilaterally.

Question: Sir, you may answer in English or in Hindi as you like: we want to know this time on black money, or tax heavens or like that doubtful money was discussed - has their importance come down or no attention was paid to that: It appears whatever progress was achieved in the last six months, was considered sufficient; this time the meeting was busy perhaps with too big issues that no attention was paid to it [free translation from Hindi text].

Prime Minister: No, the regulatory system has to be reformed is part of the continuing agenda of the G20. Therefore, treatment of entities in tax heavens remains a matter of concern. Even today's discussion touched upon that. So, it is not correct to say that that is a subject which is not of concern to the Group of 20.

Question: Sir, in your statement you have talked about the need for rejecting all kinds of protectionism. Similar words have been echoed by President Hu Jintao. More or less the words appear in the statement of the Brazilian President as well as the South African President. Are you all hinting at some of the protectionist measures initiated by some of the western economies?

Prime Minister: Obviously we are worried about protectionism raising its ugly head in many developed countries. So, there is no doubt about that.

Question: And in particular are you hinting at some of the measures that have been announced by the United States?

Prime Minister: The United States included.

Question: Sir, which part of the G20 agreement will help rebalance some of the major imbalances in the world economy? The macroeconomic review will say that China should increase domestic consumption and more foreign exchange resources should be diverted away from the dollar. Is there anything in this meeting's outcome which will help achieve this kind of aims?

Prime Minister: As of now the Group of 20 is an essay in persuasion. Whether this essay in persuasion really succeeds in achieving its objectives, only time can tell.

Question: Sir, did you get to meet the South African President and whether there was any talk on MTN which is a big issue now? Secondly, on stock markets nothing fundamentally has changed in the last one and a half years but the stock markets in India back home have gone up, almost doubled, in a short period of time. Fundamentally the economy is still reviving. Do you have any concerns on it?

Prime Minister: As far as the MTN issue is concerned, I did mention this to President Zuma that I sincerely hope that this deal will go through and that Indian companies will not be subjected to any discriminatory treatment. It has been agreed that this matter can be further discussed with the Government of South Africa.

As far as the stock market is concerned, I am now out of touch with what is happening in stock markets. But obviously in recent months the stock markets have benefited from the return of confidence, the return flow of capital back into India. So, that is one factor. Plus, I think the fundamentals of the economy continue to remain strong. If fundamentals have a role in influencing stock prices, I think that is in the right mood.

Question: Mr. Prime Minister, you mentioned the proposal to shift five per cent share representation on the IMF Board. Is this a figure that comports with India's perception of the governance overhaul that was necessary or is this a compromise figure?

Prime Minister: It is a compromise figure because as of now the developing countries' quota is about 44 per cent. The four countries who are members of BRIC had suggested a rebalancing to the extent of seven per cent, in which case the developing countries would have I think more than 50 per cent or nearly that. So, the compromise is, seven was the demand, five is the agreed. So, obviously it is a compromise.

Question: Okay. Secondly, how exactly will the peer review process work? Is it possible that this may place constraints on domestic policy-making in the future, given the specificity of circumstances that each individual country and particularly India, as you mentioned, faces?

Prime Minister: As far as our domestic policy is concerned, every year the fund reviews it under Article 4. I do not see what more can be done as far as reviewing the Indian policy. But bringing the policies of major developed countries within the framework of a review by the Group of 20 will give us an opportunity to pick up holes in the functioning of their economies. I think that is a positive factor.

Question: Mr. Prime Minister, to expand a little bit on the climate change issue, there is a speech by President Hu at the United Nations talking a little bit about climate change. There is only about two months' time left before Copenhagen. Are you optimistic about reaching an agreement at Copenhagen? And what actions could either developed or developing countries take to reach an outcome?

Prime Minister: Let me say that I am not an astrologer. There are difficulties. On the signs of climate change, now there is a broad agreement. But how to bring about the adjustments in emissions is a complicated matter which requires an exercise in burden-sharing. There is no agreement about the rules of the game as to how this burden-sharing is to be brought about. Developing countries are of the view that the major responsibility for bringing about this situation is that of the developed countries and, therefore, they should carry out credible action in order to control emissions; and that if the developing countries are required to take any national action, for that financial resources as well as technological support should be provided. There is a broad, vague agreement that any agreement in which developing countries are also required to take any national action will have to be accompanied by credible action on the part of developed countries by way of additional provision of finance and also in ensuring flow of technologies at affordable price. But other than expressing a pious wish with regard to the success of the framework convention meeting in Copenhagen, the Group of 20 did not go into the mechanics of these things.

Question: Out of all the planks on which agreement was reached between the G20 leaders, what do you think has been the one thing that is the most beneficial for India? You talked earlier about a conducive environment for exports. You also mentioned protectionist pressures rising in the developed world. How confident are you that the two can be reconciled?

Prime Minister: I think things could be worse with regard to protectionism. There is an evidence of creeping protectionism but it has not reached an alarming point. Therefore, it is necessary to wield international pressure to restrain and to restrict the growth of protectionism.

With regard to which of the measures taken will benefit India, let me say that I believe the institutionalisation of the Group of 20, plus also the agreement that countries which have adopted stimulus should not prematurely withdraw, has a very significant impact for the growth of Indian economy. India needs an international environment in which its economy can grow. That means, if the world economy is growing, if the world trade is growing, that certainly will help to improve our own growth reforms.

Question: Sir, you said there was an agreement that the stimulus packages should continue. Was there any realisation of the fact that this economic downturn should not block funds to developing countries for mitigation and adaptation to climate change at the G20 meeting?

Prime Minister: I am afraid the view that the developing countries should not adopt any mitigation or adaptation measures has no support among developed countries. Even developing countries recognise their responsibilities to undertake the adaptation and mitigation measures depending upon their capacities based on the principle of equity. I am not aware of anybody asking that the developing countries should not be asked to undertake any mitigation or adaptation efforts.

Question: Sir, important public figures in Pakistan have very openly admitted that the aid which was being given by the American Administration to them was being openly utilised for military purposes. Again huge aid has been given to them. Do you say that it will be again used for building military assets against India?

Prime Minister: I have seen those reports and the Government of India has officially taken note of that. We have brought this to the notice of the US Government. Even in the past whenever sophisticated weaponry was made available by the United States to Pakistan, we have always known that the only country against whom these weapons can be used is India.

Question: Mr. Prime Minister, two thirds of the Indian population and the area is very much affected by the Naxalite terrorism. In fact it is also said that they are getting foreign aid from the neighbouring countries. There is a doubt that proper steps are not being taken in this regard. Further, all development projects and programmes are very much affected. In fact, there is no development in those areas.

Prime Minister: We have to operate from both sides. We have to accelerate the tempo of development. But you are very right, if the law and order situation is disturbed, the development work cannot also proceed. A minimum amount of enforcement of law and order is an essential precondition even for carrying out development work. So, on both fronts action is being taken.

Question: Sir, just to take you back to Sharm el-Sheikh, you have broken through old mindsets in dealing with Pakistan. Does the lack of action on the ground by Islamabad disappoint you? Are you at all hopeful of Pakistan taking any credible action and thereby the Composite Dialogue process being restarted?

Question: If you read my statement in Parliament soon after I came back from Sharm el-Sheikh, I think I have explained the whole position at great length. There is no change in my thinking on that subject.

Question: Sir, first of all I will like to greet you on your birthday from all the countrymen; I would like to know we will get the cake in Geneva or in the plane itself. Also on this occasion what message you would like to give to the people of India.[free translation from the Hindi text]

Prime Minister: I am very grateful to the people of India that they have given me this unique opportunity to serve them. I completed the first five years that they have given me this opportunity for. They have renewed their confidence in me and it is a debt I can never repay. The only way I can make even an effort to repay is to rededicate myself to the service of the people of India to the best of my ability.

Thank you very much.

Official Spokesperson: The press conference now draws to a close.

222. Communique issued by the Leaders of the G-20 at the end of their Summit deliberations.

Pittsburg, September 25, 2009.

PREAMBLE

1. We meet in the midst of a critical transition from crisis to recovery to turn the page on an era of irresponsibility and to adopt a set of policies, regulations and reforms to meet the needs of the 21st century global economy.
2. When we last gathered in April, we confronted the greatest challenge to the world economy in our generation.
3. Global output was contracting at pace not seen since the 1930s. Trade was plummeting. Jobs were disappearing rapidly. Our people worried that the world was on the edge of a depression.
4. At that time, our countries agreed to do everything necessary to ensure recovery, to repair our financial systems and to maintain the global flow of capital.
5. It worked.
6. Our forceful response helped stop the dangerous, sharp decline in global activity and stabilize financial markets. Industrial output is now rising in nearly all our economies. International trade is starting to recover. Our financial institutions are raising needed capital, financial markets are showing a willingness to invest and lend, and confidence has improved.
7. Today, we reviewed the progress we have made since the London Summit in April. Our national commitments to restore growth resulted in the largest and most coordinated fiscal and monetary stimulus ever undertaken. We acted together to increase dramatically the resources necessary to stop the crisis from spreading around the world. We took steps to fix the broken regulatory system and started to implement sweeping reforms to reduce the risk that financial excesses will again destabilize the global economy.
8. A sense of normalcy should not lead to complacency.
9. The process of recovery and repair remains incomplete. In many countries, unemployment remains unacceptably high. The conditions for a recovery of private demand are not yet fully in place. We cannot rest until the global economy is restored to full health, and hard-working families the world over can find decent jobs.

10. We pledge today to sustain our strong policy response until a durable recovery is secured. We will act to ensure that when growth returns, jobs do too. We will avoid any premature withdrawal of stimulus. At the same time, we will prepare our exit strategies and, when the time is right, withdraw our extraordinary policy support in a cooperative and coordinated way, maintaining our commitment to fiscal responsibility.

11. Even as the work of recovery continues, we pledge to adopt the policies needed to lay the foundation for strong, sustained and balanced growth in the 21st century. We recognize that we have to act forcefully to overcome the legacy of the recent, severe global economic crisis and to help people cope with the consequences of this crisis. We want growth without cycles of boom and bust and markets that foster responsibility not recklessness.

12. Today we agreed:

13. To launch a framework that lays out the policies and the way we act together to generate strong, sustainable and balanced global growth. We need a durable recovery that creates the good jobs our people need.

14. We need to shift from public to private sources of demand, establish a pattern of growth across countries that is more sustainable and balanced, and reduce development imbalances. We pledge to avoid destabilizing booms and busts in asset and credit prices and adopt macroeconomic policies, consistent with price stability, that promote adequate and balanced global demand. We will also make decisive progress on structural reforms that foster private demand and strengthen long-run growth potential.

15. Our Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth is a compact that commits us to work together to assess how our policies fit together, to evaluate whether they are collectively consistent with more sustainable and balanced growth, and to act as necessary to meet our common objectives.

16. To make sure our regulatory system for banks and other financial firms reins in the excesses that led to the crisis. Where reckless behavior and a lack of responsibility led to crisis, we will not allow a return to banking as usual.

17. We committed to act together to raise capital standards, to implement strong international compensation standards aimed at ending practices that lead to excessive risk-taking, to improve the over-the-counter derivatives market and to create more powerful tools to hold large global firms to account for the risks they take. Standards for large global financial firms should be commensurate with the cost of their failure. For all these reforms, we have set for ourselves strict and precise timetables.

18. To reform the global architecture to meet the needs of the 21st century. After this crisis, critical players need to be at the table and fully vested in our institutions to allow us to cooperate to lay the foundation for strong, sustainable and balanced growth.

19. We designated the G-20 to be the premier forum for our international economic cooperation. We established the Financial Stability Board (FSB) to include major emerging economies and welcome its efforts to coordinate and monitor progress in strengthening financial regulation.

20. We are committed to a shift in International Monetary Fund (IMF) quota share to dynamic emerging markets and developing countries of at least 5% from over-represented countries to under-represented countries using the current quota formula as the basis to work from. Today we have delivered on our promise to contribute over $500 billion to a renewed and expanded IMF New Arrangements to Borrow (NAB).

21. We stressed the importance of adopting a dynamic formula at the World Bank which primarily reflects countries' evolving economic weight and the World Bank's development mission, and that generates an increase of at least 3% of voting power for developing and transition countries, to the benefit of under-represented countries. While recognizing that over-represented countries will make a contribution, it will be important to protect the voting power of the smallest poor countries. We called on the World Bank to play a leading role in responding to problems whose nature requires globally coordinated action, such as climate change and food security, and agreed that the World Bank and the regional development banks should have sufficient resources to address these challenges and fulfill their mandates.

22. To take new steps to increase access to food, fuel and finance among the world's poorest while clamping down on illicit outflows. Steps to reduce the development gap can be a potent driver of global growth.

23. Over four billion people remain undereducated, ill-equipped with capital and technology, and insufficiently integrated into the global economy. We need to work together to make the policy and institutional changes needed to accelerate the convergence of living standards and productivity in developing and emerging economies to the levels of the advanced economies. To start, we call on the World Bank to develop a new trust fund to support the new Food Security Initiative for low-income countries announced last summer.

We will increase, on a voluntary basis, funding for programs to bring clean affordable energy to the poorest, such as the Scaling Up Renewable Energy Program.

24. To phase out and rationalize over the medium term inefficient fossil fuel subsidies while providing targeted support for the poorest. Inefficient fossil fuel subsidies encourage wasteful consumption, reduce our energy security, impede investment in clean energy sources and undermine efforts to deal with the threat of climate change.

25. We call on our Energy and Finance Ministers to report to us their implementation strategies and timeline for acting to meet this critical commitment at our next meeting.

26. We will promote energy market transparency and market stability as part of our broader effort to avoid excessive volatility.

27. To maintain our openness and move toward greener, more sustainable growth.

28. We will fight protectionism. We are committed to bringing the Doha Round to a successful conclusion in 2010.

29. We will spare no effort to reach agreement in Copenhagen through the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) negotiations.

30. We warmly welcome the report by the Chair of the London Summit commissioned at our last meeting and published today.

31. Finally, we agreed to meet in Canada in June 2010 and in Korea in November 2010. We expect to meet annually thereafter and will meet in France in 2011.

---

1. We assessed the progress we have made together in addressing the global crisis and agreed to maintain our steps to support economic activity until recovery is assured. We further committed to additional steps to ensure strong, sustainable, and balanced growth, to build a stronger international financial system, to reduce development imbalances, and to modernize our architecture for international economic cooperation.

A Framework for Strong, Sustainable, and Balanced Growth

2. The growth of the global economy and the success of our coordinated effort to respond to the recent crisis have increased the case for more sustained and systematic international cooperation. In the short-run, we must continue to implement our stimulus programs to support economic activity until recovery clearly has taken hold. We also need to develop a transparent and credible process for withdrawing our extraordinary fiscal, monetary and financial sector support, to be implemented when recovery becomes fully secured. We task our Finance Ministers, working with input from the IMF and FSB, at their November meeting to continue developing cooperative and coordinated exit strategies recognizing that the scale, timing, and sequencing of this process will vary across countries or regions and across the type of policy measures. Credible exit strategies should be designed and communicated clearly to anchor expectations and reinforce confidence.

3. The IMF estimates that world growth will resume this year and rise by nearly 3% by the end of 2010. Subsequently, our objective is to return the world to high, sustainable, and balanced growth, while maintaining our commitment to fiscal responsibility and sustainability, with reforms to increase our growth potential and capacity to generate jobs and policies designed to avoid both the re-creation of asset bubbles and the re-emergence of unsustainable global financial flows. We commit to put in place the necessary policy measures to achieve these outcomes.

4. We will need to work together as we manage the transition to a more balanced pattern of global growth. The crisis and our initial policy responses have already produced significant shifts in the pattern and level of growth across countries. Many countries have already taken important steps to expand domestic demand, bolstering global activity and reducing imbalances. In some countries, the rise in private saving now underway will, in time, need to be augmented by a rise in public saving. Ensuring a strong recovery will necessitate adjustments across different parts of the global economy, while requiring macroeconomic policies that promote adequate and balanced global demand as well as decisive progress on structural reforms that foster private domestic demand, narrow the global development gap, and strengthen long-run growth potential. The IMF estimates that only with such adjustments and realignments, will global growth reach a strong, sustainable, and balanced pattern. While governments have started moving in the right direction, a shared understanding and deepened dialogue will help build a more stable, lasting, and sustainable pattern of growth. Raising living standards in the emerging markets and developing countries is also a critical element in achieving sustainable growth in the global economy.

5. Today we are launching a Framework for Strong, Sustainable, and Balanced Growth. To put in place this framework, we commit to develop a process whereby we set out our objectives, put forward policies to achieve these objectives, and together assess our progress. We will ask the IMF to help us with its analysis of how our respective national or regional policy frameworks fit together. We will ask the World Bank to advise us on progress in promoting development and poverty reduction as part of the rebalancing of global growth. We will work together to ensure that our fiscal, monetary, trade, and structural policies are collectively consistent with more sustainable and balanced trajectories of growth. We will undertake macro prudential and regulatory policies to help prevent credit and asset price cycles from becoming forces of destabilization. As we commit to implement a new, sustainable growth model, we should encourage work on measurement methods so as to better take into account the social and environmental dimensions of economic development.

6. We call on our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors to launch the new Framework by November by initiating a cooperative process of mutual assessment of our policy frameworks and the implications of those frameworks for the pattern and sustainability of global growth. We believe that regular consultations, strengthened cooperation on macroeconomic policies, the exchange of experiences on structural policies, and ongoing assessment will promote the adoption of sound policies and secure a healthy global economy. Our compact is that:

- G-20 members will agree on shared policy objectives. These objectives should be updated as conditions evolve.
- G-20 members will set out our medium-term policy frameworks and will work together to assess the collective implications of our national policy frameworks for the level and pattern of global growth and to identify potential risks to financial stability.

- G-20 Leaders will consider, based on the results of the mutual assessment, and agree any actions to meet our common objectives.

7. This process will only be successful if it is supported by candid, even-handed, and balanced analysis of our policies. We ask the IMF to assist our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors in this process of mutual assessment by developing a forward-looking analysis of whether policies pursued by individual G-20 countries are collectively consistent with more sustainable and balanced trajectories for the global economy, and to report regularly to both the G-20 and the International Monetary and Financial Committee (IMFC), building on the IMF's existing bilateral and multilateral surveillance analysis, on global economic developments, patterns of growth and suggested policy adjustments. Our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors will elaborate this process at their November meeting and we will review the results of the first mutual assessment at our next summit.

8. These policies will help us to meet our responsibility to the community of nations to build a more resilient international financial system and to reduce development imbalances.

9. Building on Chancellor Merkel's proposed Charter, on which we will continue to work, we adopted today Core Values for Sustainable Economic Activity, which will include those of propriety, integrity, and transparency, and which will underpin the Framework.

Strengthening the International Financial Regulatory System

10. Major failures of regulation and supervision, plus reckless and irresponsible risk taking by banks and other financial institutions, created dangerous financial fragilities that contributed significantly to the current crisis. A return to the excessive risk taking prevalent in some countries before the crisis is not an option.

11. Since the onset of the global crisis, we have developed and begun implementing sweeping reforms to tackle the root causes of the crisis and transform the system for global financial regulation. Substantial progress has been made in strengthening prudential oversight, improving risk management, strengthening transparency, promoting market integrity, establishing supervisory colleges, and reinforcing international cooperation. We have enhanced and expanded the scope of regulation and oversight, with tougher regulation of over-the-counter (OTC) derivatives, securitization markets, credit rating agencies, and hedge funds. We endorse the institutional strengthening of the FSB through its Charter, following its establishment in London, and welcome its reports to Leaders and Ministers. The FSB's ongoing efforts to monitor progress will be essential to the full and consistent implementation of needed reforms. We call on the FSB to report on progress to the G-20 Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors in advance of the next Leaders summit.

12. Yet our work is not done. Far more needs to be done to protect consumers, depositors, and investors against abusive market practices, promote high quality standards, and help ensure the world does not face a crisis of the scope we have seen. We are committed to take action at the national and international level to raise standards together so that our national authorities implement global standards consistently in a way that ensures a level playing field and avoids fragmentation of markets, protectionism, and regulatory arbitrage. Our efforts to deal with impaired assets and to encourage the raising of additional capital must continue, where needed. We commit to conduct robust, transparent stress tests as needed. We call on banks to retain a greater proportion of current profits to build capital, where needed, to support lending. Securitization sponsors or originators should retain a part of the risk of the underlying assets, thus encouraging them to act prudently. It is important to ensure an adequate balance between macro-prudential and micro-prudential regulation to control risks, and to develop the tools necessary to monitor and assess the buildup of macro-prudential risks in the financial system. In addition, we have agreed to improve the regulation, functioning, and transparency of financial and commodity markets to address excessive commodity price volatility.

13. As we encourage the resumption of lending to households and businesses, we must take care not to spur a return of the practices that led to the crisis. The steps we are taking here, when fully implemented, will result in a fundamentally stronger financial system than existed prior to the crisis. If we all act together, financial institutions will have stricter rules for risk-taking, governance that aligns compensation with long-term performance, and greater transparency in their operations. All firms whose failure could pose a risk to financial stability must be subject to consistent, consolidated supervision and regulation with high standards.

Our reform is multi-faceted but at its core must be stronger capital standards, complemented by clear incentives to mitigate excessive risk-taking practices. Capital allows banks to withstand those losses that inevitably will come. It, together with more powerful tools for governments to wind down firms that fail, helps us hold firms accountable for the risks that they take. Building on their Declaration on Further Steps to Strengthen the International Financial System, we call on our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors to reach agreement on an international framework of reform in the following critical areas:

- o Building high quality capital and mitigating pro-cyclicality: We commit to developing by end-2010 internationally agreed rules to improve both the quantity and quality of bank capital and to discourage excessive leverage. These rules will be phased in as financial conditions improve and economic recovery is assured, with the aim of implementation by end-2012. The national implementation of higher level and better quality capital requirements, counter-cyclical capital buffers, higher capital requirements requirements for risky products and off-balance sheet activities, as elements of the Basel II Capital Framework, together with strengthened liquidity risk requirements and forward-looking provisioning, will reduce incentives for banks to take excessive risks and create a financial system better prepared to withstand adverse shocks. We welcome the key measures recently agreed by the oversight body of the Basel Committee to strengthen the supervision and regulation of the banking sector. We support the introduction of a leverage ratio as a supplementary measure to the Basel II risk-based framework with a view to migrating to a Pillar 1 treatment based on appropriate review and calibration. To ensure comparability, the details of the leverage ratio will be harmonized internationally, fully adjusting for differences in accounting. All major G-20 financial centers commit to have adopted the Basel II Capital Framework by 2011.
- o Reforming compensation practices to support financial stability: Excessive compensation in the financial sector has both reflected and encouraged excessive risk taking. Reforming compensation policies and practices is an essential part of our effort to increase financial stability. We fully endorse the implementation standards of the FSB aimed at aligning compensation with long-term value creation, not excessive risk-taking, including by

- (i) avoiding multi-year guaranteed bonuses;
- (ii) requiring a significant portion of variable compensation to be deferred, tied to performance and subject to appropriate clawback and to be vested in the form of stock or stock-like instruments, as long as these create incentives aligned with long-term value creation and the time horizon of risk;
- (iii) ensuring that compensation for senior executives and other employees having a material impact on the firm's risk exposure align with performance and risk;
- (iv) making firms' compensation policies and structures transparent through disclosure requirements;
- (v) limiting variable compensation as a percentage of total net revenues when it is inconsistent with the maintenance of a sound capital base; and
- (vi) ensuring that compensation committees overseeing compensation policies are able to act independently. Supervisors should have the responsibility to review firms' compensation policies and structures with institutional and systemic risk in mind and, if necessary to offset additional risks, apply corrective measures, such as higher capital requirements, to those firms that fail to implement sound compensation policies and practices. Supervisors should have the ability to modify compensation structures in the case of firms that fail or require extraordinary public intervention. We call on firms to implement these sound compensation practices immediately. We task the FSB to monitor the implementation of FSB standards and propose additional measures as required by March 2010.

- Improving over-the-counter derivatives markets:

All standardized OTC derivative contracts should be traded on exchanges or electronic trading platforms, where appropriate, and cleared through central counterparties by end-2012 at the latest. OTC derivative contracts should be reported to trade repositories. Non-centrally cleared contracts should be subject to higher capital requirements. We ask the FSB and its relevant members to assess regularly implementation and whether it is sufficient to improve transparency in the derivatives markets, mitigate systemic risk, and protect against market abuse.

- Addressing cross-border resolutions and systemically important financial institutions by end-2010

Systemically important financial firms should develop internationally-consistent firm-specific contingency and resolution plans. Our authorities should establish crisis management groups for the major cross-border firms and a legal framework for crisis intervention as well as improve information sharing in times of stress. We should develop resolution tools and frameworks for the effective resolution of financial groups to help mitigate the disruption of financial institution failures and reduce moral hazard in the future. Our prudential standards for systemically important institutions should be commensurate with the costs of their failure. The FSB should propose by the end of October 2010 possible measures including more intensive supervision and specific additional capital, liquidity, and other prudential requirements.

14. We call on our international accounting bodies to redouble their efforts to achieve a single set of high quality, global accounting standards within the context of their independent standard setting process, and complete their convergence project by June 2011. The International Accounting Standards Board's (IASB) institutional framework should further enhance the involvement of various stakeholders.

15. Our commitment to fight non-cooperative jurisdictions (NCJs) has produced impressive results. We are committed to maintain the momentum in dealing with tax havens, money laundering, proceeds of corruption, terrorist financing, and prudential standards. We welcome the expansion of the Global Forum on Transparency and Exchange of Information, including the participation of developing countries, and welcome the agreement to deliver an effective program of peer review. The main focus of the Forum's work will be to improve tax transparency and exchange of information so that countries can fully enforce their tax laws to protect their tax base. We stand ready to use countermeasures against tax havens from March 2010. We welcome the progress made by the Financial Action Task Force (FATF) in the fight against money laundering and terrorist financing and call upon the FATF to issue a public list of high risk jurisdictions by February 2010. We call on the FSB to report progress to address NCJs with regards to international cooperation and information exchange in November 2009 and to initiate a peer review process by February 2010.

16. We task the IMF to prepare a report for our next meeting with regard to the range of options countries have adopted or are considering as to how the financial sector could make a fair and substantial contribution toward paying for any burdens associated with government interventions to repair the banking system.

Modernizing our Global Institutions to Reflect Today's Global Economy

17. Modernizing the international financial institutions and global development architecture is essential to our efforts to promote global financial stability, foster sustainable development, and lift the lives of the poorest. We warmly welcome Prime Minister Brown's report on his review of the responsiveness and adaptability of the international financial institutions (IFIs) and ask our Finance Ministers to consider its conclusions.

Reforming the Mandate, Mission and Governance of the IMF

18. Our commitment to increase the funds available to the IMF allowed it to stem the spread of the crisis to emerging markets and developing countries. This commitment and the innovative steps the IMF has taken to create the facilities needed for its resources to be used efficiently and flexibly have reduced global risks. Capital again is flowing to emerging economies.

19. We have delivered on our promise to treble the resources available to the IMF. We are contributing over $500 billion to a renewed and expanded IMF New Arrangements to Borrow (NAB). The IMF has made Special Drawing Rights (SDR) allocations of $283 billion in total, more than $100 billion of which will supplement emerging market and developing countries' existing reserve assets. Resources from the agreed sale of IMF gold, consistent with the IMF's new income model, and funds from internal and other sources will more than double the Fund's medium-term concessional lending capacity.

20. Our collective response to the crisis has highlighted both the benefits of international cooperation and the need for a more legitimate and effective IMF. The Fund must play a critical role in promoting global financial stability and rebalancing growth. We welcome the reform of IMF's lending facilities, including the creation of the innovative Flexible Credit Line. The IMF should continue to strengthen its capacity to help its members cope with financial volatility, reducing the economic disruption from sudden swings in capital flows and the perceived need for excessive reserve accumulation. As recovery takes hold, we will work together to strengthen the Fund's ability to provide even-handed, candid and independent surveillance of the risks facing the global economy and the international financial system. We ask the IMF to support our effort under the Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth through its surveillance of our countries' policy frameworks and their collective implications for financial stability and the level and pattern of global growth.

21. Modernizing the IMF's governance is a core element of our effort to improve the IMF's credibility, legitimacy, and effectiveness. We recognize that the IMF should remain a quota-based organization and that the distribution of quotas should reflect the relative weights of its members in the world economy, which have changed substantially in view of the strong growth in dynamic emerging market and developing countries. To this end, we are committed to a shift in quota share to dynamic emerging market and developing countries of at least five percent from over-represented to under-represented countries using the current IMF quota formula as the basis to work from. We are also committed to protecting the voting share of the poorest in the IMF. On this basis and as part of the IMF's quota review, to be completed by January 2011, we urge an acceleration of work toward bringing the review to a successful conclusion. As part of that review, we agree that a number of other critical issues will need to be addressed, including: the size of any increase in IMF quotas, which will have a bearing on the ability to facilitate change in quota shares; the size and composition of the Executive Board; ways of enhancing the Board's effectiveness; and the Fund Governors' involvement in the strategic oversight of the IMF. Staff diversity should be enhanced. As part of a comprehensive reform package, we agree that the heads and senior leadership of all international institutions should be appointed through an open, transparent and merit-based process. We must urgently implement the package of IMF quota and voice reforms agreed in April 2008.

Reforming the Mission, Mandate and Governance of Our Development banks

22. The Multilateral Development Banks (MDBs) responded to our April call to accelerate and expand lending to mitigate the impact of the crisis on the world's poorest with streamlined facilities, new tools and facilities, and a rapid increase in their lending. They are on track to deliver the promised $100 billion in additional lending. We welcome and encourage the MDBs to continue making full use of their balance sheets. We also welcome additional measures such as the temporary use of callable capital contributions from a select group of donors as was done at the InterAmerican Development Bank (IaDB). Our Finance Ministers should consider how mechanisms such as temporary callable and contingent capital could be used in the future to increase MDB lending at times of crisis. We reaffirm our commitment to ensure that the Multilateral Development Banks and their concessional lending facilities, especially the International Development Agency (IDA) and the African Development Fund, are appropriately funded.

23. Even as we work to mitigate the impact of the crisis, we must strengthen and reform the global development architecture for responding to the world's long-term challenges.

24. We agree that development and reducing global poverty are central to the development banks' core mission. The World Bank and other multilateral development banks are also critical to our ability to act together to address challenges, such as climate change and food security, which are global in nature and require globally coordinated action. The World Bank, working with the regional development banks and other international organizations, should strengthen:

- its focus on food security through enhancements in agricultural productivity and access to technology, and improving access to food, in close cooperation with relevant specialized agencies;
- its focus on human development and security in the poorest and most challenging environments;
- support for private-sector led growth and infrastructure to enhance opportunities for the poorest, social and economic inclusion, and economic growth; and
- contributions to financing the transition to a green economy through investment in sustainable clean energy generation and use, energy efficiency and climate resilience; this includes responding to countries needs to integrate climate change concerns into their core development strategies, improved domestic policies, and to access new sources of climate finance.

25. To enhance their effectiveness, the World Bank and the regional development banks should strengthen their coordination, when appropriate, with other bilateral and multilateral institutions. They should also strengthen recipient country ownership of strategies and programs and allow adequate policy space.

26. We will help ensure the World Bank and the regional development banks have sufficient resources to fulfill these four challenges and their development mandate, including through a review of their general capital increase needs to be completed by the first half of 2010. Additional resources must be joined to key institutional reforms to ensure effectiveness: greater coordination and a clearer division of labor; an increased commitment to transparency, accountability, and good corporate governance; an increased capacity to innovate and achieve demonstrable results; and greater attention to the needs of the poorest populations.

27. We commit to pursue governance and operational effectiveness reform in conjunction with voting reform to ensure that the World Bank is relevant, effective, and legitimate. We stress the importance of moving towards equitable voting power in the World Bank over time through the adoption of a dynamic formula which primarily reflects countries' evolving economic weight and the World Bank's development mission, and that generates in the next shareholding review a significant increase of at least 3% of voting power for developing and transition countries, in addition to the 1.46% increase under the first phase of this important adjustment, to the benefit of under-represented countries. While recognizing that over-represented countries will make a contribution, it will be important to protect the voting power of the smallest poor countries. We recommit to reaching agreement by the 2010 Spring Meetings.

Energy Security and Climate Change

28. Access to diverse, reliable, affordable and clean energy is critical for sustainable growth. Inefficient markets and excessive volatility negatively affect both producers and consumers. Noting the St. Petersburg Principles on Global Energy Security, which recognize the shared interest of energy producing, consuming and transiting countries in promoting global energy security, we individually and collectively commit to:

- Increase energy market transparency and market stability by publishing complete, accurate, and timely data on oil production, consumption, refining and stock levels, as appropriate, on a regular basis, ideally monthly, beginning by January 2010. We note the Joint Oil Data Initiative as managed by the International Energy Forum (IEF) and welcome their efforts to examine the expansion of their data collection to natural gas.

We will improve our domestic capabilities to collect energy data and improve energy demand and supply forecasting and ask the International Energy Agency (IEA) and the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) to ramp up their efforts to assist interested countries in developing those capabilities. We will strengthen the producer-consumer dialogue to improve our understanding of market fundamentals, including supply and demand trends, and price volatility, and note the work of the IEF experts group.

- Improve regulatory oversight of energy markets by implementing the International Organization of Securities Commissions (IOSCO) recommendations on commodity futures markets and calling on relevant regulators to collect data on large concentrations of trader positions on oil in our national commodities futures markets. We ask our relevant regulators to report back at our next meeting on progress towards implementation. We will direct relevant regulators to also collect related data on over-the-counter oil markets and to take steps to combat market manipulation leading to excessive price volatility. We call for further refinement and improvement of commodity market information, including through the publication of more detailed and disaggregated data, coordinated as far as possible internationally. We ask IOSCO to help national governments design and implement these policies, conduct further analysis including with regard with to excessive volatility, make specific recommendations, and to report regularly on our progress.

29. Enhancing our energy efficiency can play an important, positive role in promoting energy security and fighting climate change. Inefficient fossil fuel subsidies encourage wasteful consumption, distort markets, impede investment in clean energy sources and undermine efforts to deal with climate change. The Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) and the IEA have found that eliminating fossil fuel subsidies by 2020 would reduce global greenhouse gas emissions in 2050 by ten percent. Many countries are reducing fossil fuel subsidies while preventing adverse impact on the poorest. Building on these efforts and recognizing the challenges of populations suffering from energy poverty, we commit to:

- Rationalize and phase out over the medium term inefficient fossil fuel subsidies that encourage wasteful consumption. As we do that, we recognize the importance of providing those in need with essential energy services, including through the use of targeted cash transfers and other appropriate mechanisms. This reform will not apply to our support for clean energy, renewables, and technologies that dramatically reduce greenhouse gas emissions. We will have our Energy and Finance Ministers, based on their national circumstances, develop implementation strategies and timeframes, and report back to Leaders at the next Summit. We ask the international financial institutions to offer support to countries in this process. We call on all nations to adopt policies that will phase out such subsidies worldwide.

30. We request relevant institutions, such as the IEA, OPEC, OECD, and World Bank, provide an analysis of the scope of energy subsidies and suggestions for the implementation of this initiative and report back at the next summit.

31. Increasing clean and renewable energy supplies, improving energy efficiency, and promoting conservation are critical steps to protect our environment, promote sustainable growth and address the threat of climate change. Accelerated adoption of economically sound clean and renewable energy technology and energy efficiency measures diversifies our energy supplies and strengthens our energy security. We commit to:

- Stimulate investment in clean energy, renewables, and energy efficiency and provide financial and technical support for such projects in developing countries.
- Take steps to facilitate the diffusion or transfer of clean energy technology including by conducting joint research and building capacity. The reduction or elimination of barriers to trade and investment in this area are being discussed and should be pursued on a voluntary basis and in appropriate fora.

32. As leaders of the world's major economies, we are working for a resilient, sustainable, and green recovery. We underscore anew our resolve to take strong action to address the threat of dangerous climate change. We reaffirm the objective, provisions, and principles of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), including common but differentiated responsibilities. We note the principles endorsed by Leaders at the Major Economies Forum in L'Aquila, Italy. We will intensify our efforts, in cooperation with other parties, to reach agreement in Copenhagen through the UNFCCC negotiation. An agreement must include mitigation, adaptation, technology, and financing.

33. We welcome the work of the Finance Ministers and direct them to report back at their next meeting with a range of possible options for climate change financing to be provided as a resource to be considered in the UNFCCC negotiations at Copenhagen.

Strengthening Support for the Most Vulnerable

34. Many emerging and developing economies have made great strides in raising living standards as their economies converge toward the productivity levels and living standards of advanced economies. This process was interrupted by the crisis and is still far from complete. The poorest countries have little economic cushion to protect vulnerable populations from calamity, particularly as the financial crisis followed close on the heels of a global spike in food prices. We note with concern the adverse impact of the global crisis on low income countries' (LICs) capacity to protect critical core spending in areas such as health, education, safety nets, and infrastructure. The UN's new Global Impact Vulnerability Alert System will help our efforts to monitor the impact of the crisis on the most vulnerable. We share a collective responsibility to mitigate the social impact of the crisis and to assure that all parts of the globe participate in the recovery.

35. The MDBs play a key role in the fight against poverty. We recognize the need for accelerated and additional concessional financial support to LICs to cushion the impact of the crisis on the poorest, welcome the increase in MDB lending during the crisis and support the MDBs having the resources needed to avoid a disruption of concessional financing to the most vulnerable countries. The IMF also has increased its concessional lending to LICs during the crisis. Resources from the sale of IMF gold, consistent with the new income model, and funds from internal and other sources will double the Fund's medium-term concessional lending capacity.

36. Several countries are considering creating, on a voluntary basis, mechanisms that could allow, consistent with their national circumstances, the mobilization of existing SDR resources to support the IMF's lending to the poorest countries. Even as we work to mitigate the impact of the crisis, we must strengthen and reform the global development architecture for responding to the world's long-term challenges. We ask our relevant ministers to explore the benefits of a new crisis support facility in IDA to protect LICs from future crises and the enhanced use of financial instruments in protecting the investment plans of middle income countries from interruption in times of crisis, including greater use of guarantees.

37. We reaffirm our historic commitment to meet the Millennium Development Goals and our respective Official Development Assistance (ODA) pledges, including commitments on Aid for Trade, debt relief, and those made at Gleneagles, especially to sub-Saharan Africa, to 2010 and beyond.

38. Even before the crisis, too many still suffered from hunger and poverty and even more people lack access to energy and finance. Recognizing that the crisis has exacerbated this situation, we pledge cooperation to improve access to food, fuel, and finance for the poor.

39. Sustained funding and targeted investments are urgently needed to improve long-term food security. We welcome and support the food security initiative announced in L'Aquila and efforts to further implement the Global Partnership for Agriculture and Food Security and to address excessive price volatility. We call on the World Bank to work with interested donors and organizations to develop a multilateral trust fund to scale-up agricultural assistance to low-income countries. This will help support innovative bilateral and multilateral efforts to improve global nutrition and build sustainable agricultural systems, including programs like those developed through the Comprehensive African Agricultural Development Program (CAADP). It should be designed to ensure country ownership and rapid disbursement of funds, fully respecting the aid effectiveness principles agreed in Accra, and facilitate the participation of private foundations, businesses, and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in this historic effort. These efforts should complement the UN Comprehensive Framework for Agriculture. We ask the World Bank, the African Development Bank, UN, Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), World Food Programme (WFP) and other stakeholders to coordinate their efforts, including through country-led mechanisms, in order to complement and reinforce other existing multilateral and bilateral efforts to tackle food insecurity.

40. To increase access to energy, we will promote the deployment of clean, affordable energy resources to the developing world. We commit, on a voluntary basis, to funding programs that achieve this objective, such as the Scaling Up Renewable Energy Program and the Energy for the Poor Initiative, and to increasing and more closely harmonizing our bilateral efforts.

41. We commit to improving access to financial services for the poor. We have agreed to support the safe and sound spread of new modes of financial service delivery capable of reaching the poor and, building on the example of micro finance, will scale up the successful models of small and medium-sized enterprise (SME) financing. Working with the Consultative Group to Assist the Poor (CGAP), the international Financial Corporation (IFC) and other international organizations, we will launch a G-20 Financial Inclusion Experts Group. This group will identify lessons learned on innovative approaches to providing financial services to these groups, promote successful regulatory and policy approaches and elaborate standards on financial access, financial literacy, and consumer protection. We commit to launch a G-20 SME Finance Challenge, a call to the private sector to put forward its best proposals for how public finance can maximize the deployment of private finance on a sustainable and scalable basis.

42. As we increase the flow of capital to developing countries, we also need to prevent its illicit outflow. We will work with the World Bank's Stolen Assets Recovery (StAR) program to secure the return of stolen assets to developing countries, and support other efforts to stem illicit outflows. We ask the FATF to help detect and deter the proceeds of corruption by prioritizing work to strengthen standards on customer due diligence, beneficial ownership and transparency. We note the principles of the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness and the Accra Agenda for Action and will work to increase the transparency of international aid flows by 2010. We call for the adoption and enforcement of laws against transnational bribery, such as the OECD Anti-Bribery Convention, and the ratification by the G-20 of the UN Convention against Corruption (UNCAC) and the adoption during the third Conference of the Parties in Doha of an effective, transparent, and inclusive mechanism for the review of its implementation. We support voluntary participation in the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative, which calls for regular public disclosure of payments by extractive industries to governments and reconciliation against recorded receipt of those funds by governments.

Putting Quality Jobs at the Heart of the Recovery

43. The prompt, vigorous and sustained response of our countries has saved or created millions of jobs. Based on International Labour Organization (ILO) estimates, our efforts will have created or saved at least 7 - 11 million jobs by the end of this year. Without sustained action, unemployment is likely to continue rising in many of our countries even after economies stabilize, with a disproportionate impact on the most vulnerable segments of our population. As growth returns, every country must act to ensure that employment recovers quickly. We commit to implementing recovery plans that support decent work, help preserve employment, and prioritize job growth. In addition, we will continue to provide income, social protection, and training support for the unemployed and those most at risk of unemployment. We agree that the current challenges do not provide an excuse to disregard or weaken internationally recognized labor standards. To assure that global growth is broadly beneficial, we should implement policies consistent with ILO fundamental principles and rights at work.

44. Our new Framework for Strong, Sustainable, and Balanced Growth requires structural reforms to create more inclusive labor markets, active labor market policies, and quality education and training programs. Each of our countries will need, through its own national policies, to strengthen the ability of our workers to adapt to changing market demands and to benefit from innovation and investments in new technologies, clean energy, environment, health, and infrastructure. It is no longer sufficient to train workers to meet their specific current needs; we should ensure access to training programs that support lifelong skills development and focus on future market needs. Developed countries should support developing countries to build and strengthen their capacities in this area. These steps will help to assure that the gains from new inventions and lifting existing impediments to growth are broadly shared.

45. We pledge to support robust training efforts in our growth strategies and investments. We recognize successful employment and training programs are often designed together with employers and workers, and we call on the ILO, in partnership with other organizations, to convene its constituents and NGOs to develop a training strategy for our consideration.

46. We agree on the importance of building an employment-oriented framework for future economic growth. In this context, we reaffirm the importance of the London Jobs Conference and Rome Social Summit. We also welcome the recently-adopted ILO Resolution on Recovering from the Crisis: A Global Jobs Pact, and we commit our nations to adopt key elements of its general framework to advance the social dimension of globalization. The international institutions should consider ILO standards and the goals of the Jobs Pact in their crisis and post-crisis analysis and policy-making activities.

47. To ensure our continued focus on employment policies, the Chair of the Pittsburgh Summit has asked his Secretary of Labor to invite our Employment and Labor Ministers to meet as a group in early 2010 consulting with labor and business and building on the upcoming OECD Labour and Employment Ministerial meeting on the jobs crisis. We direct our Ministers to assess the evolving employment situation, review reports from the ILO and other organizations on the impact of policies we have adopted, report on whether further measures are desirable, and consider medium-term employment and skills development policies, social protection programs, and best practices to ensure workers are prepared to take advantage of advances in science and technology.

An Open Global Economy

48. Continuing the revival in world trade and investment is essential to restoring global growth. It is imperative we stand together to fight against protectionism. We welcome the swift implementation of the $250 billion trade finance initiative. We will keep markets open and free and reaffirm the commitments made in Washington and London: to refrain from raising barriers or imposing new barriers to investment or to trade in goods and services, imposing new export restrictions or implementing World Trade Organization (WTO) inconsistent measures to stimulate exports and commit to rectify such measures as they arise. We will minimize any negative impact on trade and investment of our domestic policy actions, including fiscal policy and action to support the financial sector. We will not retreat into financial protectionism, particularly measures that constrain worldwide capital flows, especially to developing countries. We will notify promptly the WTO of any relevant trade measures. We welcome the latest joint report from the WTO, OECD, IMF, and United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and ask them to continue to monitor the situation within their respective mandates, reporting publicly on these commitments on a quarterly basis.

49. We remain committed to further trade liberalization. We are determined to seek an ambitious and balanced conclusion to the Doha Development Round in 2010, consistent with its mandate, based on the progress already made, including with regard to modalities. We understand the need for countries to directly engage with each other, within the WTO bearing in mind the centrality of the multilateral process, in order to evaluate and close the remaining gaps. We note that in order to conclude the negotiations in 2010, closing those gaps should proceed as quickly as possible. We ask our ministers to take stock of the situation no later than early 2010, taking into account the results of the work program agreed to in Geneva following the Delhi Ministerial, and seek progress on Agriculture, Non-Agricultural Market Access, as well as Services, Rules, Trade Facilitation and all other remaining issues. We will remain engaged and review the progress of the negotiations at our next meeting.

The Path from Pittsburgh

50. Today, we designated the G-20 as the premier forum for our international economic cooperation. We have asked our representatives to report back at the next meeting with recommendations on how to maximize the effectiveness of our cooperation. We agreed to have a G-20 Summit in Canada in June 2010, and in Korea in November 2010. We expect to meet annually thereafter, and will meet in France in 2011.

ANNEX:

Core Values for Sustainable Economic Activity

1. The economic crisis demonstrates the importance of ushering in a new era of sustainable global economic activity grounded in responsibility. The current crisis has once again confirmed the fundamental recognition that our growth and prosperity are interconnected, and that no region of the globe can wall itself off in a globalized world economy.
2. We, the Leaders of the countries gathered for the Pittsburgh Summit, recognize that concerted action is needed to help our economies get back to stable ground and prosper tomorrow. We commit to taking responsible actions to ensure that every stakeholder - consumers, workers, investors, entrepreneurs - can participate in a balanced, equitable, and inclusive global economy.
3. We share the overarching goal to promote a broader prosperity for our people through balanced growth within and across nations; through coherent economic, social, and environmental strategies; and through robust financial systems and effective international collaboration.
4. We recognize that there are different approaches to economic development and prosperity, and that strategies to achieve these goals may vary according to countries' circumstances.

5. We also agree that certain key principles are fundamental, and in this spirit we commit to respect the following core values:

- We have a responsibility to ensure sound macroeconomic policies that serve long-term economic objectives and help avoid unsustainable global imbalances.
- We have a responsibility to reject protectionism in all its forms, support open markets, foster fair and transparent competition, and promote entrepreneurship and innovation across countries.
- We have a responsibility to ensure, through appropriate rules and incentives, that financial and other markets function based on propriety, integrity and transparency and to encourage businesses to support the efficient allocation of resources for sustainable economic performance.
- We have a responsibility to provide for financial markets that serve the needs of households, businesses and productive investment by strengthening oversight, transparency, and accountability.
- We have a responsibility to secure our future through sustainable consumption, production and use of resources that conserve our environment and address the challenge of climate change.
- We have a responsibility to invest in people by providing education, job training, decent work conditions, health care and social safety net support, and to fight poverty, discrimination, and all forms of social exclusion.
- We have a responsibility to recognize that all economies, rich and poor, are partners in building a sustainable and balanced global economy in which the benefits of economic growth are broadly and equitably shared. We also have a responsibility to achieve the internationally agreed development goals.
- We have a responsibility to ensure an international economic and financial architecture that reflects changes in the world economy and the new challenges of globalization.

G-20 Framework for Strong, Sustainable, and Balanced Growth

1. Our countries have a shared responsibility to adopt policies to achieve strong, sustainable and balanced growth, to promote a resilient international financial system, and to reap the benefits of an open global economy. To this end, we recognize that our strategies will vary across countries. In our Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth, we will:

- implement responsible fiscal policies, attentive to short-term flexibility considerations and longer-run sustainability requirements.
  - strengthen financial supervision to prevent the re-emergence in the financial system of excess credit growth and excess leverage and undertake macro prudential and regulatory policies to help prevent credit and asset price cycles from becoming forces of destabilization.
  - promote more balanced current accounts and support open trade and investment to advance global prosperity and growth sustainability, while actively rejecting protectionist measures.
  - undertake monetary policies consistent with price stability in the context of market oriented exchange rates that reflect underlying economic fundamentals.
  - undertake structural reforms to increase our potential growth rates and, where needed, improve social safety nets.
  - promote balanced and sustainable economic development in order to narrow development imbalances and reduce poverty.
2. We recognize that the process to ensure more balanced global growth must be undertaken in an orderly manner. All G-20 members agree to address the respective weaknesses of their economies.
- G-20 members with sustained, significant external deficits pledge to undertake policies to support private savings and undertake fiscal consolidation while maintaining open markets and strengthening export sectors.
  - G-20 members with sustained, significant external surpluses pledge to strengthen domestic sources of growth. According to national circumstances this could include increasing investment, reducing financial markets distortions, boosting productivity in service sectors, improving social safety nets, and lifting constraints on demand growth.
3. Each G-20 member bears primary responsibility for the sound management of its economy. The G-20 members also have a responsibility to the community of nations to assure the overall health of the global economy. Regular consultations, strengthened cooperation on macroeconomic policies, the exchange of experiences on structural policies, and ongoing assessment can strengthen our cooperation and promote the adoption of sound policies. As part of our process of mutual assessment:

- G-20 members will agree on shared policy objectives. These objectives should be updated as conditions evolve.
- G-20 members will set out their medium-term policy frameworks and will work together to assess the collective implications of our national policy frameworks for the level and pattern of global growth, and to identify potential risks to financial stability.
- G-20 leaders will consider, based on the results of the mutual assessment, and agree any actions to meet our common objectives.

4. We call on our Finance Ministers to develop our process of mutual assessment to evaluate the collective implications of national policies for the world economy. To accomplish this, our Finance Ministers should, with the assistance of the IMF:

- Develop a forward looking assessment of G-20 economic developments to help analyze whether patterns of demand and supply, credit, debt and reserves growth are supportive of strong, sustainable and balanced growth.
- Assess the implications and consistency of fiscal and monetary policies, credit growth and asset markets, foreign exchange developments, commodity and energy prices, and current account imbalances.
- Report regularly to both the G-20 and the IMFC on global economic developments, key risks, and concerns with respect to patterns of growth and suggested G-20 policy adjustments, individually and collectively.

223. Communiqué issued at the end of the Meeting of Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors of the G-20 countries.

London, November 7, 2009.

1. We, the G20 Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors, met at a critical point in the recovery from the crisis to deliver the work remitted to us at Pittsburgh.
2. Economic and financial conditions have improved following our coordinated response to the crisis. However, the recovery is uneven and remains dependent on policy support, and high unemployment is a major concern. To restore the global economy and financial system to health, we agreed to maintain support for the recovery until it is assured.
3. To underscore our new approach to economic cooperation, we launched the G20 Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth, adopted a detailed timetable and initiated a new consultative mutual assessment process to evaluate whether our policies will collectively deliver our agreed objectives. We will be assisted in our assessment by IMF and World Bank analyses and the input of other international organisations as appropriate, including the FSB, OECD, MDBs, ILO, WTO and UNCTAD. We agreed a compact:
  - to set out our national and regional policy frameworks, programmes and projections by the end of January 2010;
  - to conduct the initial phase of our cooperative mutual assessment process, supported by IMF and World Bank analyses, of the collective consistency of our national and regional policies with our shared objectives, taking into account our institutional arrangements, in April 2010;
  - to develop a basket of policy options to deliver those objectives, for Leaders to consider at their next Summit in June 2010; and,
  - to refine our mutual assessment and develop more specific policy recommendations for Leaders at their Summit in November 2010.
4. Our first challenge in using the Framework will be the transition from crisis response to stronger, more sustainable and balanced growth, consistent with our goals of sustainable public finances; price stability; stable, efficient and resilient financial systems; employment creation; and poverty reduction. While we will continue to provide support for the economy until the recovery is secured, we also commit to develop further our strategies for managing the withdrawal from our extraordinary macroeconomic and financial support measures. We agreed to cooperate and coordinate, taking into account any spillovers caused by our strategies, and consulting and sharing information where possible. To ensure credibility, our plans will be based on prudent assumptions and communicated promptly and transparently. We agreed to implement our plans flexibly, taking full account of variations in the pace of economic recovery and market conditions across countries and regions, and the complex interactions between different policy areas. The IMF and FSB will continue to assist us in reviewing strategies and implementation, identifying areas where coordination is particularly important and providing assessments of their collective impact on the global economy and the financial system. We welcome the work of the IMF and FSB to develop principles for exit.

5. The International Financial Institutions (IFIs) will play an important role in supporting our work to secure sustainable growth, stability, job creation, development and poverty reduction. It is therefore critical that we continue to increase their relevance, responsiveness, effectiveness and legitimacy. To this end, we reaffirmed our commitment to: deliver the representation and governance reforms agreed in Pittsburgh and reiterated the deadlines of the 2010 Spring Meetings for the World Bank and January 2011 for the IMF; complete the 2008 quota and voice reforms; complete the review of World Bank and RDB capital to ensure they have sufficient resources conditional on reforms to ensure effectiveness, by the first half of 2010; make progress on reviewing the mandate of the IMF; and, strengthen their capability to prevent and manage future crises. We look forward to the ambitious replenishment of IDA and the African Development Fund, and the work on exploring the benefits of an IDA crisis facility, and the work on the Stolen Assets Recovery Programme. We call on the IEA, OPEC, OECD and World Bank to produce a joint report for our next meeting on energy subsidies, and working with our Energy Ministers, we will prepare at that meeting implementation strategies and timeframes, based on our national circumstances, for rationalising and phasing out inefficient fossil fuel subsidies that encourage wasteful consumption, and for providing targeted assistance programmes. We call on the relevant institutions to finalise their work on ways to avoid excessive commodity price volatility and reaffirm our commitment to publish national data.

6. To continue strengthening the global financial system we agreed to work with the FSB to maintain the momentum of our programme of reforms, and ensure their full, timely and consistent implementation and a level playing field, in particular:

- to strengthen prudential regulation, we emphasised the need for the Basel Committee to develop stronger standards by end-2010 to be phased in as financial conditions improve and the economic recovery is assured, with the aim of implementation by end-2012. We call on supervisors to ensure that banks retain, as needed, a greater proportion of their profits to build capital to support lending;
- to ensure that compensation policies and practices support financial stability and align with long-term value creation, we commit to incorporate urgently within our national frameworks the FSB standards, and call on firms to implement these sound compensation practices immediately. The FSB will start assessing implementation without delay and report back with further proposals, as required, by March 2010;
- we welcome the new IMF/BIS/FSB report on assessing the systemic importance of financial institutions, markets and instruments, and the FSB's work to reduce the moral hazard posed by systemically important institutions. We call for the rapid development of internationally consistent, firm-specific recovery and resolution plans and tools by end-2010. We look forward to discussing at our next meeting the IMF's review of options on how the financial sector could contribute to paying for burdens associated with government interventions to repair the banking system; and,
- we welcome progress by the Global Forum on tax transparency and exchange of information, and the possible use of a multilateral instrument. To continue tackling non-cooperative jurisdictions (NCJs), we welcome progress made and call on the Global Forum, FSB and FATF to complete their peer review processes, and to assess adherence to international standards. We call on the relevant international institutions to further develop incentives and countermeasures as appropriate, in line with the timescales agreed in Pittsburgh, including through publishing lists of NCJs, and review capacity-building mechanisms to support the efforts of developing countries.

7. We committed to take action to tackle the threat of climate change and work towards an ambitious outcome in Copenhagen, within the objective, provisions and principles of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC). We discussed climate change financing options and recognised the need to increase significantly and urgently the scale and predictability of finance to implement an ambitious international agreement. Public finance can leverage significant private investment. Increasing the scope of carbon markets would depend on policy frameworks of developed and developing countries and on the depth of emission reductions on the part of developed countries. To deliver this financing, coordinated equitable, transparent and effective institutional arrangements will be needed. Coordination of support for country-led plans and reporting of this support should be ensured across all financing channels, multilateral, regional and bilateral. We discussed a range of options and, recognising that finance will play an important role in the delivery of the outcome at Copenhagen, we commit to take forward further work on climate change finance, to define financing options and institutional arrangements.

8. We thanked our UK hosts for their presidency of the G20 this year and welcomed the Republic of Korea as chair in 2010. We have agreed that France will chair in 2011.

IBSA*224. Press Release of the Ministry of Commerce on the IBSA Ministerial meeting.*New Delhi, December 2, 2009.

During the trilateral Ministerial meeting of IBSA (India-Brazil-South Africa) last evening, the three Ministers agreed to take forward the negotiations in the India-MERCOSUR-SACU framework. IBSA Ministers also agreed to meet annually on a rotational basis beginning early next year. The coming together of India, Brazil and South Africa for strengthening economic partnership can be seen as a major development in the area of South-South Cooperation. Total intra IBSA trade which was US$ 10.34 billion in 2007 had reached a figure of US$ 14.56 billion in 2008. There are significant synergies between the three countries that can be utilized for collective benefit and development of the three countries and the South, in general.

Speaking at the Working Session of the Seventh Ministerial Conference of the WTO on "Review of WTO Activities, including the Doha Work Programme", Shri Anand Sharma, Union Minister of Commerce and Industry, observed that if the Doha Round was to be concluded by 2010, efforts had to be made to tackle and resolve the major issues in the negotiations. Noting that progress in the last three months had been far below expectations, Shri Sharma shared India's assessment of the state of play of negotiations.

Regarding the agriculture negotiations, Shri Sharma observed that there were two challenges, i.e. (a) the necessity for a high ambition outcome in the elimination or reduction of subsidies and removal of market access barriers in developed countries, and (b) the fact that for developing countries, agriculture was not about commerce, but about survival and livelihoods. Flexibilities such as Special Products and Special Safeguard Mechanism were critical for safeguarding livelihoods, food and income security. The modalities have to take care of the large population dependent on agriculture in developing countries.

The success of the Doha Round, he said, would be judged on how these two challenges were addressed. He noted that important issues relating to domestic subsidies had barely been discussed. In the area of market access, issues such as sensitive products, tariff rate quotas, tariff simplification, tariff capping etc. - all defensive concerns of developed countries - clearly required further work. On tropical products and preference erosion, which were issues of great interest to India, a multilateral discussion was yet to take place. On the Special Safeguard Mechanism (SSM), which was the subject of considerable debate during the July 2008 mini-Ministerial and in the months thereafter, there had been some limited exchanges but clearly the issue was far from convergence.

As regards the negotiations on industrial goods, that is, Non-agricultural Market Access (NAMA), Shri Sharma stated that India considered the issue of formula and flexibilities as broadly stabilised except for some country-specific flexibilities still to be negotiated. He noted the constructive engagement on Non Tariff Barriers (NTBs), an important determinant of market access. Speaking strongly on the subject of sectoral initiatives, Shri Sharma stated that the issue was hugely problematic; India was firmly of the view that sectorals would have to be voluntary in nature.

In the Services negotiations, Shri Sharma emphasised that an ambitious outcome on domestic regulations was as important as market access. He also called for serious engagement on subsidies. He expressed disappointment at the signals received during the Signalling Conference in July 2008.

On fisheries subsidies, Shri Sharma reiterated that India's core concern about the protection of the livelihoods of India's small and artisanal fishermen must be addressed and said that while saving we should not forget to protect the fishermen while seeking to protect the fish.

On Trade-related Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS), he observed that progress was still elusive. More than a hundred Members had demanded a clear outcome on the TRIPS-CBD relationship and GI (Geographical Indications) extension as part of the outcome. While the Director General's consultations on these issues had led to greater technical clarity, the political element was still missing. He stressed the need to continue this process with a sense of urgency to achieve a good outcome.

On the sidelines of the Seventh Ministerial Conference of the WTO, Shri Anand Sharma, Union Minister of Commerce and Industry, met the US Trade Representative Ron Kirk, last evening, for a discussion on the Doha Round and a range of bilateral issues. Shri Sharma also had bilateral discussions with the Trade Ministers of Egypt, Tanzania, UAE, Thailand, Japan, Zambia, Norway, Iran and Kenya.

Shri Sharma is scheduled to participate at a Working Session of the WTO Ministerial Conference on "The WTO's Contribution to Recovery, Growth and Development" in Geneva today. He will also attend a Ministerial Session of the Negotiating Committee of the GSTP (Global System of Trade Preferences) among Developing Countries.

IOR-ARC*225. Statement by Minister of State Dr Shashi Tharoor at the Plenary Meeting of the Ninth Council of Ministers of the Indian Ocean Rim- Association for Regional Cooperation (IOR-ARC).*Sana'a(Yemen), June 25, 2009.*Mr. Chairman*Honourable Ministers,*Distinguished Delegates, Excellencies and Friends:

At the outset, I would like to thank our hosts, the Government and the People of the Republic of Yemen for the warm hospitality extended to me and the members of my delegation. I would also like to compliment them for the excellent arrangements made for the Conference. It is also my pleasant duty to accept the Vice-Chairmanship of this body on behalf of India. Allow me, Mr Chairman, to congratulate you Sir, for your contributions as Vice-Chairman till today, and on your assumption of the Chairmanship. I pledge that the Indian delegation and I personally will work under your strong leadership to bring momentum to our Association in the years ahead.

2. Mr. Chairman, allow me to congratulate and thank our colleagues for the tremendous efforts they have made over the last couple of days and the recommendations put forward for our consideration of the substantive agenda items. They have also done a comprehensive review of the status of our cooperation.

3. These meetings have always provided delegations with the opportunity to meet and learn more about each other, about differences as well as our commonalities and are thus important to focus on making faster progress and to give new directions to our cooperation. It helps us to keep track of the vision of the Association and allows us to introspect on whether we are taking steps, however small they may be, towards achieving the goals enshrined in the Charter.

4. I congratulate the Islamic Republic of Iran, the outgoing Chair, and in particular the dynamic Foreign Minister, for the considerable efforts made in making the Association more dynamic and taking it forward under Iran's Chairmanship. The Secretariat has been assiduous and energetic in supporting and implementing the Ministerial decisions. The coordination done by Working Group Meetings of our Heads of Mission in Pretoria has been valuable as it has provided a useful forum for pursuing IOR-ARC matters.

5. I have closely gone through the agenda and I am pleased to see that some of the studies under taken are now acquiring shape as concrete projects. These will certainly serve as building blocks for a solid structure of cooperation in our littoral region. It makes me happy to see that the seeds are being sown for transforming the Association from a declaratory phase to an action oriented phase with Member Countries embarking on cooperative projects. At the same time, Excellencies, we are aware that a great deal more needs to be done to make the Association realize its true potential. The destinies of our countries are linked in more than one way. Being littoral states of the Indian Ocean is just one of the many threads that bind us. How we are able to weave the threads into a rich tapestry of cooperation is the challenge facing all of us here today. We have some ideas. Our senior officials have offered some suggestions. My own feeling is that the Association has now reached a level of maturity where we need to initiate and implement creative, indeed bold, initiatives. I look forward to discussing some of them today with my esteemed colleagues, and to hearing some of your own ideas. And I thank the distinguished delegation of Singapore for starting the ball rolling just now.

6. One serious proposal to intensify work of the Association is related to the strengthening of the IOR-ARC Secretariat and other associated mechanisms. I agree that the matter needs close examination as only a strong Secretariat can service the ever-increasing demands that we propose to put on it in the near future by our increasing cooperation. It is time for us to review the Charter to meet the needs of an enhanced agenda and growing cooperation. I understand that some views have already been exchanged in this regard by our senior officials. We will discuss this in detail in our deliberations.

7. I am aware that some priority issues related to the working of the Association have been discussed by the Senior Officials. Excellencies, India feels that the time is now ripe that priority areas emerging from the deliberations of the Academic Group, Business Forum and Working Group on Trade and Investment are identified and prioritized. It is our view that sectoral working groups, with members from nodal or line Ministries, should meet at regular intervals with their counterparts. They should draw up Action Plans in priority areas of cooperation and implement them in a time bound-manner.

8. This is particularly required now when the Association is heading towards a project-oriented phase. Such interaction would also generate new ideas and provide the "headquarters" support that is so essential for projects to be meaningfully implemented.

9. There has been a proposal from the Secretariat to set up National Chapters under various forums, i.e. Academic, Business and Trade and Investment. India has already identified its nodal Ministry/ agencies dealing with these Working Groups and would like to continue this practice.

10. I shall, at this stage, not endeavour to go into the details of the issues that will come up for deliberation during the meeting. I am sure we shall have scope for substantive discussions later. Nevertheless, I take this opportunity to mention some initiatives that India proposes to take in the coming months.

11. India invites IOR-ARC Member Countries to participate substantively in the prestigious India International Trade Fair (IITF) held annually in New Delhi, from November 14-27. As you are aware, India has in the past provided free space to some fellow Member States and we are delighted to renew our offer to those Member States. We also propose to organize a sectoral seminar or a Buyer-Seller Meet on the sidelines of the Trade Fair.

12. An "Annapurna" World of Food India is being organized by the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) on 25-26 November 2009 at Mumbai. This is India's largest business-to-business meeting platform for food and beverage industry. We invite all IOR-ARC Members to participate.

13. I am glad to announce the allocation of 34 scholarships from the Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) for postgraduate studies in India. This will be towards implementation of our offer made last year under the General Agreement agreed to by the University Mobility in the Indian Ocean Region (UMIOR) group and the Academic Group.

14. In our efforts towards strengthening of training, in high-level professional development programmes towards capacity building, I would like to inform you that under the Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation (ITEC) Programme, we have around 200 courses in 43 institutions during 2009-2010. I would invite Member Countries to nominate participants for these courses. As regards the specialized courses offered by us last year, the course relating to "Disaster Risk Management including coastal and marine hazards" is proposed to be held at the Integrated Coastal and Marine Area Management Project Directorate (ICMAM PD), Chennai in late October/early November this year. The specific dates will be circulated shortly.

15. A Specialized Training Course for Foreign Diplomats of the IOR-ARC member countries is being organized by the Foreign Service Institute of the Ministry of External Affairs from 5-16 October 2009. I would urge interested Member Countries to participate in this specialized course as well.

16. Keeping in view the interest shown and the participation by Member Countries in making the First IOR-ARC Film Festival held in India in February 2008 a great success, I am delighted to announce that we propose to hold the Second Film Festival in India in August 2010.

17. At the 3rd Meeting of the IOR-ARC Council of Ministers in Muscat, it was decided to continue with the "Chair" of Indian Ocean Rim studies. India and Mauritius, had invited applications for the post. The Selection Committee had in December 2007 selected a suitable person, who however was not offered the position within a time frame that he found acceptable. In view of this, the vacancy has to be circulated again for the selection of another candidate. I propose the formation of a Selection Committee for this purpose. I further propose to Mauritius that to attract the best talent, we suitably revise the emoluments associated with the "Chair".

18. As regards the secondment of a new Director from India to the Secretariat, we regret that there have been some difficulties in the past, but we are now confident of seconding an officer in near future.

19. With regards to the proposal to establish an Open University of Mauritius, I am happy to inform you that the Indira Gandhi National Open University in Delhi would be able to provide suitable support in setting up the Open University in Mauritius.

20. There are three new proposals from India on (i) Agro-Meteorological Advisory Service System for Enhancing Agriculture Output, (ii) Potential Fishing Zone Advisories and (iii) Forecast Demonstration Project for Improving the Track, Intensity, Landfall Prediction and Impact Assessment of Tropical Cyclones affecting the North Indian Ocean Rim Countries, under the Academic Group. We seek the support and cooperation of Member Countries in converting these proposals into tangible projects.

21. I am happy to announce that India offers to lead in the new area for Promoting Cultural Cooperation among IOR-ARC Member Countries and our Indian Council of Cultural Relations (ICCR) would be the Coordinator. We look forward to the support and cooperation of Member Countries in this area.

22. Excellencies, I have listed a few of the initiatives that my country will be taking up in the coming months. At the same time I am acutely aware that much more needs to be done by each Member Country so that the Association can acquire a presence in the collective consciousness of our peoples. After all that is what brings us here together. I will be candid here and say that I had to explain to a lot of people what this association is all about, when I announced that my first trip abroad after becoming a Minister would be to attend this Conference. I am confident that we will be able to give a concrete shape and direction to the grouping in such a way that in coming years this Association starts to touch the lives of people living on the shores of the mighty Indian Ocean. Let this meeting be a milestone in the organization's progress in which we make a solemn resolution to fast-track our cooperation.

23. I personally have a great deal of faith in the potential of this organization. I am delighted to see that this organization brings together so many diverse countries at different stages of development coming together tied by a single and unique bond - the neighbourhood of an Ocean. This diversity of interests and capabilities may have so far impeded substantive cooperation, but in this diversity I see the kernels of fruitful cooperation as it opens up immense possibilities of doing whatever suits a group of countries to undertake. Our senior officials have already touched upon two possible new areas of work- tourism and the combat against piracy. I hope we can take these issues back to our capitals to reflect on the substantive content we can give to them. This is undoubtedly a challenge and an opportunity. Let us rise to it so that this Association is seen as a model platform for transcontinental cooperation. We have taken due note of the idea mentioned at the working breakfast to consider making the UN General Assembly session as a deadline for advancing our thoughts on such matters, and we will take this on board as a possible way forward.

24. Mr. Chairman, we look forward to working under your leadership and the leadership of Yemen as Chair of the Association during the next couple of years. Having assumed the onerous responsibility of Vice Chair this year, I would like to convey my assurances to the Chair and all Member Countries that India will do its utmost in the coming years to help energize our organization and to ensure that this Association which unusually brings together countries of Asia, Africa and Oceania realizes in considerable measure its vision of meaningful cooperation transcending international boundaries.

Thank you.

The Summit will be preceded by a meeting on 13-14 July of NAM Foreign Ministers to prepare for the Summit. External Affairs Minister will participate in this meeting. A meeting of the NAM Committee on Palestine will be held on 13 July. EAM will make a statement at the meeting.

In parallel with NAM Summit, a NAM first Ladies' Summit will be held at the initiative of Egypt. Smt. Gurusharan Kaur will be participating in this meeting. The theme of the meeting is Women in Crisis Management - Perspectives and Challenges, Best Practices and Lessons Learned. The meeting will be anchored by the Suzane Mubarak Women's International Peace Movement and will focus on the role of women in the context of the global economic and food, health and humanitarian crises. Heads of UN Agencies: FAO, WFP, WHO, and ITU are expected to make brief statements during the two separate sessions of the first Ladies' Summit. Smt. Gurusharan Kaur will make a statement during this meeting.

The Non-Aligned Movement stands for principles which India has always espoused and pursued in international affairs: sovereign equality of states; respect for territorial integrity, a peaceful, equitable and just world order; and the progress of developing countries through socio-economic development.

India's commitment to NAM is firm and abiding. As in the past, India will continue to play active role in the Movement.

Question: When is Prime Minister leaving?

Special Secretary (Pol & IO): The Prime Minister will be leaving Delhi on the 13th (July). He will be going to France where he is the Chief Guest of Honour at the French National Day on 14th of July. From France on the same day, he will be going to Sharm-al-Sheikh.

Question: When will be the Foreign Secretaries of India and Pakistan meeting?

Special Secretary (Pol & IO): The Foreign Secretaries as was mentioned earlier will be meeting in Sharm-al-Sheikh. I do not have the date. The Prime Minister will be arriving on the 14th. It is expected that Foreign Secretary will be traveling with him. So it will be on or after the 14th.

Question: On the sidelines of the Summit, Prime Minister of Pakistan and Dr. Manmohan Singh are likely to meet. Can you give us details of when that meeting is and what is going to be discussed?

Special Secretary (Pol & IO): Yes, there will be a meeting as the Prime Minister indicated earlier. After the Foreign Secretaries meet they will be reporting to the Prime Ministers. I do not have details of when that meeting is but it will be at Sharm al-Sheikh on the margins of the Summit.

Question: Mr. Katju, Kashmir is on the boil after Shopian and Baramullah while it has spread to Srinagar. Against this backdrop, Pakistan is certain to take up this issue during the NAM Summit. How are we going to tackle it? Secondly, do you see Pakistan's involvement in increasing violence in Kashmir?

Special Secretary (Pol & IO): I have nothing to say on this, on our relations with Pakistan. This is a briefing on NAM.

Question: Are they going to raise the issue?

Special Secretary (Pol & IO): I wonder if you have seen the text of the statement.

Question: I just wanted to ask if there are any other bilateral meetings that have been fixed up with other NAM leaders.

Special Secretary (Pol & IO): There will be bilateral meetings, as I had mentioned in my opening remarks. These are being fixed up. Prime Minister will meet leaders on the margins of the Summit. They are in the process. If they are in the process, how do I give details?

Question: Is the meeting between the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan fixed or is it conditional to how the talks between the Foreign Secretaries go?

Special Secretary (Pol & IO): It is. I mentioned to you, the Prime Minister had earlier mentioned that the two Foreign Secretaries will be reporting to the Prime Ministers. That implies that they will be meeting there.

Question:...(Inaudible)...

Special Secretary (Pol & IO): The precise logistics of the meeting are being worked out. But they will meet.

Question: Mr.Katju, about NAM itself, in the past couple of years in fact many NAM countries have talked about the relevance of a Non-Aligned Movement in what is essentially being seen as a non-polar or a uni-polar world. Is there going to be any discussion during this NAM summit on perhaps revamping NAM, taking in other members, doing different groupings? Some had talked about economic groupings on the basis of the South-South dialogue. Is there something like that?

Special Secretary (Pol & IO): I think you have raised a very important question. NAM has a continuing relevance. NAM is now 48 years old. The first Summit was held in 1961 in Yugoslavia. This is the 15th Summit. NAM has stood for certain principles. Those principles were applied at the time when NAM was established and they were applied successfully. NAM's role in decolonization, NAM's role against apartheid, are on the record. This role was successful and effective. NAM seeks to apply the same principles to the challenges that the international community faces today. The same principle will we believe lead the international community to successfully address these challenges.

Question: How important is this Summit for us?

Special Secretary (Pol & IO): I think this NAM meeting takes place at a very crucial juncture in international affairs. The challenges that we face are before us. The challenge flowing from the international economic and global crisis, the other challenges of socioeconomic nature. These challenges even though may not have originated in the developing world, are of direct bearing and have the greatest impact on developing countries. So, we do believe that this is an important meeting, and important Summit. The voice of NAM will make a contribution to the resolution of the issues that the international community faces at this juncture.

Question: Will the India-Pakistan Joint Mechanism against Terrorism come under review at this Summit?

Special Secretary (PoI & IO): I have nothing to say on Pakistan. NAM, I will be very happy to speak on.

Question: Why is terrorism not on the NAM agenda?

Special Secretary (PoI & IO): Terrorism is very much on the NAM agenda.

Question: When you mentioned the agenda, I think you did not mention terrorism.

Special Secretary (PoI & IO): I mentioned that NAM will address global issues. Terrorism is very much a global issue and it is in the front rank and the very first rank of global issues which confront the international community.

Question: NAM has yet to reach a consensus on the definition of terrorism...

Special Secretary (PoI & IO): We had, as you know, in 1996 introduced a Comprehensive Convention against International Terrorism. India has very strongly advocated that that Convention should be adopted in the UN. This was introduced in the UN. During this meeting too we will urge that the Convention should be adopted. We believe that if the Convention is adopted, it will make significant contribution to the international fight against global terrorism.

Question: Is India working towards a meeting with President of Iran?

Special Secretary (PoI & IO): I have mentioned to you that there will be meetings of the Prime Minister with the world leaders on the margins of the Summit. I will not go into individual meetings.

Question: Will India raise the issue of UNSC reforms during the NAM Summit also?

Special Secretary (PoI & IO): India will. India has always mentioned that the United Nations needs reform. I do believe that NAM too believes and holds that the United Nations needs reform to bring it in line with contemporary reality. This call or this demand for UN reform was in the NAM Ministerial outcome document too.

Question: Is there any effort on behalf of India to develop consensus on the shape of the UNSC reform?

Special Secretary (Pol & IO): India has been in close consultation with international partners on this issue.

Question: You mentioned that you would like NAM to adopt the Convention against Terrorism. But there have been some differences on the definition. How many of them have been ironed out?

Special Secretary (Pol & IO): Let me clarify. What I mentioned was that we had introduced this Comprehensive Convention and that was at the United Nations. The Convention has to be adopted at the United Nations. If it is adopted in the United Nations, it becomes a Convention of universal applicability. We would like NAM countries to support that Convention. But this is an ongoing process. The place for action on the Convention is not NAM but the United Nations. Very recently there was a meeting of the ad hoc Committee on the Convention at the UN. So, that is a clarification you must have that the NAM Summit is not the forum where the Convention would be discussed.

Question: Today you had a meeting with the German envoy on disarmament. Could you share with us what transpired in that meeting?

Special Secretary (Pol & IO): I had a very pleasant lunch with my German colleague.

Thank you.

228. Intervention by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the Ministerial Meeting of the NAM Committee on Palestine.

Sharm El Sheikh, July 13, 2009.

Please see Document No.511.

229. Intervention by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the Ministerial Segment of the XV Summit of the Non-Aligned Movement on the theme of "International Solidarity for Peace and Development and Current Economic and Financial Crisis".

Sharm El-Sheikh, July 13, 2009.

Mr. Chairman,

Excellencies,

Distinguished delegates,

I would at the outset like to offer my congratulations to the distinguished Foreign Minister of Egypt on his election as Chair of this meeting. I would also like to take the opportunity to thank our Egyptian hosts for their warm hospitality. It is a matter of particular satisfaction to see the Movement return to one of its co-founders, Egypt, a country with which we share particularly close and friendly historical ties.

I also place on record my sincere appreciation to the distinguished Foreign Minister of Cuba, his Government and people, for their excellent stewardship of the Movement for the past three years.

The themes of our debate are significant and timely. All of us are deeply afflicted by the global economic and financial crisis and other challenges and international solidarity is essential to address them.

We are 118 countries. Together, we represent nearly two-thirds of the United Nations membership and comprise about 55 percent of the world population.

Our solidarity is crucial for our development and progress. Our problems are common. They range from poverty alleviation, eradicating hunger and deprivation, tackling pandemics, and raising literacy levels. Our responses to them are naturally varied given our differing situations. Many of them need international cooperation and an enabling environment for countries to succeed in these tasks. Solidarity within our Movement and a balanced approach should be our guiding principles.

Nowhere is international solidarity for peace and development most relevant than in combating terrorism. Terrorism threatens democracy and democratic values. It aims to destroy lives and reverse development. It is also a threat to international peace and security. International solidarity and solidarity within NAM are necessary in order to combat this scourge effectively. We call upon MAM members to unequivocally condemn terrorism; no cause or reasoning can be used to justify such acts. In this context, the early adoption of the Comprehensive Convention on Terrorism being discussed in the United Nations is an immediate imperative.

Mr. Chairman

India's solidarity with the Palestinian people is well known. We continue to provide humanitarian assistance to the Palestinian people.

Mr. Chairman

The current economic crisis has neither originated in the developing world nor are developing countries responsible for it. However, it threatens to reverse the developmental gains made by us over the past decades. Its adverse impact is aggravated because of the food and fuel crisis. As a consequence, the millennium developmental goals are now a far greater challenge.

A global crisis, by definition, requires global solutions. The first requirement is to revive the global economy, boosting demand, and revitalizing credit flows. Counter-cyclical stimulus measures are also essential. Most developing countries need help in implementing such measures.

The decline in capital flows to developing countries must be urgently reversed through increased multilateral and bilateral flows as well as stepping up official development assistance. Developed countries have both the capacity and obligation to assist. They must step forward to take urgent action and fulfil their commitment of 0.7 per cent of their GDP as ODA. While these short-term measures are critical for recovery, we must address the longer-term imperative of reforming the structures of global governance. Without this, the root cause for the current economic and financial crisis will remain unaddressed.

We must begin the process of completing reform of the Bretton Woods Institutions. The International Monetary Fund (IMF) needs to improve its surveillance function, lending role, as well as reform its governance. The World Bank needs to increase substantially its lending, improve its capital adequacy as well as enable developing countries to access required levels of finance to support recovery efforts.

We also need better surveillance and regulation of financial markets. An effective early warning system is needed to identify risk accumulation. However, such an early warning mechanism should be non-intrusive.

Mr. Chairman

The world is facing a crisis which affects the developing countries asymmetrically. We need to harness our collective energies to counter the crisis. South-South Cooperation is extremely important at this hour. We need a collective approach within the context of South-South Cooperation. India stands ready to contribute strengthening such cooperation.

India has put in place several measures to counter the current crisis, including, enhancing public spending significantly to over 3% of our GDP. Our monetary policies targets are to maintain adequate liquidity position while ensuring delivery of credit remains on track. Our banks are well regulated, capitalized, and profitable. All these measures have helped India to maintain an estimated 7 per cent rate of growth per annum despite the current crisis.

Mr. Chairman,

India's commitment and solidarity with NAM is firm and abiding. We look forward to the Summit outcome at Sharm el Sheikh.

Thank You

230. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh prior to his departure for France and Egypt.

New Delhi, July13, 2009.

At the invitation of President Nicolas Sarkozy, I am leaving today for Paris to participate in the National Day celebrations of the Republic of France on July 14.

The invitation extended to me to participate as the Chief Guest at the National Day celebrations of France is an honour for the people of India. India and France enjoy a close and wide ranging strategic partnership. Our relations with France encompass a large number of areas, and have served our national interests well. We would like to build upon our partnership in the areas of trade and investment, high technology, space, nuclear energy, defence, education, culture, tourism and scientific research and development.

I will thereafter be visiting Sharm El Sheikh, Egypt to participate in the Fifteenth Summit of the Non-aligned Movement which will be held under the chairmanship of President Hosny Mubarak.

Non-alignment has been the bedrock of India's foreign policy since it was enunciated by Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. Non-alignment remains an article of faith for us. In the post-Cold War era, when the world is no longer divided into two military blocs, the Non-aligned Movement has a renewed role to play in the emerging world order.

The diversity and universality of the Non-aligned Movement offers NAM a unique opportunity to address the challenges of today. India will play its part in helping NAM to regain its moral high ground to address issues which are of direct concern and relevance to developing countries such as sustainable development, climate change, food security, energy security, terrorism and reform of the architecture of international governance.

During my stay in Sharm El Sheikh, I look forward to holding bilateral meetings with other leaders, including those of Bangladesh, Egypt, Nepal, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Vietnam.

231. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the XV Summit of the Non Aligned Movement.

Sharm El Sheikh, July 15, 2009.

Mr. Chairman,

Excellencies,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I wish to begin by conveying the sense of strong affinity and solidarity of the people of India for the people of Egypt and the Arab world. I congratulate His Excellency President Hosni Mubarak on his assuming the chairmanship of the Non-aligned Movement. Mr. Chairman, we know that your profound wisdom and able guidance will take our Movement forward. You will have India's fullest support.

I also wish to express our deep appreciation to His Excellency President Raul Castro of Cuba for his leadership of NAM over the last three years.

Meeting as we do on Arab soil, my thoughts turn to the people of Palestine, who have endured great suffering and hardship. Our Movement must do more to facilitate a comprehensive, just, lasting and peaceful settlement of the Palestinian issue.

The Nonaligned Movement owes a great deal to the visionary zeal of its founding fathers like President Tito, Pandit Nehru, President Nasser and also those who carried this vision forward like President Fidel Castro and Mrs. Indira Gandhi.

At the first NAM Conference in 1961, India's first Prime Minister and one of the founding fathers of the Movement, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru said, and I quote "The power of nations assembled here is not military power or economic power, nevertheless it is power. Call it moral force". Unquote.

These words hold true even today. History has shown that non-alignment is an idea that evolves but does not fade. We must take it forward, harnessing it to meet the challenges of today.

The Non-aligned Movement gave voice to the colonial world, leading to their political emancipation. It heralded their hope that their new found political freedom would translate into economic progress and the removal of poverty, hunger and disease; that they would become active and equal participants in shaping a world order that would facilitate the realisation of their development objectives. We are still far from achieving this objective.

No Non-aligned Summit has ever been held in an economic and financial crisis of the magnitude that now grips the world.

This crisis, the worst in living memory, emanated from the advanced industrial economies, but the developing economies, the members of our Movement, have been the hardest hit. The global recession has strengthened protectionism in developed country markets, drastically reduced developing country exports, and choked credit and capital flows to the third world.

With the benefits and burdens of globalization so unfairly distributed, it will be even harder for our economies to cope with the crisis. If the aftermath of the crisis is not carefully managed, and if the abundance of liquidity leads to a revival of speculative activities, we may well see a period of prolonged stagflation.

Crucially for the developing world, a continuing slowdown will force more and more of our people back into poverty, bringing down levels of nutrition, health and education. The progress we have made at great cost and sacrifice will be wiped out. The Millennium Development Goals will become a mirage.

The Non-aligned Movement has a great stake in ensuring that steps planned to revive the global economy take into account the concerns of the developing countries. These include the challenges of food security, energy security, the environment and the reform of institutions of global governance. They are embedded in the economic crisis and must be dealt with comprehensively and with a sense of urgency. We have a crucial stake in a rule based multilateral trading system and in an early conclusion of a balanced and fair agreement in the Doha round.

The systems of global governance have not kept pace either with the growing interdependence of nations or with contemporary realities. Though we have a global economy of sorts, the global polity does not represent the hopes, fears and aspirations of the majority of the world's people. The relevance of NAM has, hence, never been greater than today. Cooperation, trade and investment among our countries can contribute significantly to reviving the world economy.

Decision-making processes, whether in the United Nations or the international financial institutions continue to be based on charters written more than sixty years ago, though the world has changed greatly since then.

Developing countries must be fully represented in the decision-making levels of international institutions if they are to remain effective and have the legitimacy they need to play their role in an increasingly integrated world.

Our planet is threatened by the accumulation of greenhouse gases resulting from over two centuries of industrial activity and unsustainable lifestyles in the developed world. Any equitable solution to the problem of climate change should acknowledge this historical responsibility.

Developing countries are the worst affected by climate change. They have the biggest stake in ensuring the success of global efforts to tackle climate change. We recognize more than anyone else our obligation to preserve and protect the environment. We are already making our own significant contributions in this regard, but climate change action must not perpetuate the poverty of the developing countries.

The weight of NAM should be used to achieve a comprehensive, balanced and above all, equitable outcome in the ongoing multilateral negotiations, leading up to the Copenhagen Conference in December this year.

Nowhere are the challenges humankind faces more pressing than in the continent of Africa. NAM should work to give Africa's problems, and equally its prospects, pre-eminence in the global development agenda. Making Africa an active participant in global economic processes is a moral imperative. It also makes good economic sense.

India is committed to develop a comprehensive partnership with Africa. As a first step, we held the first India-Africa Forum Summit in New Delhi in 2008. We are ready to work with other NAM countries to enhance our partnership in areas that are of priority to Africa.

The youth constitute an overwhelming proportion of many of our populations. If we can impart skills to our youth and create productive jobs for them, the developing world can become a major source of future global economic growth. The challenge before us is to make the poor of the world more skilled and more bankable. NAM itself can pioneer an initiative in this regard and India will be ready to participate in it.

The diversity of our membership is our greatest strength. We respect each other's paths to development, distinct cultural traditions and national priorities. Extremism, intolerance and terrorism are our antitheses; they seek to destroy us and our Movement.

In recent years, terrorist groups have become more sophisticated, more organized and more daring. Terrorists and those who aid and abet them must be brought to justice. The infrastructure of terrorism must be dismantled and there should be no safe havens for terrorists because they do not represent any cause, group or religion. It is time that we agree on a Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism.

The Non-aligned Movement was formed to try to save the world from a political and military rivalry that threatened to destroy it. We fought against the injustice of colonialism, and the arrogance of the Cold War. Our Movement made a significant contribution to widening circles of cooperation, peace and stability in the world. Our voice was heard with respect.

The world has changed and the challenges have grown more complex. The moral force that Pandit Nehru spoke of was a force that came from the power of ideas and from an abiding faith in the principles of justice and reason. How we can exercise this force for the collective good of humanity is what the Movement must deliberate upon. We look forward, Mr. Chairman, to your leadership, as we seek to fashion a contemporary and compelling vision for the Non-aligned Movement.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

232. Media briefing by Foreign Secretary on the conclusion of the NAM Summit.*Sharm El Sheikh, July 15, 2009.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening and welcome to the Media Centre. Foreign Secretary is here to brief you about Prime Minister's engagements today. After his opening remarks, Foreign Secretary will be happy to take a few questions.

Foreign Secretary (Shri Shivshankar Menon): Good evening. Sorry to keep you waiting. Under-estimated business as usual. I thought I would brief you about what happened today, about Prime Minister's engagements, and also some of the meetings that the External Affairs Minister had in the last three days.

As you know, this morning was occupied primarily with the Inaugural Ceremony. I think you saw that. In the afternoon, Prime Minister was the third speaker in the general debate. You have got the text of what he said. I presume that has been distributed and you have probably filed your story. Thereafter, he had a series of bilateral meetings. He met with some in the Conference Centre, some separately as bilaterals.

He met with President of the Palestinian National Authority Mahmoud Abbas for quite sometime. They discussed the situation in Palestine, in the Middle-East; and also talked of India's longstanding ties with the Palestinian people, what we have done, what we hope to do with them in the years to come. It was a very warm and friendly conversation. They have known each other for sometime. One of the things that was mentioned was the need, which President Abbas had picked up from Prime Minister's speech, to impart skills to young people, giving them the ability to go out and get jobs, work in today's world. He was very keen that we build on that idea. So, we will be working with the PNA to try and do that. President Abbas was still hoping that there would be progress in terms of the peace process itself, but he was not underestimating the difficulties. The Prime Minister reiterated our traditional position of support and commitment to the Palestinian cause, to the two States living side by side in peace and in security.

Thereafter, Prime Minister met with the Prime Minister of Malaysia where again they reviewed the bilateral relationship. We have a very active bilateral relationship. As you know, we have finalized a Free Trade Agreement with ASEAN. It is now just a question of a formal signing to bring it into force.

There are several joint projects of Malaysian investments in India and Indian investments in Malaysia as well. There is a large Indian community in Malaysia. So, they discussed those issues of how we encourage that. He also spoke of Malaysian companies thinking of investing in power production in India to serve the Indian market. There were several other ideas like that which were discussed. Prime Minister was also invited to visit Malaysia, an invitation that he accepted. But we will have to set dates through diplomatic channels.

There was a brief pull-aside with the President of Bosnia Herzegovina. He mentioned an idea that all the successor States of Yugoslavia had of commemorating the anniversary of the first NAM Conference together. He said he was trying to collect opinions among themselves. Let us see where it leads. It will be interesting if they do that, 20/11.

Then, Prime Minister had a meeting with the President of Vietnam which, as you know, is a country very important in our look-east strategy. We have had a very successful visit by the President to Vietnam last year. We have also built an economic relationship as Vietnam has opened up and liberalized her economy. We do almost 2.8 billion dollars worth of trade every year which is growing quite rapidly. They were interested in cooperation in several fields - in education, S&T. We have already set up Skills Development Centers in Vietnam. We have an Indian Entrepreneurship Centre which we have set up which they now want to multiply and replicate in other parts of the country because they find that a useful experience. They are keen to send students for higher degrees in India.

In the last meeting of the day Prime Minister met with Prime Minister of Bangladesh Sheikh Hasina. It was the Prime Minister's first meeting with her after her victory in the election in Bangladesh; and her first meeting with him after his victory in elections over here. They congratulated each other on the elections. It is a very close and intimate relationship. As you know, in any such relationship there will always be issues but no issues that we think we cannot solve through bilateral discussions with goodwill on both sides. So, we looked at which parts of the relationship we need to build. Prime Minister said that he hoped to continue widening, deepening, broadening the relationship in every sphere at a pace and speed which Bangladesh is comfortable with. One of the issues that were mentioned was naturally the use of Bangladeshi territory by Indian insurgent groups who use it. She assured the Prime Minister that this would not be allowed; and that action would be taken against such elements who try to use their territory.

There was also a discussion on various projects which are of interest to both sides. The Tipaimukh issue has been active in the last few weeks in the Bangladeshi media and I think some Bangladeshi political circles have been raising it. We have been talking to the Parliamentary Standing Committee on Water Resources in Bangladesh Parliament. We have invited them to send an all-party delegation to visit Tipaimukh and to actually see it, to see what is actually going on so that a lot of the exaggerated fears or claims about it would be set at rest; and that ultimately we might start looking at more creative solutions, at solutions where both sides develop an interest on how they run or operate these projects. That is because, as you know, Bangladesh for a considerable time has been speaking of upstream storage being the solution to their problems. They have been talking of upstream storage in Nepal in the past. But this also in effect would amount to upstream storage and power at a time when both Bangladesh and India need power desperately. So, we said we are ready to look at all kinds of creative solutions to see how we try and solve these problems.

Their Parliamentary Standing Committee on Water will be visiting on the 29th and 30th. We will go to the site and we will arrange to show them the site so that they see it themselves.

There was considerable discussion of the potential of railway projects, of other projects that both sides are interested in. So, we will be developing those over the next few months. But both sides are happy, I think, with the way the relationship is going. So, it was a very useful meeting. It has set out our agenda for our work in the next few months.

The External Affairs Minister who has been here for the last three days has also been having a series of meetings with his counterparts from Mauritius, Egypt, Singapore, Nepal, Philippines, Thailand and Iran. I cannot brief you in detail because frankly I was not here. But if anybody is interested, please contact Swaminathan, our Ambassador here. He will be in a position to tell you about that.

Tomorrow morning and afternoon, Prime Minister will be having bilateral meetings with the President of Egypt, our host, and with the Prime Minister of Pakistan, the President of Sri Lanka. He will probably be also meeting with President Karzai in the course of the day. We are working that out.

There will be a concluding session in the afternoon, a formal closing of the Conference. That is really all I have for you right now. If there are any questions, I will be very happy to answer them. And I think I can guess what they are.

Official Spokesperson: Please allow the mic to come to you. You indicate your interest and the mic will come to you.

Question: Mr. Menon, Did you have a meeting with the Pakistani Foreign Secretary today? It is being said that a roadmap, an agenda will be prepared for the meeting between the prime ministers of the two countries. Secondly, did you meet MR. Gilani? Was there a proposal to issue a joint statement on behalf of the two countries or their prime ministers?(Free translation from Hindi)

Foreign Secretary: Yesterday evening after I reached here I had a meeting with the Pakistan Foreign Secretary. It was for an hour and a half last evening when we met. Even today during the meeting I met him two three times outside of the meeting; and I met MR. Gilani too. It was just like shaking hands while standing in the corridor. We talked for 10-20 minute while standing; what happened, what will happen, what results will come out, this you ask me tomorrow after the meeting between the prime ministers; I will tell you all tomorrow-we are still working, the dialogue is still on, and will go on. (free translation from Hindi)

Question: Mr. Menon, if you are not going to give us details about your meeting, I want to ask you one question. A number of foreign dispatches from Correspondents talk about a level of arrogance in the Indian Delegation talking to Pakistan. If you cannot really talk with a democratically elected Government which is battling internal demons of its own, and you cannot talk with military dictators, then who can you really talk to in Pakistan? Bilawal?

Foreign Secretary: That is a 'when did you stop beating your wife?' kind of question. We have been talking to Pakistan to whoever is ruling in Pakistan steadily since 2003. So, quite frankly I do not understand the question. We have been talking to Pakistan even after the Mumbai attacks. After the Mumbai train blasts we talked to them. So, the basis on which that question is phrased I think is completely wrong. It is just false. We kept our High Commissioners in place after the Mumbai blasts. We are in communication with them. I do not think that is the issue. The question is what we discuss and what it results in. And we do have difficult issues to address. We have had in the past; we still have difficult issues to address. And that is what we are talking to them about. As far as we are concerned, it has been consistently our approach, our policy, that there is no way but dialogue to deal with these issues, either to take the relationship forward or to address the issues that might divide us.

Question: Mr. Foreign Secretary, there have been some reports that the Prime Ministers will issue a joint statement. I think that is the best case scenario of these talks. But even there were to be a joint statement, from ...(Unclear)... for example, analysts, observers have said that there are so many unresolved issues and both sides do not seem to agree on how to resolve them. For example, the handling of the Mumbai attackers. I think there are perhaps different points of view on the strength of the evidence that India has provided and the dossier that is provided. What do you think can be done to and how are these issues going to be resolved?

Foreign Secretary: There must be a question in there somewhere! Frankly, whether there is a joint statement or not, we will know tomorrow. So, it is not going to take that long. You do not have to wait that long. We will let you know tomorrow morning. But I do not think that is the issue here. The question is not the form of how we come out and brief you on what happened in the meeting. I think the issue is really how do we deal with what has brought us to this condition of a stressed relationship; and how do we see the way forward. I think all that will be answered tomorrow.

Question: Sir, you met your counterpart for 90 minutes yesterday. Is India satisfied with the progress that Pakistan has made as far as investigations are concerned?

Foreign Secretary: We had a good, detailed discussion. He told us what they have done; what they feel they can do; where they think it is going. He described the situation as he saw it. I told him of our concerns. But it was not our job at that stage to either decide - yes, this is good; this is bad; this is satisfactory. Our job was to tell each other what we thought and then to go back and report to our leaders. And we are still in the process of talking to each other. So, I do not want to say conclusively, yes, this is it, and we start drawing conclusions from it yet. This is why I am saying, you will know tomorrow. Our job is really to talk to each other, do what we were told by our leaders to do in Yekaterinburg in Russia on the 16th of June which is for them to tell us what they have done about terrorist attacks on India from Pakistan; for us to express our concerns and so on to them; and then to see the way forward and report to our leaders, which is what we are in the process of doing.

Question: Sir, how non-negotiable is the Indian decision to make the next round of dialogue, as and when it should evolve with Pakistan, limited and focused specifically on terrorism? I ask this because some sections of the Pakistan media are reporting a deadlock in Foreign Secretary talks over the issue of what the forthcoming framework of dialogue should be, Composite Dialogue on Terrorism?

Foreign Secretary: I think the less you speculate the less likely you are to go wrong. All these stories about what we are supposed to have done! We have seen a lot of stories which bear no relationship to reality. The point we have made is a more general point which is that it cannot be that the dialogue does not take into account what has happened. We have had a series of events which have happened. Now you cannot just keep doing exactly the same dialogue over and over again unless it deals with reality as we find it; and with the sources of trouble in our relationship. That is part of it. So, what we are saying here is that, let us see how we deal with this situation. We have a situation where India-Pakistan relations are stressed and they are stressed for certain reasons - because of terrorist attacks on India from Pakistan. So, we need to take that into account to see how we move forward, how we deal with that first. What I am trying to say is there is no such decision saying we will not do this, we will not do that. No. We are saying, we have a situation here; we have to see how we deal with it. All will be revealed tomorrow. You can try in various ways but you will know tomorrow anyway.

Question: Just to clarify, you said we are still in the process of talking. Are you going to meet your Pakistani counterpart?

Foreign Secretary: We have been meeting right through the day, outside, inside; and we will keep doing this. We know each other quite well. We have been in touch for a long time. So, it is not as though we need to set up a formal meeting. We can talk to each other in various ways or forms.

Question: Since the Mumbai attack there had been series of statement from the MEA and other senior ministers that until the culprits were punished, further talks were not possible. Now you are talking "how to deal with it?" Are you prepared to go a step ahead from this situation? (free translation from Hindi)

Foreign Secretary: Let me be absolutely precise. What we have always said is 'credible action to bring the perpetrators of the Mumbai attacks to justice'. That is what we have said from day two. Secondly, 'credible action to dismantle the infrastructure of terrorism in Pakistan from which attacks on India take place'. Just to be clear, because that is slightly different from what you are saying.

Question: You have said that you are going to meet today.

Foreign Secretary: No I did not say that. I said that we are in touch. We have been meeting through the day. We will stay in touch. We will keep talking.

Question : Is Pakistan willing to admit quite overtly and quite clearly that they have been sponsoring terrorism after ...

Foreign Secretary: Please ask Pakistan. I do not speak for Pakistan.

Question: Sir, does the dossier provided by Pakistan speak about ...(Unclear)... by Pakistan. Do you think it amounts to ...(Unclear)...

Foreign Secretary: As said, I am not in a position today to say yes or no or to draw conclusions to described it As credible or not. They have given us a dossier describing what they have done. My job as Foreign Secretary is, having listened to them and got their dossier, to report to my leadership. Then we will tell you.

Question: A supplementary to this question. Does the dossier contain the identity of eight suspects identified by Pakistan as a demonstration of their commitment to investigating the Mumbai terror attacks?

Foreign Secretary: I think what it contains is the identity of five people who are under arrest, nine people who are proclaimed offenders whom they are looking for, and the names and identities of some other people who they say they are looking for who might be connected to the Mumbai attacks.

Question: Mr Menon, you have been telling them that you want credible action to dismantle terror structure. What is it that the Pakistan has been telling you in the last two days?

Foreign Secretary: Pakistan has told me, and they were quite clear about this, that they listed the actions that they have taken. They also spoke of their determination to fight terrorism. For the rest, I am sure, if you ask them they will tell you.

Question: In the past two days there have been a lot of reports on Hafiz Sayeed and that the Punjab Government there is working for the ...(Unclear)... Did it come up in the conversation? And what did the leaders say?

Foreign Secretary: It did. We are still looking for clarity, quite frankly. I believe the Punjab Government has withdrawn their appeal, but were also told that there is some other action which may be likely. So, quite frankly, we are waiting for clarity.

Question: Beyond 'good and detailed discussions' how will you characterize your meetings with your counterpart over the last 24 hours?

Foreign Secretary: Good and detailed.

Question: Beyond that.

Foreign Secretary: What else is there beyond that? Quite frankly, there is no point. I am having a discussion with my counterpart. For me that is my primary job. I am not going to negotiate through the media. I have said this to you before; I will end up, I am sure, saying it to you again. But it does not make sense. When we spoke to each other last night just before we parted, we both agreed we would not negotiate through the media.

Question: Sir, you have mentioned nine offenders in the dossier; India had always been talking of Dawood Ibrahim. Is there something about him in this dossier.(free translation from Hindi)

Foreign Secretary: We raised the issue of Indian fugitives from Indian justice who are in Pakistan. We did raise the issue.

Question: Is there a mention of this in the dossier.....(free translation from Hindi)

Foreign Secretary: There is not mention of them in the dossier. The dossier relates to Mumbai directly.

Question: I want to know what in your reckoning is a credible action against terror. How would you understand the Pakistani attempts to clean up Swat or Waziristan? Do you think it is actually dismantling of terror infrastructure? Or do you differentiate between what you are asking and what Pakistan is doing?

Foreign Secretary: I think we have been through this before. We are not in the business of laying out markers saying, "This would be credible; up to this is not credible; beyond this would be credible". We have always avoided that. When we see credible action we will know it. It speaks for itself. We would be very happy if they took the same kind of decisive action against terrorists and terrorist groups in Pakistan which operate against India as they are taking against some of the groups in Western Pakistan.

Question: Sir, once again on the dossier. Does the dossier also an ...(Unclear)... organization or any link towards to ISI?

Foreign Secretary: It does. It does include some terrorist organizations.

Question: Sir, you said that you had good and detailed discussions. What does this 'good' mean? Can you explain it a little bit? How do you describe this 'good'.

Foreign Secretary: You have to look up the dictionary I think. Quite frankly, there is no point going on asking the same question in twenty-five ways. I have made it quite clear why I will not negotiate through the media, and also why you cannot expect some great characterization of what is likely to happen tomorrow from us.

Question: Because it has not been decided yet?

Foreign Secretary: Because we are still in the middle of a conversation, and it is an ongoing conversation.

Question: Sir, beyond the Prime Minister's interaction tomorrow, have you had discussions on how the talks will go on beyond that? Do you have a way forward beyond tomorrow?

Foreign Secretary: We will let you know tomorrow.

Question: Sir, the Pakistani Foreign Secretary yesterday said that it is quite a pity that you and he had to meet in different countries - in Yekaterinburg and now here. And he said ...

Foreign Secretary: No, we did not meet there.

Question: No, you did not. That is true. He said that he would like to come to India and also said that he had extended an invitation to you. Is anything like that coming?

Foreign Secretary: We will tell you tomorrow. You know, we are just going around. You are just asking the same question in different forms. And this becomes a test of ingenuity on both sides.

Question: Just very briefly, why do you think Pakistan is not able to take credible action? Why has it not been able to take credible action for the past period? What would you like to see changed really? I ...(Unclear)... markers but in terms of willingness and ability what do you think ...(Unclear)... can achieve? Is there inability or is there a lack of willingness? What is the problem?

Foreign Secretary: I am not in the mind-reading business. I do not want to go that route that - do they want to, could they, if they would, etc. I do not want to go down that route. For me what is important is that we both know we have a problem here that we have to deal with. For us the problem is quite clear - it is terrorist attacks out of Pakistan on India - and we need to deal with that. And the Indian public opinion needs to see a clear, credible action against that. So, that is what we are discussing.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you, very much.

Foreign Secretary: Thank you.

233. Declaration on Palestine by the Heads of State and Government at the NAM Summit.

Sharm El-Sheikh, July 16, 2009.

1. The Heads of State and Government of the Non-Aligned Movement considered the critical situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the dramatic deterioration of the situation on all fronts. They stressed the importance of coordinated and principled approaches and strategies by the Movement to continue strongly supporting the Palestinian people and their leadership and underscored the need to provide both political and humanitarian support to assist the Palestinian people to overcome the current crisis and strengthen their ongoing efforts towards the realization of their inalienable human rights and freedom. In this regard, the Heads of State and Government stressed the imperative of urgent efforts to advance a peace process based on Security Council resolutions 242, 338, 425, 1397, 1515 and 1850, the Madrid terms of reference and the principle of land for peace for the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace settlement and the exercise by the Palestinian people of their right to self-determination in their independent and sovereign State of Palestine, with East Jerusalem as its capital.
2. The Heads of State and Government reaffirmed their adherence to the principled positions adopted in this regard, including in the Declarations on Palestine adopted by the Committee on Palestine in September 2006 at the XIV Summit Conference of Heads of State or Government in Havana, in July 2008 at the XV Ministerial Conference in Tehran and in April 2009 at the Ministerial Meeting in Havana, and the clear positions concerning Palestine adopted by all other previous Summits and Ministerial Conferences of the Movement. They called for serious, active efforts to uphold these positions and the intensification of the collective efforts by the Movement towards achievement of a just, peaceful resolution of the question of Palestine in all its aspects.
3. The Heads of State and Government expressed their deep regret that the question of Palestine remains unresolved after the passage of more than sixty years since the 1948 Al-Nakba that befell the Palestinian people, by which they became a stateless and dispossessed people, dispersed and displaced from their homeland of Palestine, and that more than half of the Palestinian people continue to live in exile in refugee camps throughout the region and in the Diaspora.

4. The Heads of State and Government also expressed their deep regret that since 1967, for more than forty-two years, the Palestinian people have continued to suffer under Israel's brutal military occupation of their land and continue to be denied their fundamental human rights, including the right to self-determination and the right of the Palestine refugees to return in accordance with international law, the United Nations Charter and relevant resolutions. They condemned Israel's continuing unlawful military occupation and expressed their grave concern about the severe oppression, hardships and affronts to human dignity being endured by the Palestinian people in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, as a result of the illegal and aggressive policies and practices being carried out by the occupying Power, including grave human rights violations and grave breaches of international humanitarian law.

5. The Heads of State and Government expressed their deep concern about the deterioration of the situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory at the political, economic, social, security, and humanitarian levels. They strongly condemned Israel's military aggressions against the Palestinian people, particularly in the Gaza Strip, by which the occupying Power has killed and injured thousands of Palestinian civilians by, inter alia, use of excessive, indiscriminate force and extrajudicial executions and has caused vast destruction of homes, properties, infrastructure and agricultural lands. They also condemned the continuing illegal detention and imprisonment of thousands of Palestinians, including hundreds of women and children and numerous elected officials, and called for their immediate release. They condemned all Israeli settlement activities by which the occupying Power has continued to colonize the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, in grave breach of international law. They further condemned Israel's imposition of collective punishment on the Palestinian people by numerous illegal means and measures, including military reprisals, destruction of homes and properties and severe restrictions on freedom of movement. The Heads of State and Government demanded once again that Israel, the occupying Power, immediately and completely cease all such violations of international law, including humanitarian and human rights law, which are tantamount to grave breaches for which the occupying Power must be held accountable.

6. The Heads of State and Government condemned in the strongest terms the recent Israeli military aggression against the Palestinian civilian population in the Gaza Strip, which resulted in the killing of more than 1,400 Palestinians, including hundreds of children and women, and the injury of more than 5,500

Palestinians, including by use of lethal and prohibited weaponry. They condemned Israel's wanton destruction of thousands of Palestinian homes; business properties; vital civilian infrastructure, including water, sanitation and electricity systems and roads; hospitals and ambulances; mosques; public institutions, including schools and national ministries; farms and agricultural land; and UN facilities in the Gaza Strip. They expressed their grave concern about the widespread devastation, trauma and despair caused by this military aggression among the civilian population. The Heads of State and Government demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, cease immediately its military aggression against the Palestinian people and called for respect of Security Council resolution 1860. They underscored the importance of reaching a permanent, durable ceasefire starting in the Gaza Strip and extending to the West Bank, expressing support for Egyptian efforts in this regard, as well as the necessity of allowing unimpeded humanitarian access and movement of persons and goods to meet the humanitarian, economic and recovery needs of the Palestinian people.

7. In this context, the Heads of State and Government stressed the necessity of upholding justice and international law and called upon the international community, including the Security Council, to ensure that thorough investigations are conducted of all the crimes and violations committed by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Gaza Strip. They called for serious follow-up of such investigations, aimed at holding accountable the perpetrators of such crimes and bringing an end to Israel's impunity and defiance of the law, including, inter alia, immediate action to follow-up the findings of the investigations by the UN Secretary-General's Board of Inquiry and the Human Right Council's fact-finding mission. The Heads of State and Government reaffirmed in this regard the obligations of the High Contracting Parties to the Geneva Conventions with regard to penal sanctions, grave breaches and responsibilities.

8. The Heads of State and Government also reiterated their condemnation of Israel's inhumane and unlawful blockade of the Gaza Strip, which has resulted in the virtual imprisonment of the entire Palestinian civilian population there by obstructing their freedom of movement, including movement of sick persons, students and humanitarian personnel; their access to aid and all essential goods, including food, medicines and fuel, construction materials and commercial flows. They expressed serious concern about the exacerbation of the humanitarian crisis due to the severe impact of the blockade, which has caused grave deterioration of socio-economic conditions, including widespread poverty, unemployment, hardship, declining health conditions and decay of infrastructure and institutions in all sectors.

9. The Heads of State and Government stressed that, in addition to violating human rights law, such collective punishment measures are tantamount to grave breaches of international humanitarian law. They thus demanded that Israel cease such illegal practices against the Palestinian people and permanent end its illegal blockade of the Gaza Strip by allowing for the immediate and sustained opening of all of the Gaza Strip's border crossings, in accordance with international humanitarian law, UN resolutions and the November 2005 Agreement on Movement and Access, necessary for alleviating the humanitarian crisis and for the urgent reconstruction and economic recovery needs of the Palestinian people.

10. The Heads of State and Government reiterated their strong condemnation of Israel's continuing unlawful campaign of settler colonization in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and of escalating settler violence and terror against the Palestinian civilian population. They expressed their grave concern in this regard about intensifying illegal colonization activities, including vast land confiscations; construction and expansion of settlements, settlement "outposts" and infrastructure; transfer of more Israeli settlers; construction of the Wall; home demolitions; excavations and the imposition of arbitrary, racist residency and movement restrictions on the Palestinian civilian population via a permit regime and hundreds of checkpoints throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, especially in and around Occupied East Jerusalem.

11. The Heads of State and Government reiterated their deep concern about the extensive physical, economic and social devastation being caused by the Israeli settlements, Wall and checkpoints, which are severing the Palestinian Territory into separate areas, including several walled cantons; isolating East Jerusalem from the rest of the Territory; displacing thousands of Palestinians from their homes; causing severe damage to the economic, social and cultural fabric of the Palestinian society; and destroying some communities in their entirety. They cautioned that this illegal colonization campaign is gravely undermining the contiguity, integrity, viability and unity of the Occupied Palestinian Territory and jeopardizing the prospects for achieving the two-State solution for peace on the basis of the pre-1967 borders with the establishment of the sovereign, independent State of Palestine with East Jerusalem as its capital.

12. In this regard, the Heads of State and Government expressed their grave concern in particular about the situation in and around East Jerusalem, where Israel's colonization campaign is most intense and clearly aimed at illegally altering the city's demographic composition, physical character and legal status. They condemned Israel's settlement and Wall construction, transfer of more settlers, home demolitions and excavations in and around the city, including in the area of Al-Haram Al-Sharif (Noble Sanctuary) in the Old City, its continued closure of Palestinian institutions, and other measures aimed at de-populating the city of its Palestinian inhabitants and entrenching the occupying Power's unlawful control of the city. They called for urgent action to halt all Israeli colonization measures to illegally and unilaterally determine the fate of East Jerusalem, capital of the future Palestinian State.

13. The Heads of State and Government reiterated their complete rejection of and their demand that Israel completely cease forthwith all such colonization policies and measures in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. They reiterated that such aggressive, destructive and provocative policies and measures by the occupying Power constitute grave breaches of international humanitarian law and flagrant defiance of UN resolutions and the 9 July 2004 Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice. They stressed the incompatibility of peace process negotiations with such colonization activities deliberately aimed at the illegal acquisition and de facto annexation of more Palestinian land and forcibly imposing a unilateral solution. In this regard, they further reaffirmed the many UN Security Council and General Assembly resolutions demanding the cessation of these illegal policies and practices, which deemed them to be null and void and with no legal validity whatsoever, and called for full respect and implementation of those resolutions to bring an end to Israel's illegal settlement campaign in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and to salvage the two-State solution for peace.

14. In the face of continued Israeli defiance, the Heads of State and Government called for urgent action by the international community to compel the occupying Power to abide by all of its obligations under international law, including the Fourth Geneva Convention, UN resolutions, the Advisory Opinion and the Road Map. They called on the High Contracting Parties to uphold their obligations in accordance with the Fourth Geneva Convention to respect and ensure respect of the Convention in all circumstances. Moreover, they reiterated their call upon Member States and the UN to uphold their obligations in accordance with the Advisory Opinion and the demands made in resolution ES-10/15, including the obligation not to recognize the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the Wall and not to render aid or assistance in maintaining the situation created by such construction. They called upon the UN Security Council and General Assembly to consider further action to bring an end to the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. In this regard, they called again for the expeditious operation of the "United Nations Register of Damage" and the speedy fulfillment of its mandate. The Heads of State and Government also reiterated their call for specific actions to be taken including by legislative measures, collectively, regionally and individually, to prevent any products of the illegal Israeli settlements from entering their markets, consistent with obligations under international treaties, to decline entry to Israeli settlers and to impose sanctions on companies and entities involved in construction of the Wall and other illegal colonization activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem.

15. Further, in this regard, the Heads of State and Government called for application of all appropriate and available legal remedies to end the human rights violations and grave breaches of international humanitarian law being committed by Israel in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to hold it accountable. They reiterated their firm conviction that respect for and compliance with international law and UN resolutions and decisions will positively influence and are necessary to advance the efforts for achieving a just, peaceful, political settlement of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

16. The Heads of State and Government reaffirmed their support for the Palestine Liberation Organization, the sole and legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, and the Palestinian Authority under the leadership of President Mahmoud Abbas, and emphasized the importance of maintaining and protecting the national and democratic institutions of the Palestinian Authority, including the Palestinian Legislative Council, which shall constitute a vital foundation for the future independent Palestinian State. They called for urgent efforts to rehabilitate and develop Palestinian institutions and stressed the need for mobilization of Palestinian capabilities to preserve the territorial unity and integrity of the Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, to end the occupation and to achieve the independence of the State of Palestine. They reiterated their call for restoration of the situation in the Gaza Strip to that which existed prior to the events of June 2007 and stressed the importance and urgency of Palestinian reconciliation and unity. They expressed their support for Egyptian and regional efforts in this regard and their hope for speedy achievement of Palestinian reconciliation and unity, essential for the realization of the just, legitimate national aspirations of the Palestinian people.

17. The Heads of State and Government called for intensified efforts by the international community, in particular the Security Council and the Quartet, to address the current political and humanitarian crisis, to ameliorate the situation on the ground and to help advance a peace process and a two-State settlement that guarantees an end of the Israeli occupation of the Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, that began in 1967, and the establishment of the sovereign, independent, and viable state of Palestine within a specified timeframe as well as a just solution for the Palestine refugee problem on the basis of General Assembly resolution 194 (III). They stressed that such a settlement is essential for the promotion of comprehensive peace and security in the region. They called upon the Security Council, considering its Charter authority for maintenance of international peace and security, to actively engage the Quartet for advancement of such a peace settlement. They stressed in this regard the continuing relevance of the Arab Peace Initiative and the Road Map and called for its full and honest implementation. In this connection, they emphasized the importance of the timely convening of the proposed international conference in Moscow in follow-up of the Annapolis Conference.

18. The Heads of State and Government reaffirmed the permanent responsibility of the UN towards the question of Palestine until it is resolved in all aspects on the basis of international law. In this context, reaffirming the imperative of upholding international law and the UN Charter, the Heads of State and Government reiterated their call upon the Security Council to assume its responsibilities and to act on the basis of its own resolutions to compel Israel to respect international law and to bring an end to all of its illegal practices and its occupation. They expressed appreciation to the members of the NAM Caucus of the Security Council for their efforts concerning Palestine and called upon them to continue coordination on the issue and to remain actively involved, with a view to enhancing the role played by the Movement in the international drive to achieve a just solution to the question of Palestine and lasting peace in the region as a whole.

19. The Heads of State and Government thus reaffirmed their conviction that a vital role should continue to be played by the Movement vis-à-vis the question of Palestine and entrusted the Chair, assisted by the Committee on Palestine, to lead the efforts of the Movement with regard to the pursuit of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region. They stressed the importance of active contacts and dialogue by the Movement at the Ministerial level with the members of the Quartet, the members of the Security Council and other relevant parties in the peace process in order to convey the Movement's principled positions and advance efforts aimed at promoting the peace process and at ensuring respect for international law and UN resolutions, the keys to a peaceful settlement of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and the Arab-Israeli conflict as a whole.

20. The Heads of State and Government underscored the importance of the work of non-governmental organizations, civil society and peace groups, particularly on the Palestinian and Israeli sides, and encouraged them to continue their positive work.

21. In conclusion, the Heads of State and Government reaffirmed their long-standing, principled political support and solidarity with the just cause of Palestine, reaffirming their strong commitment to continue supporting the Palestinian people and their leadership, including by provision of assistance during this time of crisis, in contribution to the overall efforts to bring an end to the Israeli occupation that began in 1967 and to hasten the realization of a just, peaceful and permanent solution of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict, and of the right of the Palestinian people to exercise self-determination and sovereignty in their independent State of Palestine, on the basis of the pre-1967 borders, with East Jerusalem as its capital.

234. Special Declaration of the Heads of State and Government of the Non-Aligned Movement on the necessity of ending the Economic, Commercial and Financial Embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba.

Sharm El-Sheikh, July 16, 2009.

The Heads of State and Government renew the Non Aligned Movement's commitment to defend, preserve and promote the UN Charter and International Law.

They firmly reiterate their rejection to the adoption and implementation of extra-territorial or unilateral coercive measures or laws, including unilateral economic sanctions or other illegal measures contrary to international law that seek to exert pressure on Non-Aligned Countries so as to prevent them from exercising their right to decide, by their own free will, their own political, economic and social systems. In this context, they call on all States to refrain from recognizing such measures or laws, which undermine the principles enshrined in the UN Charter and International Law, and severely threaten the freedom of trade, navigation and investment.

The Heads of State and Government stress that under no circumstances people should be deprived of their own means of subsistence and development.

The economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against the Republic of Cuba has been in place for 50 years. Seventy per cent of Cubans have been born under the embargo.

The Heads of State and Government express their concern over the continuation of that long-standing unilateral policy with extraterritorial effects, even after it has been consistently rejected by the overwhelming majority of States.

In addition to the 17 resolutions already adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on the necessity of ending the embargo against Cuba, numerous other declarations and resolutions of different Governments, and intergovernmental forums and bodies, including for many years the Non Aligned Movement, have clearly expressed the rejection by the international community and public opinion to the continuation of that policy.

The extraterritorial nature of the embargo, institutionalized and systematized by the Torricelli and Helms-Burton Acts, has brought about serious additional damages to the Cuban economy in its economic relations with third countries and with subsidiaries of United States enterprises over the two last decades.

In this connection, the Heads of State and Government urge once again the Government of the United States of America to immediately put an end to the economic, commercial and financial embargo against Cuba which, in addition to being unilateral and contrary to the UN Charter and international law, and to the principle of neighbourliness, is causing huge human suffering and material losses and economic and financial damage that has negatively impacted on the welfare and well-being of the people of Cuba. They further urge the government of the United States of America to immediately fully comply with all the Resolutions of the UN General Assembly, related to the necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba.

235. Declaration of the Heads of State and Government of the Non Aligned Countries Summit.

Inspired by the city of Sharm El Sheikh, that has overcome the challenges of war and became the CITY OF PEACE, providing a vivid example of the strong determination of the people of Egypt and its leadership to turn a conflict into a success story, and sincerely congratulating H.E. Having adopted the Final Document of the XV summit of Heads of State and Government of the Non-Aligned Movement held in Sharm El Sheikh, Egypt 11th to 16th July, 2009,

Welcoming the Initiative by Egypt to convene the NAM First Ladies Summit on “the Role of Women in Crisis Management”, which laid the ground for a fruitful and valuable exchange of experiences and lessons learned, reflecting the importance attached by NAM to the active and equal participation of women in addressing the current global crises and challenges,

Declare that within the implementation of the Sharm El Sheikh Final Document, and the documents of the previous NAM Summits and Ministerial Meetings, due consideration should be given to maximizing the ability of NAM to deal with the current rapidly evolving global situations, crises and challenges, including but not limited to the following:

Disarmament and International Security: Continue to promote disarmament and international security and stability on the basis of equal and undiminished security for all, bearing in mind that total and complete Nuclear Disarmament remains the only route to establish a world free from Nuclear Weapons, taking into consideration related issue of Nuclear Non Proliferation in all its aspects and the inalienable right of all states to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. We will thus engage constructively with concrete actions towards the implementation of the unequivocal undertaking by the Nuclear Weapon States, as well as the recent statements made by leaders of some Nuclear Weapons States to eliminate their nuclear arsenals and work towards realizing a World Free of Nuclear Weapons, including through the establishment of Nuclear Weapon Free-Zones, particularly in the Middle East region;

Human Rights and Democracy: Reinforce and build new momentum in addressing human rights issues based on a cooperative and balanced approach focused on constructive dialogue and capacity building, while taking duly into account the diversity of societies, political, economic, social and legal systems, cultures and religions, and avoiding selectivity, double standards and any attempt to exploit or use human rights as an instrument for political purposes, with a view to reinforcing the commitment to the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, in particular the right to development,

Self Determination: Continue to uphold the fundamental and inalienable right of all peoples, including all non-self governing territories, as well as those territories under foreign occupation and colonial or alien domination to self determination, the exercise of which, in the case of peoples under foreign occupation and colonial or alien domination,

In this regard, we will stand firm against all settlement activities illegally undertaken by Israel, the occupying power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and against Israeli measures and actions aimed at changing the legal status, character, and demographic composition of the City of Jerusalem.
- Continue to demand Israel to comply with relevant Security Council Resolutions and withdraw fully from the occupied Syrian Golan to the line of 4 June 1967, and to withdraw fully from the remaining Lebanese occupied land in the Shabaa Farms, the Kafrashuba hills and the northern part of the Al Ghajjar village.

The World financial and economic crises, its causes and implications:

In view of the fact that the Non Aligned and other developing countries are and will increasingly be the most adversely affected by the crises, more than industrialized countries, where it originated as a result of the structural imbalances and deficiencies of the prevailing International economic and financial systems, we commit to stand together, in coordination with the Group of 77 and China through the Joint Coordinating Committee, to achieve the fundamental reform of the international economic and financial systems and architecture so as to address its flaws. We commit further to enhance the voice and participation of developing countries in international economic and decision making and norm setting, including in international financial institutions, with a central role of the United Nations and its member states through the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, including in mitigating the impact of the crises on developing countries and in materializing the right of developing countries to a legitimate policy space. To achieve these objectives, we will utilize fully the follow up actions decided in the outcome of the United Nations High Level Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crises and its impact on development, and ensuring that measures taken to respond to the effects of the crises are in no case taken at the expense of developing countries as well as rendering full support for initiatives taken at the regional level to respond to the crises;

The Internationally Agreed Development Goals, including the MDG's:

Ensure the full implementation of the outcomes of major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields, including the Monterrey Consensus, the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation as well as utilizing the high-level meeting organized by the United Nations Secretary General in 2010; and comprehensively evaluate the progress achieved in the implementation of the MDGs and to develop a strategy to help developing countries to achieve MDGs by 2015, taking fully into account, inter alia, the United Nations Political Declaration on Africa's Development Needs adopted during the 63rd session of the General Assembly, as well as the special needs and vulnerabilities of LDCs, LLDCs and SIDS in line with the related declarations of various United Nations conferences;

Food Security: To ensure Food Security for all peoples of the States members of the Movement and other developing countries, we will enhance cooperation and coordination with the United Nations, FAO, IFAD, WFP and other multinational fora, in order to decisively deal with the short, medium and long term actions needed, including the need to address trade and agricultural related aspects within the current negotiations in the Doha round;

Special Needs of Africa: Continue to promote the full implementation of all commitments by the international community to address the special needs of Africa as contained in the United Nations political Declaration on Africa's Development Needs adopted during the 63rd session of the United Nations General Assembly, especially in the area of conflict resolution, peace and security, development and poverty eradication, achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, strengthening of cooperation with regional organizations and programs including NEPAD, enhancing homegrown democracy, stability and rule of law, ensuring strict and fair adherence to international law and non abuse of the principle of universal jurisdiction.

Pandemics: To enhance solidarity with and support to the governments and peoples of countries affected by the outbreak of H1N1 and other pandemics, to maximize the support given by the World Health Organization, international financial institutions and other relevant entities to assist developing countries in building their response capacity to confront pandemics as well as to combat diseases at times of crises and to provide full logistical and financial support for those governments and peoples;

In this respect, express appreciation to the leading efforts of the "Suzan Mubarak Women's International Peace Movement" in gathering the support of the international civil society, NGOs and private sector through the "End Human Trafficking Now" initiative along with her efforts through the United Nations Global Initiative to Fight Human Trafficking (UNGIFT) and commit to support such efforts in the future;

In this context, stress that terrorism should not be associated with any religion, nationality, civilization or ethnic group. Further progress is required, taking into account the positions and views of NAM member States, including through the early finalization of the draft Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism, in strengthening the application of the United Nations Global Counter Terrorism Strategy and in convening a high level conference under the auspices of the United Nations, to formulate a joint organized response of the international community to terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, as proposed by President Mohammed Hosny Mubarak at the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly, in 1986;

236. Opening Remarks of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at an interaction with Indian media.*Sharm El Sheikh, July 16, 2009.

I will today be concluding my visits to France and Egypt, and returning to India.

As I said before, India's participation as the Guest of Honour at France's National Day was a honour for the people of India, and is a matter of pride for all of us. In my discussions with him, President Sarkozy went out of his way to reaffirm the high priority he attaches to France's relations with India. We discussed the full range of our bilateral cooperation, including counter-terrorism and defence cooperation. President Sarkozy was categorical in his assertion that France is ready for full civil nuclear cooperation with India in all areas, and there were no limits to this cooperation. I look forward to receiving him in India in the near future.

The NAM Summit in Egypt has reaffirmed the Movement's significance in today's context. NAM has evolved into a powerful voice of almost two-thirds of the world's nations. Our voice has been heard with great attention and I believe the views we have articulated have found widespread resonance within the Nonaligned Movement.

The Summit's call for bringing the decision-making processes in the international architecture, including the United Nations and the international financial institutions, in tune with contemporary realities reflects the priority which the world attaches to this issue. I am glad that the Summit has heeded our call to strongly condemn international terrorism and on the need for international cooperation to effectively combat it.

I have complimented President Mubarak on his most successful stewardship of the Summit. We are confident that under Egypt's wise and experienced leadership, the Movement will gain fresh impetus and strength.

On the sidelines of the Summit, I met the Prime Ministers of Bangladesh and Malaysia, the President of Vietnam, and the President of the Palestinian National Authority. Earlier today I called on President Mubarak of Egypt. I hope to meet the Prime Minister of Nepal and President of Sri Lanka later today.

All these countries belong to our immediate and extended neighbourhood. I found a uniform desire among all these countries to further enhance their relations with India. This is a matter of great satisfaction for us. We will reciprocate their friendship to the best of our ability.

I have good discussions with Prime Minister Gilani of Pakistan earlier today. During that meeting we discussed the present condition of India-Pakistan relations, its future potential, and the steps that are necessary to enable us to realize the potential.

We have agreed on a Joint Statement which is available with you.

I return back to India satisfied with my visit and my various interactions with world leaders, which have substantially advanced our national interests.

PACIFIC ISLANDS FORUM*239. Statement by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at Post-Forum Dialogue of Pacific Island Forum.*Carins,(Australia), August 7, 2009.*Mr. Chairman, Excellencies, distinguished guests, Ladies and Gentlemen,

It is a pleasure and a privilege to be here amongst you today on the occasion of the Post-Forum Dialogue Partners' Meeting. I would like to commend and congratulate the Government of Australia for the excellent arrangements made for the Forum meetings. I would also like to thank our hosts for their warm and gracious hospitality.

2. May I now introduce the members of my delegation, Mr. N. Ravi, Secretary(East), Ministry of External Affairs, Mrs. Sujatha Singh, our High Commissioner to Australia, Mr. Raghavendra Shastry, Adviser and Additional Secretary in my office, Mr. A.K. Goel, Joint Secretary looking after the South East Asia & Pacific region in the Ministry of External Affairs.

3. Over the past decade, we have strengthened existing ties and established new links with the Pacific Small Island Developing States. We have invigorated our links with their regional organizations, with our status as a full Dialogue Partner with the Pacific Islands Forum and Observer Status with the Caribbean Community.

4. We evaluate our experience as a Post-Forum Dialogue Partner in extremely positive terms. It is a valuable forum for networking and exchange of perspectives between policy makers and business leaders from the PIF and its dialogue partners. I believe India and PIF countries have a mutual interest in working towards potentially beneficial arrangements. We need to look at conventional, as well as innovative mechanisms, to promote our relations.

5. India sees its engagement with the Pacific region as an extension of its Look East Policy, which was originally conceptualized in the early 1990s to boost our engagement with our South East Asian neighborhood, the ASEAN. We are confident that the "Look North" policy of the Pacific countries and the "Look East" policy of India will dovetail to create new synergies as Pacific Island countries are rich in natural resources and there is vast potential for cooperation in diverse spheres.

6. India's increased engagement with its extended neighborhood should not come as a surprise. The concept of neighborhood has also undergone an evolution. Today, it is not the immediate neighborhood alone but also the extended neighborhood. So, when in the context of India, we talk of our extended neighborhood, it includes all the countries in the Pacific region, East Asia, Central Asia, the Gulf and West Asia.

7. South East Asia and the Pacific have been significant components of India's foreign policy priorities. Cooperation between India and these countries is a necessary prerequisite for the 21st century to become the century of the Asia Pacific. Today, we are witnessing a rapid expansion of our engagement with Australia, New Zealand and the smaller Pacific Island States.

8. India has had a modest presence through some training programmes and small projects in some countries of PIF. These contacts had earlier been constrained by our limited interaction with the region. Our Dialogue Partnership status has added a new dimension to our relationship. We are confident that this partnership will adequately address the issues for strengthening our association with the region. With the Pacific Island States, in all our interactions, the emphasis will be on development of human resources, on science and technology, and on greater economic engagement in terms of investment as well as in terms of trade. The emphasis will be on providing whatever technical assistance India can extend to these countries based on your needs.

9. Almost 30 small island States are now covered under the Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation (ITEC) programme which covers which covers a wide variety of projects, including deputation of Indian experts, training of nationals of partner island States in premier Indian institutions and short-term study visits to India for their senior officials and decision-makers. Several infrastructural projects like construction of hospitals, provision of telecommunication facilities and construction of road-networks are undertaken in Small Island Developing States under the ITEC programme. A significant percentage of Indian experts deputed abroad is working in small island States in multifarious fields including marine engineering, agriculture, geology, fisheries and medicine.

10. India has accumulated considerable expertise in the area of harnessing new and renewable energy sources, for more than three decades. We have developed substantial manufacturing capacity for the design and production of equipment for the supply of non-conventional energy. We have also developed low-cost desalination plants. We stand ready to share this knowledge and experience with our partners from the small island developing countries.

11. India's "Regional Assistance Initiative" for Pacific Island Forum countries unveiled at the Pacific Islands Forum meeting held in 2006, based on the priorities identified by the leaders of Pacific Island Forum countries in the Pacific Plan, over the coming years would implement a wide-ranging package for Pacific Island countries including supply of equipment and materials for social and economic programmes and for sustainable development initiatives; workshop on unsustainable development, Capacity building course on Small and Medium Enterprise promotion, continued training opportunity in diverse areas under India's ITEC programme, training course for diplomats and scholarships in higher studies.

12. The Pacific region has been making steady progress towards internal integration. We applaud the determination of the Pacific countries to take control in shaping their destiny and work together to broaden and deepen regional cooperation and linkages. From our own experience as a developing country, we have found that the development model for a country or region should be entirely decided from within, to best suit its own requirements. To the extent that outside support may be able supplement the internal effort, India will be happy to offer its assistance and goodwill.

13. Currently, India has trade links mainly with Australia, New Zealand and Fiji, but the bilateral interaction with the region has the potential to pick up. India is amongst Australia's top ten trading partners, while Australia is amongst the top ten investors in India.

14. We are committed to extending assistance and training opportunities to all Pacific Island Countries. At the last Pacific Island Forum meeting, India offered grants of US $ 100,000/- each for the 14 eligible Pacific Island Countries for projects in sustainable development. Currently, we extend assistance in capacity building and undergraduate / postgraduate scholarships to all fourteen Pacific Island States. The Government of India sponsored an international workshop on 'Key vulnerabilities in Small Island Developing States, scope for technology cooperation with India' in Delhi in August 2005 under ITEC Programme in which 25 nominees from 22 small island developing countries participated. The Small Island Developing States (SIDS) are experiencing major adverse effects of climate change and adaptation to adverse impacts of climate change and sea-level rise remains a major priority for them. The workshop provided an opportunity for the SIDS and India to identify scope for enhancing technology cooperation in priority areas like sustainable energy, water conservation and disaster management. Again in 2007 the Government of India sponsored a 'Workshop on Sustainable Development' for officials of Pacific Island Countries, in Suva, Fiji in which 28 nominees from the 14 Pacific Island countries participated. All participating countries showed keen interest in having this Workshop continued on an annual basis. I am happy to convey that we are conducting another Workshop in Suva very soon.

15. India has always stood for the cause of the developing countries at multinational forums such as the UN and the WTO and has been at the forefront of South-South cooperation. India also shares the bonds of the Commonwealth with seven Pacific Island Countries.

16. We would like to share our strengths for the development of the region and for mutual benefit. I am happy to unveil the following initiatives for eligible Pacific Island countries for implementation over the coming year:

- [i] Grant-in-aid of US$125,000/- each for the 14 eligible Pacific Island Countries for the supply of equipment and materials for social and economic programmes and for sustainable development projects.
- [ii] Organisation of a "Workshop on Capacity Building for Strengthening India-Pacific Island Countries Cooperation" for officials of Pacific Island Countries.
- [iii] Organisation of a course for diplomats of the Pacific Island Countries in the Foreign Service Institute in New Delhi.
- [iv] Offer of continued training opportunities to all Pacific Island Countries under India's ITEC programme.
- [v] Grant of one scholarship for undergraduate or post graduate studies to each Pacific Island country.

17. Besides, this year, India is offering additional assistance to PIF countries in the IT sector. Under this, Government of India will offer assistance for setting up HiWEL ('Hole-in-the-Wall' Education Ltd.) Learning Stations in all the PIF countries and IT Centre of Excellence in Fiji and Papua New Guinea (PNG)

- (a) 'Hole-in-the-Wall' Education Limited is an initiative launched by M/s NIIT, an Indian company, to provide computer education to the children in rural areas and urban slums. We could offer HiWEL Learning Stations to PIF countries with the help of M/s. NIIT. Depending upon the size of the population, each PIF country will have either 2 or 3 learning stations.
- (b) IT Centre of Excellence could be set up in order to empower the youth of PIF countries in global skills and make them competitive for employment in the local and regional industries.

18. I would also like to mention that those countries which did not utilize the grant-in-aid of US$1,00,000/- offered in previous years may avail of the same along with offer made this year.

19. I would like to conclude by thanking our hosts and participating Ministers in the Post Forum Dialogue for your hospitality and the excellent arrangements made for this meeting. I look forward to a meaningful interaction with you during this meeting.

New Delhi, March 19, 2009.

India hosted the Third Meeting of SAARC Secretaries on Poverty Alleviation on March 19, 2009. The Meeting was Chaired by Dr. Subas Pani, Secretary, Planning Commission as per SAARC practice. All Member States participated in the Meeting. SAARC is home to more than 1.5 billion people of which 25 percent are living below the poverty line. All Member States have incorporated the Millennium Development Goals(MDGs) and SAARC Development Goals(SDGs) in their national plans. The Meeting reviewed the progress in the implementation of regional and national initiatives on poverty alleviation and observed that Member States have made significant progress in poverty alleviation despite the formidable challenges of development, connectivity and the global economic crisis. SAARC Member States shared their experiences on attainment of SDGs and agreed to strengthen efforts to provide health, education and infrastructure to South Asians for poverty alleviation.

A bi-annual document on a Regional Poverty Profile(RPP) is prepared within SAARC. The RPP document of 2007 on rural infrastructure will be ready by July 2009. The theme for the RPP 2008-2009 is 'Food security challenges for the poor and social inclusion'. The document will be ready by the end of 2009.

As directed by the Thirty First Session of the SAARC Council of Ministers(Colombo; 27-28 February 2009) Member States constituted country teams to prepare their country reports on attainment of SDGs and made their nominations on the Inter-Governmental mechanism within SAARC to monitor the progress of attainment of SDGs. Documents will also be ready by end of 2009.

The Meeting reiterated the concern expressed at the Thirty-First Session of the SAARC Council of Ministers held in Colombo on 27-28 February 2009 on the adverse impact of the global economic crisis on the economies of the region and agreed to strengthen regional cooperation to meet this challenge.

The next Meeting of Secretaries on Poverty Alleviation will be held in Islamabad, Pakistan in November/December 2009 to finalize the two documents on Regional Poverty Profile 2008-2009 and attainment of SDGs for consideration at the SAARC Ministerial Meeting on Poverty Alleviation to be held in Nepal in 2010.

241. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce on the call by the Minister of Commerce and Industry Anand Sharma for initiating greater cooperation towards a free and liberalized trade regime in SAFTA States at the meeting of the SAFTA Ministerial Council.

New Delhi, October 28, 2009.

Shri Anand Sharma, Union Minister of Commerce and Industry while lauding the rapid growth made in trade amongst the SAARC countries exhorted the member States to initiate greater cooperation in its movement towards a free and liberalized trade regime. He however mentioned that the Intra regional trade share in the case of South Asia in 2008 was of the order of 4.31 % as against 27.06 % for ASEAN and that one had only to see the rapid integration within ASEAN and its emergence as an important economic bloc in Asia to understand the opportunities that beckoned SAARC and the unutilized potential in the region. The aim should be to create virtuous cycles of growth in the SAARC region, he added. The Indian Commerce and Industry Minister was speaking at the fourth Meeting of the SAFTA Ministerial Council that was held in Kathmandu today and was attended by the Commerce Ministers of all eight countries with the exception of Pakistan. The Ministerial Meeting was preceded by the Meeting of the Expert Group on SAARC Agreement on Trade in Services(24-25th Oct 2009), Meeting of SAFTA Committee of Experts (COE) and the Meeting of the Sub Group on Non Tariff Measures(26-27th Oct 2009).

Observing that the Ministerial was taking place in the backdrop of the world crisis wherein the leadership was being tested, Shri Sharma stated that this was different in a way as it had imploded from the heart of the capitalist World with different countries having been affected differently. "While some economies have shown clear signs of recovery, others are yet to recover. India's traditional destinations for export would have to show clear growth for the Indian exports to also show high levels of growth. With the demographics clearly shifting in favour of South Asia, SAARC Members would be failing in their duty to this region if they are unable to follow a more coordinated and cooperative approach", he added.

The Ministerial considered the matters related to trade in services under SAFTA and noted with appreciation India's unilateral removal of 264 tariff lines from its Sensitive Lists for the Least Developed Countries. The following major decisions were taken in the Ministerial and the other meetings on the sidelines:

- (i) A Tariff liberalization programme (TLP) was agreed to by the Member States under which the following was agreed
  - a) at the end of the ongoing TLP, tariff on 30% of the tariff lines outside the Sensitive Lists may be brought down to zero by all the Contracting States within a period of two years. (to be confirmed by member States by December 2009)
  - b) Member states agreed to reduce their Sensitive Lists by [1]20% of the tariff lines from existing Sensitive Lists. Reduction in Sensitive Lists may be done keeping in mind that the goods have substantial trade coverage so that this initiative results in trade creation. The phase out period for the tariff lines taken out of the Sensitive Lists would be as under.

Base Rate: Tariff As on September 2010

Date of Implementation: 1.1.2011 (for Nepal 01.8.2011)

NLDC to NLDC	3 Years	Tariff Reduction: 0-5%
Sri Lanka	6 Years	-do-
LDC to all Contracting States	8 Years	-do-
NLDC to LDC	3 Year	-do-

[1] Bhutan would not be required to reduce its Sensitive Lists. However, it may appropriately accommodate some Requests from the Member States.

In light of the priority accorded to services by all Contracting States, the SAFTA Agreement is to progressively cover liberalization of trade in services with broad-based and deeper coverage of majority of services sectors/sub-sectors with a view to fulfilling the objectives of Article V of GATS. The Expert Group on SAARC Agreement on Trade in Services accordingly negotiated and cleaned the text of the Draft SAARC Agreement on Trade in Services. This Agreement shall provide real and effective market access to all Contracting States in an equitable manner. Negotiations for schedule of specific commitments shall take place in subsequent meetings keeping in view the national policy objectives, the level of development and the size of economies of Contracting States both overall and in individual sectors. The Meeting also recommended that work on schedules should start before the Sixteenth SAARC Summit to be held in Bhutan in April 2010.

The Meeting agreed to commission studies to guide LDCs to explore niche export markets for the products of LDCs. The Sixth Meeting of SAFTA Committee of Experts would be held in Maldives in May 2010.

242. Address by the Prime Minister Dr.Manmohan Singh at the Pravasi Bharatiya Diwas.

Chennai, January 8, 2009.

I am delighted to be here in the presence of such a distinguished gathering of overseas Indians. I wish you and your families a very happy, peaceful, prosperous and purposeful new year. While you are in our country, I wish you all a very pleasant stay in our country.

We have congregated in the southern most state of India and in a city where traditions and culture blend with modernity and technology with great ease. I am sure many of you will be visiting the great temples at Mahabalipuram. They stand testimony to our sea-faring history. The ancient Tamil people, the ancient Telugu people, the people of Bengal and Orissa, have all sailed through the sea to our East, not to conquer lands but to conquer the hearts and minds of the people they came in contact with.

This Pravasi Bharatiya Diwas is our contemporary tribute to that great spirit, to that great heritage and to the excellent work you all continue to do as people of Indian origin in your respective countries. It is a tribute to your spirit of adventure and enterprise which have transformed you and the Indian Overseas community into powerful agents of social and economic change and the world admiration in distinct lands.

You come to this Conference from distant lands from all around the world. Our Chief Guest today, His Excellency Mr. Ramdien Sardjoe, the Vice President of Suriname, comes from the other side of our planet. Yet, he has inside him the blood of his Indian ancestors. His leadership and contribution to public life are a testimony to the achievements of the sons and daughters of India who have travelled to distant lands, and excelled in their respective professions. We take great pride in their achievements.

I welcome you, Mr. Vice President, to this ancient land of Bharat. I am sure your heart beats faster on this soil. Let me assure you, our hearts too beat for you and for the millions of Pravasis, every moment of our lives.

We feel proud of the great achievements of the people of Indian origin around the world. More than any other people, the people of India and of Indian origin know the meaning of tolerance and the art of living together regardless of caste, creed, religion or language.

Pluralism and the willingness to live with each other despite our differences is a deeply embedded trait of Indian culture. That is why I have often said that those who pursue the politics of exclusion, of monotheism, who divide people between "us" and "them", betray the very idea of India. Our civilization was built on reason; on the willingness to engage in dialogue. As my friend Prof. Amartya Sen has reminded us, we Indian people have been over the centuries, an argumentative people. But I also say that we have been a consensual civilization.

The recent terrorist attacks in Mumbai were a grim reminder of the grave threat posed by extremism and terrorism to our pluralistic and liberal traditions. There are some who would not like to see India succeed. But we have shown, over and over again, that we will not allow the forces of terrorism and extremism to destabilize our polity, our economy and our society. We have taken several measures to strengthen national security, to promote national cohesion and we will continue to work with the international community to ensure that there are no safe havens and launching pads for terrorists.

Despite the global economic downturn, the fundamentals of Indian economy continue to remain strong. We expect to achieve a growth rate of about 7% this year, which will be among the highest in the world. Much of India's growth is internally driven and I expect we can maintain a strong pace of growth in the coming years. That certainly will be our ambition.

India is actively involved in the meetings of the global G-20 countries, which are deliberating on the creation of a new global financial structure. We need to ensure that any new architecture that emerges is suited to the new challenges and vulnerabilities facing the world economy and simultaneously it must be reflective of the changes that have taken place in the economic structure over the years. Countries like India have a right to be given their due place in the evolving scheme of things.

A few months ago the international community lifted restrictions to end our nuclear isolation of the last thirty four years. The overseas Indian community, specially in the United States, played a key role in ensuring this outcome and in mobilizing congressional support for it in the United States. For this we are truly grateful to all of you. But much more importantly, this is a sign of the growing role that Indian origin communities are now playing in public policy and opinion making across the world. We applaud you for that contribution.

I am sure that each one of you would have sensed the growing respect with which India is today regarded in the world. India's rise is increasingly being regarded as an important dimension of the emerging international world order. Our counsels on key global challenges are not just being heard, but are being actively sought and in this enterprise of changing the image of India, the overseas Indian community have played a magnificent role and I thank you for that.

The Overseas Indian Citizenship Scheme which we had announced in 2006 has elicited an overwhelming response. I am therefore happy to announce that henceforth OCI card holders who are qualified professionals - doctors, dentists, pharmacists, engineers, architects and chartered accountants - will have the benefit of practicing their professions here in our country. Further details to operationalize this benefit are being worked out.

I am happy to launch today a new initiative called 'The Global Indian Knowledge Network'. This Network will connect people of Indian origin from a variety of disciplines to users at the national, state and local levels in India. My hope is that the Network will facilitate transfer of knowledge and serve as a 'virtual think tank' to generate new ideas on issues such as development, education and health-care.

I would like to say a few words about the five million Indian workers working in the Gulf. I have seen their contributions first-hand when I recently visited Oman and Qatar. I was amazed to see their grit, their determination, and how they are contributing magnificently to processes of wealth creation in these countries.

We are therefore concerned at the rise in tensions in the region as a result of the attack in Gaza that has led to the needless loss of lives of many innocent men, women and children. India has strongly condemned these incidents and it is our hope that the international community would get together and help restore peace in the region as soon as possible. I wish to reiterate our unstinted and unwavering support for the just Palestinian cause.

We have put in place several measures for better protection and welfare of our workers overseas, including by entering into inter-governmental agreements.

I am happy to inform you that we have launched a comprehensive e-governance project on migration. Under this project, every worker will be issued a 'Smart Card' that will contain all details of the worker, his work contract, his employer, his insurance etc. This data will also be available to the Government of India as well as our missions overseas. The objective of this project is to transform emigration process into a simple, transparent, orderly and humane process.

Till now, at these gatherings, we have celebrated the spirit of adventure and enterprise of the global Indians. This year, let me add, that we have made contact with a distant pravasi that you have all grown up hearing about - Chanda-mama!

When Chandrayaan-I soared into the skies last October, it was not just a display of India's technological achievements. It was the fulfillment of an ancient dream, to meet Chandamama! I assure you, ladies and gentlemen, that one day an Indian, desi or pravasi, will complete that journey and we will be able to land a man on the moon from India.

It is this sense of confidence in our future that defines the India of today. I urge you all to come and participate in this great adventure of human development within the framework of a free and open society and an open economy. I have often said no where else a billion people are trying to seek their economic and social salvation in the framework of a functioning democracy committed to respect for all fundamental human rights, commitment to the rule of law and if India succeeds it will have profound implication for the development of the rest of the country of the third world. India welcomes your participation in our social and economic development. Modern science and technology have created many new frontiers of knowledge to be harnessed for human development and well being. I hope your conference gives us more ideas on how we can work together for India's progress and your welfare. With these words, I once again welcome you all to this magnificent Conference.

243. Speech by the External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee at the Pravasi Bharatiya Divas on the theme of "India as an Emerging Power: The Diaspora Factor".

Chennai, January 8, 2009.

His Excellency Dato' Seri S. Samy Vellu, Guest of Honour,

Mr. Shashi Tharoor, Chairperson of this Plenary Session,

Mr. Sam Pitroda, Keynote Speaker,

Distinguished Panellists

Ladies & Gentlemen,

It is a great pleasure for me to, once again, be in your midst. Meeting and interacting with you is like an interaction with members of my family. There is so much to talk about, to share joys, to discuss concerns and more importantly, to decide how we can move forward. I have, therefore, always looked forward to meeting with the Indian diaspora and I make it a point to do so whenever I travel abroad. This annual function gives us the opportunity to look at issues with a global perspective in mind because the diaspora the world over is here for the Pravasi Bharatiya Divas.

There is increasing recognition of India's growing importance in global affairs. We are mindful of the expectations this raises and of the pride that it has created among Indians, both resident and non-resident. The economic reforms that were initiated in 1991 and the various pro-active steps that have been undertaken in various other sectors have all coalesced to create the ambience for India to reach 'the take-off' stage. Today, we can see a new found exuberance among Indians but this pride needs to be matched by humility as there is a long way for us to travel before we can truly achieve the swaraj that the Father of our Nation spoke of. Genuine swaraj, according to Gandhiji, was not simply freedom from oppressive colonial rule but freedom from hunger, from poverty and from deprivation. Genuine swaraj comes from genuine democracy because it leads to empowerment of the marginalized. It is for this reason that Prime Minister Dr Manmohan Singh has repeatedly emphasized that growth is only one part of the story and that the picture will only be complete when development accompanies growth. The UPA government has, accordingly, been emphatic on the need for growth to be inclusive so that the benefits of growth reach the majority of our people. Our commitment to this policy is total and complete and we have initiated a series of social and economic measures that would contribute towards greater inclusiveness.

In international meetings, as well, we have been emphatic on our insistence that the development agenda needs to be a global concern. This is the main reason why the multilateral trade negotiations under the Doha Development Round continue to remain unfinished. The position taken by India, which has the support of the developing and least developed countries, is that if development is not placed at the heart of the trade agenda, the promises of the Development Round would remain unfulfilled. India and all developing countries remain committed to the early and successful conclusion of a just and fair Development Round that takes into account the legitimate concerns of the majority of countries across the globe.

You are all persons of influence in your countries. For us, you are our ambassadors because it is through you that our voice is heard not only among civil society but also at high levels of political office in your country. I would, accordingly, urge you to take this message across to everyone: Tell them that all developing countries are fully committed to free trade but insist that it must also be fair. Tell them also that regrettably, with the global meltdown, we feel that there would be an increasing tendency among developed countries to adopt protectionist measures that would deny access to their markets for products from developing countries. In our view, protectionism is simply not the solution in tackling global recession. It is also important to bear in mind that the current global financial and economic crisis would severely and negatively impact on the vulnerable economies in developing countries. The message to the developed countries needs to be loud and clear: Unless we find a collective solution that keeps in mind the developmental concerns of the poor countries, the impact on the global economy will be devastating and long term. I am confident that if we dovetail and combine our efforts, our voice would be heard across the globe.

The fact that the diaspora can play an important role is demonstrated by the vigour and the success with which it campaigned for the India specific waiver that was granted earlier this year by the international community on the issue of civilian use of nuclear energy. I believe this was a historic achievement and one that all of us should rightly be proud of. It demonstrated the unique respect with which the international community holds India and how closely it listens to the voice of the non-resident Indian community. We are both appreciative and humbled by the gesture and would like to place on record the tremendous support that was extended to us by the Indian diaspora.

For many of you the question of identity: who are you, might bother you. You might be asking yourself the question: are you Indian or are you American or whatever might be your citizenship. Studies have shown that we can all have multiple identities:- be it as a father or as a professional or as a person of birth in another country. None of these multiple identities need to conflict with one another, especially in the case of India especially because of the universal values that India stands for.

Understandably, many ask: What is India? Quite frankly, I believe that each and everyone of us will have his or her own 'definition' of the idea that is India. For me, India is so much and yet, so much more! I have sought answers in her mountains and rivers, in her people, in her music and in her villages. Every time I have come out with a better understanding of India, because in each of these India thrives.

I believe firmly that India is what her people are! She is resilient, she is inspiring, she is eternal. Especially when she is mauled and savaged. Where she finds the inner strength from, I do not know. But, she does.

A little over a month ago, Mumbai was attacked. Terrorist strikes in India are not unique or new. Yet, this attack in Mumbai will stand out because of the unique nature of its operation. Unlike what happened in Kabul where the Indian embassy was targeted through a suicide bomb blast, this will remain in the annals of international terrorist attacks as unique, because of the fact that a number of terrorists not only carried out a series of murderous attacks in multiple locations but because they chose to end their lives in an extended manner and not through a suicide attack. I believe this to be the singularly unique terrorist strike since 9/11 and hence, I believe that it is important that anti-terrorist wings in all countries take cognizance of this operation and bring the perpetrators to justice. Let us not forget that terrorism knows no borders. All of us are vulnerable to terrorist attacks.

Our job has been vastly facilitated by virtue of the fact that we have one of the terrorists in physical custody. He has told us quite categorically where he comes from, where he has received military and arms training from and where his handlers are located. Unfortunately, despite this, we have seen a consistent flip-flop in the reaction of the government in Islamabad.

The recent attacks in Mumbai brought about a huge international reaction: both anger at what happened in terms of the 'external hand' and sorrow at the number of persons who had died. We are deeply grateful for the sympathy that poured out of all quarters, including at the level of common people. At the same time, after over a month of the operation there continues to be recalcitrance in bringing the perpetrators to justice.

In the words of the famous 16th century metaphysical poet John Donne, "no man is an island..... every man's death diminishes me." When death is caused by terrorism, I say to you all, it diminishes mankind.

I speak to you today as you are members of my family. A time has come to send a message out to all our friends and well-wishers: we are grateful to you all for your words of sympathy and of encouragement, but we expect you to do much more, especially because terrorism is a global problem. As our ambassadors abroad, your words will be heard in multiple corners of the globe. I call upon all of you to join us in playing the important role of taking forward our concerns to the world stage because these are concerns that you also share. Today India stands on the threshold of historic changes through its commitment to an agenda of inclusive growth; the objective of these terrorist strikes is to shake our resolve, to turn India's attention to other things. Let me say to you: India is capable of handling multiple challenges. Yet, let us not forget that India can succeed in her journey only if this kind of sponsored terrorism is resoundingly defeated, financially, monetarily, militarily and politically.

Thank you.

244. Speech of President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the 7th Pravasi Bharatiya Divas Convention.

Chennai, January 9, 2009.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am happy to be here at the Seventh Pravasi Bharatiya Divas. Let me begin by saying 'welcome home' and wish all of you a happy New Year. I am sure that your deliberations over the past two days would have been useful in understanding and re-connecting with India, the country of your origin. The meeting would also have provided an opportunity to renew contacts with old friends and to build new friendships. All this should contribute, in practical terms, to carry forward our overall agenda of the Indian overseas community engaging with India and vice-versa.

On this day, we commemorate the home coming in 1915, of Mahatma Gandhi, the first great Pravasi, from South Africa to lead a nonviolent struggle for freedom not only for India but also for those who similarly fought for freedom against colonial rule. This beautiful city has over the years distinguished itself as a major economic hub in this region and grown in stature as a modern and educationally as well as culturally vibrant city. I am happy that the first Central Maritime University of the country, which will promote maritime studies and research has been established here.

The Overseas Indian Community from this region has a strong presence in countries of South East Asia as a result of maritime and trade links between South India and South East Asia since ancient times. The people of South India share millennia of history, culture and economic ties with people in several countries.

Today, the Indian Diaspora is estimated at about 25 million and spread across 110 countries. The story of the overseas Indian community is truly the story of ordinary people with extraordinary courage and enterprise. It is a story of trials and tribulations and the eventual triumph of the migrants who traveled to distant lands. Overseas Indians are a large and well educated community. We are proud of the role they play in contributing to the growth of the countries of their adoption.

India too has grown in stature. Besides being acclaimed as a stable and responsible democracy since its independence, India's growth story has, in recent years, captured global imagination. Our focus for the future is to expand economic opportunity for all our people and propel our economy towards higher growth rates. India is seeking to bridge the infrastructure deficit and to achieve energy security, food security and human welfare security. Our task will be undertaken, in a climate of a global slowdown but I believe that we have the capacity to grow even in these difficult times. The monetary and fiscal stimulus packages of the Government should generate the confidence. We should bear in mind that India, with its large dynamic domestic market, has an edge over the others.

The global economic crises has opened the debate of financial management of credit and banking systems which triggered the meltdown in the first instance. It is now raising the fear of recession in several countries. This has had its echo in our region as well. We need to learn lessons from the ongoing crisis and take measures to secure the future growth prospects of the global economy. This is also an opportunity to review existing global financial systems, structures and coordination mechanisms, with a view to taking corrective measures. I would like to mention two aspects in particular.

One, the key lesson is that sustainable economic growth is far too important to be left entirely to the market. The absence of regulation can and does create hazards. We have to create better regulatory systems and "best practices" in the management of capital markets as well as in fiscal policy. Global financial markets need a coherent set of transparent rules for all of the participants in order to have a fair and orderly market. We must enforce them evenly.

The second issue is the need for a global financial architecture that is more inclusive. Restructuring of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank on a broad basis is necessary as the global economy today is so integrated that what happens in one part of the world can affect different parts of the world. Therefore, we, need to have a more participative and inclusive financial architecture for the management of the global economy that can be more responsive in preventing the recurrence of such economic crises in the future. India can contribute to this process in a significant way.

In India, we have an effective capital market regulator and a strong central bank. Our banks and financial institutions are based on fiduciary responsibility, are adequately capitalized and well regulated. As I mentioned earlier, the growth impetus of the Indian economy stems essentially from its large and growing domestic market. We have in the last five years seen high rates of domestic savings and investment.

Our economy has both the capacity and the resilience to remain on course for economic growth. India offers the opportunity to invest in a stable, growing market. I would like to see overseas Indians benefit from the various economic opportunities that India offers, in particular the huge investment options in India's infrastructure.

Your decision to invest in India will also be a strong rebuff to the terrorists who attacked Mumbai. These attacks were perpetrated by groups inimical to a progressive, prosperous and secular India. Common citizens, policemen, firemen and Special Forces laid down their lives both as innocent victims and valiant warriors to defend the city. Today, on the occasion of the Pravasi Bharatiya Divas, we pay tribute to those valiant men and women.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I congratulate Mr. Ramdien Sarjoe Vice President of Suriname, Mr. Angidi Chettiar, Vice-President of Mauritius and other distinguished overseas Indians who have been honoured with the conferment of the Pravasi Bharatiya Samman. This award is recognition of your eminence and a salute to your contribution to your people and country. Let me congratulate all of you.

I must on this occasion also commend the role of the overseas Indian workers. There are over five million overseas Indian workers who remit to India equivalent to between US $ 10 to 12 billion every year. They are at the lower end of the income scale; their remittances however, not only support household consumption back home but also provide resources for investment in the rural sector, particularly agriculture. The Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs should consider whether it is possible to institute a separate set of awards from next year onwards to recognize the contribution of overseas Indian workers. This will serve as a morale booster to them who work tirelessly overseas in difficult conditions. The genuine grievances of the overseas Indian should be addressed expeditiously. The Government could also look at innovative approaches to channelise foreign remittances, especially of workers for productive investment.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Diasporas are both the products and the drivers of globalization process. However, in this process, worldwide disparities of incomes are widening. Poverty and inequity are incompatible with sustainability. The challenge is to reduce disparities through capacity building and providing the poor, access to knowledge and resources needed for a meaningful life. We must seek to bridge the knowledge divide between the 'haves' and the 'have - nots'.

It is a great challenge. You all can play a decisive role with the knowledge and experience you have gained as academics or scholars, scientists and technologists, professionals or businessmen. I have no doubt, as responsible citizens you will use your knowledge to change things for the better, both for yourselves and society.

I wish all of you success in your endeavors, with best wishes!

Thank you.

Jai Hind.

245. Address of Vice President M. Hamid Ansari at the Indian Community Meeting.

Kuwait, April 6, 2009.

I am delighted to be here and to have this opportunity to meet with all of you - representatives of the over five hundred and seventy five thousand strong Indian community in Kuwait.

Earlier today, I was received with great warmth and affection by His Highness Sheikh Nawaf Al-Ahmad Al-Jaber Al-Sabah, the Crown Prince of the State of Kuwait. I also had the privilege to call on His Highness Sheikh Sabah Al-Ahmed Al-Jaber Al-Sabah, Amir of the State of Kuwait.

I shared with my interlocutors the high importance that India attaches to close and friendly ties with the State of Kuwait. During the discussions, the keenness and seriousness on the part of the State of Kuwait to join in further strengthening our bilateral ties, was reiterated. I also took the opportunity to thank His Highness the Amir for the care bestowed on the Indian community in Kuwait and for the efforts undertaken for its welfare.

My visit to Kuwait provides an opportunity to reaffirm the traditionally close and historical bonds of friendship that unite our two countries.

Ladies and gentlemen,

India and Kuwait are virtual neighbours. Our ties have come a long way since the time our trade was conducted through the sea route in traditional dhows. Our bilateral relations now encompass significant strategic, political and diverse economic interests.

It is a matter of satisfaction that Indians are the largest expatriate community in Kuwait. The Indian community here reflects India in all its rich diversity - an India that is multiethnic, multicultural, multilingual, and multi-religious. You are the modern face of the historic ties that have bound India and Kuwait for centuries.

It is deeply satisfying that there is much admiration for India and Indians amongst the Kuwaiti people. Many of you have been here for years and participated in Kuwait's development. Some of you belong to the second or even third generation of enterprising Indians who landed here many decades ago and made Kuwait their home. It is heartening that you have earned an enviable reputation for being disciplined, hard working, efficient, and law-abiding. Your contribution to the development of Kuwait is widely respected and your enterprise and success is a source of pride. Your talents are contributing to the prosperity of Kuwait and the well-earned remittances sent by many of you are a crucial contribution to your families back home.

Each of you has an important contribution to make to further cementing our friendship and ties with the State of Kuwait. You have a pivotal role in spreading a message of friendship and goodwill with Kuwait at the people-to-people level. In many ways you are the ambassadors for India.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

The Government has taken several initiatives in the last few years for the benefit of the Overseas Indian community, as part of our commitment to your welfare and safety. We have entered into a number of arrangements with Kuwait and put in place bilateral mechanisms to discuss and resolve issues that may arise.

I understand there is now an Indian Community Welfare Fund functioning through our Embassy in Kuwait. In addition, the Embassy has recently established an Overseas Workers Resource Centre for domestic workers from India. It provides welfare measures, including grievance redressal and legal services, as well as a shelter for female and male workers in distress. I understand that a 24/7 toll free helpline will be made operational in the next few days and that free counseling services for those in need will soon become available at the Embassy.

My wife joins me in conveying our very best wishes to you and your families, and through you to all Indians in Kuwait, for your good health, happiness, and continued success in all your endeavours. I also take this opportunity to wish the leadership and the friendly people of the State of Kuwait peace, prosperity and continued well being.

Thank you.

246. Speech by President Smt. Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the reception for the Indian community and interaction with students.

Madrid, Spain, April 20, 2009.

Dear Countrymen,

Members of the Indian Community, and Friends of India,

I am very happy to be in Spain on my first visit to this country. I reached here only a couple of hours earlier and it is only befitting that my visit to this beautiful country should begin with a meeting with the Indian community and friends of India. I bring with me, greetings and good wishes for you from India.

Relations between India and Spain go back in history. In spite of the geographical distance we had contacts. After the Panchatantra fables started moving Westward from India in the 6th century, they found their way into Spanish literature in the 13th century, probably through the Arab world and Greece. In the last century the friendship that developed between the Spanish poet Juan Ramon Jimenez and Gurudev Rabindra Nath Tagore is well known. We all know Columbus, whose voyages across the Atlantic led to general European awareness of the American continents, had actually set out to discover a sea route to India. There have been other memorable journeys since then - Jawaharlal Nehru visited Spain in 1938 to express solidarity with the people of Spain at a very difficult time in Spain's history and spent some days in Barcelona.

Apart from the historical linkages there are many commonalities between the two countries. Both are vibrant democracies and follow the parliamentary system of government. Both countries have rich cultural heritage. Institutions have been set up in both countries for promotion of these cultures in each other's territory. There is regular exchange of cultural troupes and film delegations. This has resulted in growing interest among the people of both countries in each other, enhanced people-to-people contacts and larger number of visits.

The Government of Spain stood by us at the time of the Mumbai attacks in November last year. The expression of support received by us from the Government and the people of Spain was, indeed, heart-warming. There is no cause that justifies violence against unarmed civilians. There is no religion that preaches hatred and intolerance. The Mumbai attack and terrorist attacks in other parts of the world, including in Madrid have highlighted the importance of effective international cooperation against terrorism. All States have agreed to international commitments and obligations for preventing and countering terrorism and it is important that they be adhered to, so that such incidents do not happen.

Like India, Spain has some of the most prestigious educational institutions in the world and the number of Indian students studying here has been growing. I am glad that we have among us today some Indian students studying at the famous Instituto de Empresas. There are also students here who have achieved high proficiency in their studies in the frontier areas of science. Your studies and research are a valuable part of India's status as a knowledge power.

I am proud that Indians have made significant contributions to the development of this country and earned the respect of the local population. The Indian Diaspora is emerging as a major economic, social and cultural force. In recognition of this, the Government of India every year celebrates the Pravasi Bharatiya Divas to honour the contribution made by overseas Indians. If Indian culture and Indians are known and loved in Spain, the credit for this goes to you - you have established societies and groups devoted to India. You have labored to add luster to India's profile and we thank you most warmly. I urge all of you to continue to contribute to the promotion of closer relations between the two countries.

I wish you all success in your endeavors.

Thank You,

Jai Hind!

247. Response by the External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna to questions on the attack in the Gurudwara in Vienna.

New Delhi, May 25 and June 1, 2009.

May 25, 2009

Since it was first reported, my Ministry has been carefully monitoring developments following the attack in the Gurudwara yesterday afternoon (local time) in Vienna. Our Cd'A ad interim in Vienna has been in regular contact with the Ministry.

At the very outset, I would like to convey my deep condolences at the unfortunate passing away of Sant Rama Nand who had been seriously injured in the attack and succumbed to injuries around midnight local time. Our Mission in Vienna will make necessary arrangements to enable his body to be brought back home.

The attack in the Gurudwara in Vienna is a matter of deep concern and regret, especially since many people have been injured and Sant Rama Nand has lost his life. There is no place for violence in a secular society like India's and certainly no excuse whatsoever for the violation of the sacred premises of a Gurudwara for narrow sectarian or other purposes.

Our Embassy in Vienna is in close contact with the Austrian Foreign Office, the Viennese police and the Austrian authorities. We are receiving the cooperation of the Austrian authorities and are determined to ensure that the perpetrators of this completely mindless and wanton attack are brought to justice.

My Ministry is continuing to monitor developments and necessary follow up action will be taken.

June 1, 2009

On June 1 a delegation of political leaders from Punjab including parliamentarians called on the External Affairs Minister when the Minister of State in the Ministry Mrs. Preneet Kaur was also present. The following statement was issued after this meeting:

"A delegation of political leaders from Punjab, including Parliamentarians called on the External Affairs Minister today, at the Ministry of External Affairs, to apprise him of the feelings of anguish and concern of the people of Punjab and Punjabis, at the attack in the Gurudwara in Vienna recently, that led to the demise of Sant Rama Nand and injuries to Sant Niranjn Das. They also presented a Memorandum to EAM. MOS Smt. Preet Kaur was present during the meeting and participated in the interaction.

EAM expressed deep concern and regret at the incident, noting that there was no place for violence in a secular society like India. He assured the delegation that MEA had been in regular contact with our Embassy in Vienna over the incident and that developments were being closely monitored. The condition of Sant Niranjn Dass was stable and improving.

EAM added that the Embassy was proactively maintaining close contact with the Austrian Foreign Office, the Viennese police and other concerned Austrian authorities. The matter was under investigation by the Austrian authorities and results of their investigations were awaited. EAM also said that the Austrian Foreign Minister, during their telephonic conversation on 25 May, had assured him of full cooperation and assistance to bring the guilty to justice."

248. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on 'Guidelines for Indian Students wishing to Study in Australia'.

New Delhi, June 12, 2009.

Australia has become one of the popular destinations of Indian students for pursuing higher studies. However, there have been incidents of robbery and assault on Indian students in Australia, particularly in Melbourne. Students are advised to carefully apprise themselves of the ground realities and go through the guidelines below:

BEFORE leaving for Australia

249. Remarks by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the Reception hosted by the Indian Ambassador with the Indian Community.

Tokyo, July 4, 2009.

Ambassador and Mrs. H. K. Singh,

Distinguished Members of the Indian Community,

Ladies and Gentlemen:

I deem it a great honour to be in your midst this evening. This is my first visit to Japan as the Minister of External Affairs, and I am delighted that I have come here at a time when our relations with Japan are at their best and surging further ahead.

2. The Community of Indians that has made Japan its home for varying periods of time constitutes a special bond between India and Japan. I am aware that the oldest component of the Community came to Japan some 140 years ago. Other segments of the community have come since India's independence, the most recent being the young IT professionals and engineers whose numbers are rapidly growing.

3. This Community may not be very large, but I understand it has grown by 25% to some 21,000 in past three years. But it is not numbers alone that makes you so special. You have kept the culture, spirit and idea of India alive in your adopted home. Your contributions to sharing the dynamism of the new India which is emerging today are equally noteworthy. As you help to build new bridges between India and Japan, I am confident that you will do so with diligence, creativity and enterprise that have become the hallmark of the Indian Diaspora all over the world.

4. From its villages and small towns to its large urban centres, India is on the move. Our economy continues to be in robust health and we are confident of being able to return to the higher growth trajectory of 2005-2008 by next year. Policies of deregulation and economic reform initiated since the early 1990s have unleashed the enormous entrepreneurial talent of our people and increased our global competitiveness. The Government of India has launched massive programmes for rural and urban renewal, public health and education. New policies enabling public-private partnership are driving forward plans to upgrade infrastructure nationwide. I believe that the transformations that are underway in India will bring about growth and prosperity to our people on an unprecedented scale.

5. The purpose of my visit to Japan is to enhance the appreciation of these very changes which have given us the capability to better partner with Japan and to emphasize that Japan can also contribute to this process as a longstanding friend and leading provider of developmental assistance. It is my belief that the educational, scientific and technological empowerment of a demographically younger India provides the basis for a long-term and mutually reinforcing partnership between Asia's leading democracies and knowledge powers, India and Japan.

6. For me, this visit to Japan so shortly after assumption of office represents an important step in our journey towards the realization of the true potential of India-Japan relations. I have held far reaching talks with my counterpart Mr. Hirofumi Nakasone, the Foreign Minister of Japan and met Prime Minister Taro Aso. We are looking forward to welcoming the Japanese Prime Minister in India for the annual bilateral Summit later this year.

7. I have also this morning inaugurated our new Embassy, which I am happy to say enhances India's image as a modern and great nation and provides ample space for economic and cultural interaction. I am certain that the Embassy's ample premises will facilitate your activities as well. I understand that the Indian Merchants Association of Yokohama (IMAY), the oldest Indian body in Japan dating back to 1929, has decided to reinvigorate itself and establish an Indian Chamber in Tokyo as a professionally run, representative body. This is a welcome step at a time when our economic engagement with Japan is intensifying.

8. The Indian Community in Japan has played a stellar role in promoting friendship and amity between the peoples of India and Japan. You have cultivated deep bonds with the Japanese community and enjoy their confidence and trust. You are helping drive bilateral economic relations. At the same time, you have also maintained close links with your motherland. We are proud of you. I invite you to join in the exciting journey of shaping the new India which is emerging, an India that is always open to its diaspora and provides an ever growing range of opportunities to its citizens at home and abroad.

I thank you once again for your warm welcome.

250. Response* of Official Spokesperson to a question regarding legalisation of stay of some Indians in Spain.

New Delhi, August 20, 2009.

The Government has been engaged for several months in trying to find a solution to a problem faced by some of our nationals in Spain who wish to regularise their status but have been unable to do so on account of legal and technical issues about the jurisdiction and competence of authorities.

We are glad that because of the cooperation extended by Spanish authorities and the flexible approach adopted by both sides, a solution in the matter has been found.

It is our hope that this will enable those Indian nationals who wish to continue to reside in Spain to pursue their normal activities in a law abiding and productive manner, will now have the opportunity to do so.

---

* The spokesperson was responding to media reports that because of the delay on the part of the Government of India to grant them some clearance their regularization of stay in Spain was being held up.

251. Speech by President Smt. Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the reception to meet the Indian community.

Dushanbe, September 6, 2009.

My dear fellow citizens and esteemed guests,

It gives me great pleasure to be with you in beautiful Tajikistan. Though I have spent only a few hours in this country, I am impressed with its natural beauty, its landscape, and its people. Above all, I am deeply touched by the traditional Tajik welcome that was accorded to me and my delegation. I am happy that my first engagement begins with members of the Indian community and friends of India.

India has much in common with Tajikistan. We share ethnic, cultural and linguistic linkages. Our ancient history as well as our geography binds us together. My Government and the Government of Tajikistan have worked closely over the years to build a strong relationship that is cordial, friendly, trusting and contemporary. We value the friendship of Tajikistan as an important member of our extended neighbourhood. India is deeply interested in Tajikistan reaching its full potential as a prosperous, peaceful and progressive nation. Similarly, in Tajikistan we find great love and admiration for India.

I am pleased to know that more than 300 Indian students are pursuing medical education at Tajik State Medical University in Dushanbe. There can be no better gift for a young woman or man than quality education that makes them globally competitive. They are the future of our nation, and we owe much gratitude to Tajikistan and its people for accepting them so willingly and with so much love. I wish educational and professional success for all the Indian students studying in Tajikistan.

I have brought along with me three sets of medical books for the Tajik State Medical University which will be sent to them by our Embassy. It is a small token of our appreciation for all that the Medical University, its Rector and Faculty are doing for students. I also congratulate all of them as their University celebrates 70 years of a glorious record, this year.

Every country I visit, I learn of the achievements and contributions of the Indian Diaspora. Tajikistan is no exception. Though the Diaspora is small, I am aware that they are engaged in a variety of activities in many areas. I am told that Indians have a good representation in the pharmaceutical sector, as also in the various international organizations. We are happy that you are contributing to the socio - economic development of Tajikistan. We urge you to excel in what ever you do, as your motherland is judged here by your actions. At the same time, be assured that Government of India gives priority to the welfare of the Indian Diaspora around the world, and is focused on issues confronting Indians and Persons of Indian origin living beyond our borders.

To our Tajik friends present here, I wish to say that we are aware of your contribution to bringing our two nations together, and increasing mutual understanding and friendship between our people. Though you are drawn from diverse backgrounds - from the media, academics and research, linguistics and oriental studies, art and literature - you all share the love for India. You have studied our common and shared history, our languages and cultural legacy. You are aware that India's interactions with your region are spread over millennia. There is hardly any Tajik intellectual, poet and writer in history who did not travel to or write about our country. This interaction has enriched both of us simultaneously. I also recognize the contribution of each one of you present here to strengthening the bonds between our two nations.

I also wish to address the Tajik youth who have studied and trained in India. We hope you have come back with professional skills and knowledge that equips you to face the challenges of your professional life. More importantly, we hope you have also come back with an understanding of the Indian society and culture. Values such as democracy, harmony and peaceful co-existence and the ability to assimilate change are the very essence of our civilisation. These are values relevant for all times and ages.

I particularly wish to recognize the hundreds of Tajik children who are enrolled for Hindi, dance and music classes at the Indian Cultural Centre. Their devotion to Indian culture is a testimony to the underlying commonalities between us. It is these young citizens who are constantly refreshing and strengthening our age old bonds, of friendship.

I wish to thank all of you for being present here today. I also urge you all to continue to contribute to the promotion of closer ties between our two nations. I also wish all of you great success in your endeavours.

Dhanyavad, Jai Hind.

252. Speech by President Smt. Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the Indian Community Reception.

London, October 26, 2009.

Fellow citizens and friends,

I extend my warm greetings to all of you. I am delighted that my first official engagement during my State Visit to the United Kingdom is with members of the Indian community. This fact by itself denotes the importance my Government attaches to our relations with the Indian diaspora.

The UK is host to more than one and a half million citizens of Indian origin, representing 2 percent of the population and who, I am told, are contributing 4 to 5 percent to the GDP here. Clearly, your involvement in the economic, social and political life of this country has been positively significant. Your hard work and constructive attitude has won you appreciation both in the country of your adoption and the country of your origin.

Even before we achieved Independence, the voices of Indians in Britain were heard not only from the educational institutions or debating fora in which they played prominent roles, but also from the very heart of democracy in the UK, the House of Commons. We salute statesmen like Dadabhai Naoroji, who was the first Asian Member of Parliament, representing the Finsbury Central constituency in 1892. We are proud that more than a century later today, there are over two dozen members of Indian origin in the Houses of Lords and Commons, representing all the three major British political parties.

We are aware of the role played by the first wave of immigrants from India, many from the Punjab, to the UK. They formed the backbone of the industrial workforce of this country and played a stellar role in rebuilding Britain's war-ravaged economy. For that you are all rightly honoured here. There are others among you whose families have overcome tremendous hardships as you made your way from areas of India such as Gujarat and Maharashtra to East Africa, and then, to the UK. You have worked hard and, today, there are many among you who are leaders in the world of business and finance. We recognize your achievements.

We also applaud those here today who are from the social services sectors. The contribution made by doctors and teachers from India to the public services in the UK, especially the National Health Service, has been significant. When we hear the Prime Minister of Great Britain, His Excellency

Mr Gordon Brown, mention the excellent treatment he personally received from by an Indian-origin doctor in the NHS, we feel proud of all of you!

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Education linkages are an important pillar of our relationship, and the two countries have identified it as a priority area for co-operation. Our interaction in this field though it existed even during the pre-Independence period is important. Mahatma Gandhi, the Father of the Nation, studied law in this very city of London as did Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, the first Prime Minister of India and Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, the first Home Minister and Deputy Prime Minister of India. The architect of India's Constitution, Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar, was a student at the London School of Economics.

Significant contributions have been made over a period of time, by Indian-origin teachers and scientists to the development of educational institutions in the UK. Most recently, we were delighted at the news of the Nobel Prize for Chemistry being conferred on Dr. Venkataraman Ramakrishnan, an Indian-origin scientist currently working at the University of Cambridge. He is here today and we all congratulate him. In the world of knowledge, we are proud of scientific, intellectual and literary achievements of Indians, whether living in India or overseas.

India has one of the youngest populations in the world. This is our greatest advantage in this century. I am happy to see that among the younger generation of our diaspora in the UK, there are many who are active not only in the traditional areas of the economy, healthcare and education, but also in culture, media and politics. In a way, this marks the coming of age of our younger generation here. In the years to come, this generation will be a vital bridge between our two countries.

I have met many youth groups of Indian origin from different countries at Rashtrapati Bhavan. I always tell them that they should maintain linkages with the country of their forefathers and build bonds of friendship with the youth of India. I also tell them about India's remarkable economic growth in the last decades. Indeed, even during the global financial and economic crisis, we were able to grow at more than 6 percent. Today, we are one of the major economies of the world and our weightage is only likely to grow further. Our conduct as the world's largest democracy has also been impeccable. We have demonstrated an uninterrupted adherence to respecting the mandates of elections. We are a stable country with an attractive market. In the global arena, we have been responsible and have constantly upheld human values as well as sought to create a more peaceful, prosperous and just world. All this has given to India a special stature in the world.

Our focus for the future is to expand economic opportunities for all our people and propel the economy towards higher growth rate. We are in the process of undertaking a massive expansion of our infrastructure and to achieve energy security, food security and enhance welfare activities. I am confident that Indians living overseas will join in the endeavour to contribute to India's growth. As members of the Indian diaspora, you know better than others the challenges and opportunities that a resurgent India represents.

Today, the Indian Diaspora is estimated at about 25 million. We seek to engage and interact directly and substantively with them. The Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs has been created to provide support and services to persons of Indian origin. Every year the Pravasi Bharatiya Divas is held and I myself have had the pleasure of inaugurating this annual meeting.

Dear Friends,

The future beckons all of us. We must work in our individual ways to contribute to the objective of building a great and dynamic India, which will be one of the mainstays of the emerging global order. I wish all of you, greater success and progress in your lives.

Jai Hind.

253. Speech by President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the reception hosted in her honour by the Indian High Commissioner in Cypress.

Nicosia, October 30, 2009.

Smt. D. Purandeswari, Minister of State for Human Resource Development, High Commissioner Ashok Kumar,

Friends of India,

Dear Fellow Compatriots,

My greetings to all of you.

It is a great pleasure for me to visit Cyprus and to have an opportunity to meet fellow compatriots living here and also to meet the Friends of India, who have contributed to building the warm ties that characterize relations between India and Cyprus.

Earlier in the day, I had the occasion to travel to some parts of Cyprus and was impressed with its rapid development. It is the hard work of its people which has transformed the Cypriot economy in the past three decades. We rejoice in the achievements of the Cypriot people - our close and trusted friends.

I am told that decades ago there were only a handful of Indians living in Cyprus. However now, due to the progressive vision of the Government of Cyprus, a large number of Indian professionals, particularly in the IT sector are working in this beautiful country. The number of Indians in professional courses in educational institutions in Cyprus has also increased. I was also happy to learn that the Indian community here represents a microcosm of India. People from different regions of India have come here and are living together harmoniously. This is how it should be.

Indians abroad are well known for being responsible citizens of the countries of their domicile. I have no doubt that each one of you is contributing, in your own way, towards the progress of Cyprus. You are also very important bridges of friendship between our two countries and I hope that during your stay and work here, you will contribute to further cementing the long standing ties between India and Cyprus.

India, as the world's largest democracy, with an electorate of over 714 million has moved forward decisively on the economic front, emerging as the 4th largest economy in terms of purchasing power parity. India has a large pool of trained and skilled manpower - our scientists, technologists and professionals are doing us proud. Scientific research and technological development have taken firm roots, and Indians are contributing significantly to the knowledge economy all over the world. India has established its place as a major player in the IT and IT enabled Services sector. Leading analysts, opinion makers and economists are regularly commenting on India's growing stature in the emerging global order. Our nation is on the march towards a brighter future and I am confident that in this journey, the Indian Diaspora will be active participants.

We are undertaking a large scale expansion of infrastructure in India, which opens numerous opportunities for investment in roads, airports, shipping, energy among many others. India is also a large market in which the middle class has been growing. This makes it an attractive market, which has considerable purchasing capacity. We are expanding our education and healthcare sectors as essential pillars for building a human resource that is educated and healthy. We look at inclusive growth as important goal and hence, the Government has taken up social welfare programmes in whose implementation, civil society and NGOs are important partners. This is another field in which Indians abroad can play a role. I hope that you will support these efforts.

The Government of India on its part, is keenly interested in the well-being of the people of Indian origin who choose to live abroad. An exclusive Ministry for the welfare of Overseas Indians was established some years ago. It functions not only to address issues relating to the welfare of Indians abroad, but also to actively engage them as partners in India's development. Many schemes such as PIO and Overseas Citizen of India Cards have been launched. At the annual function of the Pravasi Bhartiya Divas, recognition is accorded to Indian nationals and persons of Indian origin living abroad who through their work contribute to promoting linkages between India and their country of domicile. I myself have participated at two occasions of the Pravasi Bharatiya Diwas, and seen for myself the deep emotional and cultural bonds that overseas Indians have for the land of their forefathers. I would urge you to continue to nurture these contacts.

In the end, I wish you well in your chosen careers. My best wishes to you all.

Thank you.

254. Address of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Reception for the Indian Community.

Washington (D.C), November 25, 2009.

Ambassador,

Members of the Indian Community in United States,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am truly pleased to be here with you this evening and appreciate your warm welcome. I thank you for coming here from across the continent as representatives of a dynamic and creative community of Indian Americans.

I have had a fruitful and most stimulating visit to Washington DC. In my meetings with President Obama we resolved to further strengthen our bilateral relations and to work together as partners in a changing world. My wife and I have been truly touched by the warmth and generosity of the First Lady and President. I have invited them to visit India and I am delighted that he has accepted the invitation.

Friends, There were times in the past when the perspectives and priorities of our two countries were different. This often obscured the commonality of values and interests. Today things have changed. I wish to record our deep appreciation for the enormous contribution your creativity, your hard work, and your good citizenship have played in bringing our two nations together. We also value the contribution you have been making to India's progress and modernization.

Friends, India is on the march. While the global slowdown has hurt us too, we have been able to catch our breath and move forward. With a gross savings ratio of over 35 per cent of national income, and a gross investment ratio that is almost close to 40 per cent, we now have the economic pre-conditions for sustained high growth. Growth brings with it new challenges and new opportunities. We need a better education system. We need a better health care system. We need investment in education and health care. We need modern infrastructure. It is through the application of modern science and technology that we hope to march forward. More than the resources, however, we will require imagination and innovation to succeed.

People of Indian origin worldwide can contribute mightily to this effort. In the past few years we have already experienced what has been called a "reverse brain-drain". I would prefer to call this "brain gain" or, indeed, a meeting of minds. We have tried to encourage this flow by making it easier for Indian and American scholars, scientists, business leaders and other professionals to work together. Let me take this opportunity to extend an invitation to all Indian Americans and non-resident Indians who wish to return home to India in one capacity or another. You no longer have to make a choice between here and there. Modern technology and our flexible policies have opened possibilities of working in both places. I want to see a true intellectual and business partnership between Indians and Americans in years to come.

We are similar in so many ways. We are both free and open societies. We are both plural, multi-ethnic, multi-racial and multi-religious societies. Metaphors like salad bowl, melting pot and the rainbow have been used to describe both our societies. We are constantly dealing with issues like coalition building, dealing with civil society organizations, non-governmental activism and the free consumer - of goods and ideas. This is what makes it easy for Indians to adapt themselves to the US and, dare I say, for Americans to adapt themselves to India. I hope you will be the bridge that will continue to connect our two nations and societies.

Friends, Relations with the United States will remain one of the important pillars of our foreign policy. We see the United States as an important partner for meeting our national development goals and in creating a global environment marked by consensus, co-existence and cooperation. Our relationship is not born out of a crisis or any one concern; nor does it exist in the context of any other relationship. It is nurtured by our shared values; and the bonds and mutual respect that exist between the people of our two democratic and pluralistic societies. It derives its vitality from recognition of the enormous potential for mutually beneficial cooperation and a sense of shared responsibility to work towards addressing global challenges. For these reasons, our agenda of bilateral cooperation is extremely wide-ranging. We are encouraged by the fact that we have made progress across the board in our shared objectives of making our economies more prosperous, our people and our world safer and our planet greener.

Today, on the eve of the first anniversary of the Mumbai attack, I would especially like to thank the United States for the support we received in the investigations and for our enhanced cooperation in the area of counter-terrorism. This is just one example of how we are working together to make our people more secure. President Obama and I met at a time when our relationship has matured into a strong strategic partnership of global dimension. This is a time of economic uncertainty and security challenges, but it is also a time of opportunity.

There is a greater global awareness of the challenges and the need for stronger resolve to address them. We had extremely good discussions on a wide range of bilateral, regional and global issues. This was our first detailed discussion in a bilateral setting. I found in him a great deal of respect for India and its values, and a strong commitment to this relationship. We have, I believe, laid the foundation for consolidating the gains in our relationship. We are establishing new directions in the next phase of our relationship that will enable us to meet the challenges of the 21st century.

Our relationship will see a new emphasis on five Es - economy, energy, environment, education and empowerment - even as we further strengthen our ties in defence, security and counter-terrorism. We will also harness our natural synergies in science and technology, education and research to advance food security, improve healthcare, develop green technologies and create the human resources for the future.

Ladies and gentlemen, It is through the example of your family life, your good neighbourliness, your enterprise and your contribution to knowledge and commerce that you have given the land of your ancestors a new identity in the new world. We, at home in India, value that. I thank you once again for coming here today. I know that many of you have traveled from far in a holiday week. I extend to you and your families good wishes for the Thanksgiving. Thank you.

Port of Spain, November 26, 2009.

High Commissioner Shri Malay Mishra,

Distinguished Ladies and Gentlemen

My wife and I are delighted to be here with you all. We bring with us good wishes and good tidings from the people of India.

I am happy to be here in this beautiful country to participate in the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting. The Commonwealth encompasses countries around the world where people of Indian origin have made a mark. In different and diverse countries you have successfully blended Indian culture and values with the local cultural and social environment. In doing so, you have demonstrated the unique liberalism and pluralism of Indian civilization. This is what enables each one of us to adapt and adopt to new homes and new neighborhoods.

When I meet people of Indian origin around the world I celebrate our pluralism as much as I celebrate our great civilisational inheritance. Indianness is like a large and all-encompassing banyan tree. It offers shade to everyone who comes in search of it. It has deep roots at home and branches that in turn go to great distances and strike roots there.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Today's India is on the move, just as the people of Indian origin are on the move. India is reaching out to the world with confidence and in a spirit of live and let live. In reaching out to People of Indian Origin, we are also reaching out to the world. You are, for millions of Indians, the most visible symbol of our own globalisation.

There is a fundamental difference between the globalisation of India and many other developing countries. For us, globalisation is a natural means of linking up with the international community of Indians. As I have often said, if there is one phenomenon in the world over which the sun truly never sets, it is the phenomenon of the global community of people of Indian origin.

It is often said that the 21st century will be the "knowledge century". We in India are proud of our inheritance in this regard. Overseas Indians have played an extremely important role in global brand building in this respect. I was in the United States earlier this week and felt proud as an Indian to meet so many people of Indian origin doing so well in so many different walks of life. If India is today viewed as a "knowledge economy" it is because of the reputation that people of Indian origin worldwide have earned through their creativity and diligence.

India today seeks to tap the wellspring of Indian creativity and enterprise from around the world. Our ability to do so will depend on our ability to forge partnerships, on the one hand, and our ability to provide the proper environment for the flowering of such partnerships at home. Our Government is committed to cementing a new bond of mutually beneficial collaboration between India and people of Indian origin around the world.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I have often said that long before Indians crossed the seas as workers, they traveled the world as traders and teachers. Time was when the Indian gurukul system and our universities at Takshila, Nalanda and Nagarjuna, were the envy of the world. Even after independence, Indian colleges and universities continued to attract students from all over the world.

In the last twenty to thirty years, we have lost ground both because we failed to incentivise our institutions to become global players and because foreign universities became more aggressive in marketing. I am conscious of the fact that an important demand of the overseas Indian community is to secure access to educational opportunities in India. That is why our Government has been widening educational opportunities for people of Indian origin in India.

I know many of your children wish to experience the new India, having heard about an old India from their parents and grand parents. I want all those people of Indian origin who have never been to India to make a pilgrimage and discover the new India that is in the making.

I invite you to make use of the investment and business opportunities that India now offers. I invite you to be active partners of a new India and walk with us in finding new pathways of development and progress. I invite you to feel the love and affection of Mother India and feel the warmth of her embrace.

I also hope we can promote more tourism from India to these beautiful islands. Indians are now traveling around the world. I do think the Indian diaspora can emerge as a major global network for the tourism and travel trade. There are many people of Indian origin on the US mainland who would be happy to come to these islands for business and holiday. There are win-win possibilities in this kind of business activity.

Education and business are the two major arenas through which we are reconnecting with people of Indian origin worldwide. But the cornerstone of our interaction remains our shared culture - both ancient and modern. I would like to see that children of people of Indian origin get opportunities wherever they are living to learn classical Indian dance and music. At the same time we must expand modern means of satellite based communication so that Indian film, music and television can reach your homes.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

256. Suo Motu Statement by External Affairs Minister in Parliament on "Significant developments in our neighbourhood".

New Delhi, July 9, 2009.

I rise to inform the House of significant developments in our relations with three important neighbours - Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Nepal.

2. Hon'ble Members will recall the Prime Minister's remarks in this House on June 9, 2009. He had said then that it is in our vital interest to make peace with Pakistan. In our vision of a cooperative and harmonious sub-continent, the relationship between India and Pakistan can be a critical building block. The Prime Minister had also referred to our intention of meeting Pakistan more than half way, if its leaders have the courage, determination and statesmanship to take the high road to peace. These sentiments encapsulate our approach. We also recognize the importance and salience of a continued dialogue with Pakistan. However, dialogue addressing mutual concerns is premised on an atmosphere free of the threat of violence. It was with this explicit premise that the Composite Dialogue Process was restarted in 2004. Despite achievements, the dialogue and our very relationship with Pakistan have come under stress recurrently because of the license which terrorist groups have had in Pakistan to carry out attacks on India.

3. Hon'ble Members are aware of the Government of Pakistan's assurances to us at the very highest level that it would not let territories under its control to be used for attacks against India. Notwithstanding these assurances, we have been repeatedly and severely hit by a series of terrorist attacks emanating from Pakistan. It is the responsibility of the Government of Pakistan to take all such steps as are necessary to address this issue and expose and take action against the conspiracies and conspirators responsible for such attacks. Unfortunately, terrorists in Pakistan continue attacks against India.

4. When the Prime Minister met President Asif Ali Zardari of Pakistan at the margins of the SCO Summit in Russia last month, the President of Pakistan told us of Pakistan's efforts to deal with the menace of terrorism and the difficulties that they face. It was agreed that the Foreign Secretaries of India and Pakistan will discuss what Pakistan is doing and can do to prevent terrorism from Pakistan against India and to bring to justice those responsible for these attacks, including the horrendous crime of the attacks in Mumbai. After the Foreign Secretaries report, we will be able to take stock of the situation at Sharm-el-Sheikh where, at the margins of the Non-Aligned Summit, Prime Minister will be meeting the Pakistani leadership.

5. Permit me now to briefly apprise the House of recent developments in Sri Lanka. As Hon'ble Members are aware, after more than two decades of conflict involving the Sri Lankan Government and the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE), a terrorist organisation proscribed in India, the Sri Lankan Government in mid-May 2009 proclaimed the end of military operations after wresting back all the territory held by the LTTE. The death of several LTTE leaders was also announced, including that of Velupillai Prabhakaran, who is a proclaimed offender in India. This is a significant conclusion to the military conflict in Northern Sri Lanka.

6. The end of military operations in northern and eastern Sri Lanka is an opportunity to rebuild the country after the ravages of conflict. In the immediate post-conflict situation, the most pressing concern is to ensure the early resettlement and rehabilitation of the nearly three lakh Tamil civilians displaced by the conflict in the last year. The early return of the Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) to their homes is a crucial first step towards reclaiming their lives and restoring normalcy. We have been assured by the Sri Lankan Government and President of their intention to proceed quickly with the task of resettlement. Mr. Basil Rajapaksa, Senior Adviser to the President of Sri Lanka, led a high-level delegation to India on June 24, 2009 when we studied the resettlement and rehabilitation issue in great detail. The Sri Lankan Government have committed themselves to resettling most IDPs in 180 days.

7. India will provide every possible assistance in the task of rehabilitation, resettlement and reconstruction. Hon'ble Members will recall that Prime Minister himself announced in this august House, India's firm commitment to engage with the process of relief and rehabilitation in Sri Lanka in keeping with our abiding interest in the well being of the Tamil people in that country. The Government has earmarked Rs. 500 crores for this purpose and we are willing to do more.

8. The immediate focus of the projects that will be taken up as part of this effort include deployment of four demining teams, which is a pre-requisite for IDPs to return to their homes, reconstruction of houses and supply of shelter material, medical assistance, and provision and repair of civil infrastructure.

9. Since November 2008, India has shipped 1.7 lakh family relief packs from Tamil Nadu for IDPs and civilians affected by the conflict. The packs included essential items such as dry rations, personal hygiene items, clothes, utensils etc. and were distributed to the beneficiaries by the ICRC. Another consignment of family packs will be dispatched from Tamil Nadu shortly. India has also been operating a full-fledged 60-member field hospital in Sri Lanka since March 2009. Since moving to its new location near Vavuniya after the end of military operations, more than 14,000 patients have been treated by the facility which is equipped with modern equipment and amenities and they have done commendable work. Further, two consignments of medicines have also been gifted to Sri Lanka in view of the urgent requirement for civilians and IDPs.

10. The cessation of hostilities gives Sri Lanka an opportunity to make a new beginning and to build a better future for all her peoples and, therefore, for the region as a whole. We are convinced that a closure to the cycle of violence and terrorism that has plagued Sri Lanka requires an inclusive political process of dialogue and devolution. Such a process must address the legitimate aspirations of the minorities, including the Tamil community, within the democratic framework of a united Sri Lanka.

11. We have been assured by the Sri Lankan Government of their intention to pursue a political process that envisages a broader dialogue with all parties including the Tamil parties, the full implementation of the 13th Amendment to the Sri Lankan Constitution and to go beyond, so as to achieve meaningful devolution of powers. We will remain engaged with them through this process.

12. I would also like to take this opportunity to mention that the Government continues to closely monitor incidents affecting the safety of our fishermen in the waters between India and Sri Lanka. We have reiterated to Sri Lanka the need to ensure strict compliance with the understanding on fishing arrangements reached between the two countries in October 2008.

13. As a close neighbour with whom our security and prosperity are inescapably intertwined, the Government attaches utmost importance to the future course of events in Sri Lanka and has an interest in ensuring that a lasting political settlement is reached.

14. Finally, I wish to inform the House of recent developments in Nepal. As Hon'ble Members are aware, the peace process in Nepal after the Constituent Assembly elections last year has gone through many ups and downs.

15. Due to the nature of our relations and the open border, developments in Nepal have a direct impact on us. We are therefore concerned at the lack of progress on peace process issues and fraying of the political consensus that was critical to the peace process. The task of constitution making has also not progressed as per agreed schedule, and it remains to be seen whether it can be completed by the stipulated timeframe of April 2010.

16. There are also significant differences between political parties as to the structure of governance, issues like federalism etc., which they need to resolve. The Army Integration Special Committee, with the mandate to supervise, integrate and rehabilitate the combatants of the Maoist Army, was constituted in January 2009 along with a Technical Committee. No tangible progress has been achieved by it on the issue, too. Over 19,600 combatants of the People's Liberation Army (PLA) of the Maoists and over 4000 cadres disqualified by the UN Mission in Nepal (UNMIN), which include minors, continue to stay in cantonments with their upkeep paid for by the Government of Nepal and international donors.

17. Prime Minister Prachanda resigned on May 4, 2009, after a political crisis brought about by his insistence on removal of the Chief of Army Staff of Nepal Army in spite of opposition from major political parties, including the main coalition partner CPN-UML, and advice of the President.

18. Following his resignation, a new coalition Government has been formed under the leadership of Prime Minister Madhav Kumar Nepal of CPN-UML. The coalition Government is supported by 22 political parties and enjoys a majority in the 601 member Constituent Assembly, which also acts as Legislature-Parliament.

19. On her part, India has provided full support to the ongoing peace process in Nepal, including material assistance to strengthen the civil security forces and law enforcement machinery, and support for elections to the Constituent Assembly. We hope that the new government would be able to move expeditiously on the tasks of constitution making and conclusion of peace process on the basis of widest possible consensus. We have conveyed our commitment to assist the Government and people of Nepal in their endeavour of transition to multi-party democracy and conclusion of peace process, in any manner and to the extent Nepal would like us to.

20. The open border between India and Nepal offers opportunities, as well as challenges. Recently, there were allegations in the Nepalese media of encroachments on the border by Sashastra Seema Bal (SSB), which were found to be false. Strip maps covering about ninety six percent of the India-Nepal boundary have been jointly finalized and initialed. We have also agreed to establish local level mechanisms across the border to address issues related to border management.

21. Closure of the breach in the embankment of the Kosi river that occurred in August 2008 in Nepal has been carried out. We are also carrying out additional anti-erosion and protection works.

22. Our relations with Nepal are unique, and will continue to be a matter of highest priority for India. We do not view our fraternal ties with Nepal through the prism of its relations with any other country. A peaceful democratic Nepal is in the interest of the people of Nepal, of India and of our region. India will continue to support Nepal in its democratic transition and economic development in any manner and to the extent it would like us to.

Thank you!

257. Key Note Address by Minister of State Dr. Shashi Tharoor at South Asia Peace Forum.

New Delhi, August 7, 2009.

Dr Park Jai Chang, President, Asia and Pacific Alliance of YMCAs,

Mr K John Cherian, National President of YMCA of India

Prof O J Oommen, Vice President of Asia Pacific Alliance of YMCAs (APAY)

Mr Vijay Sewag, President, New Delhi YMCA

Delegates from abroad, Young Friends

Ladies and Gentlemen

I am delighted to be here to deliver the keynote address for the YMCA South Asia Peace Forum, to this gathering of people who are working towards achieving something which we all desire but sadly lack in large measure in many parts of the world. However, it is heartening to note that efforts to build peace and to achieve reconciliation, justice and sustainable livelihoods which would put us at peace with ourselves and with nature are not lacking and this gives us reason for hope rather than despair.

2. At the risk of sounding more formal than necessary, I would here like to highlight the important role that the YMCA movement has played all over the world not only in bringing together young people across the globe but also in serving as a forum for the expression of those precious human qualities which unite people of diverse cultures, ethnicities, religions, genders, and linguistic backgrounds. Although by name it is Christian organisation, we in India, have never seen the YMCA as only the preserve of our Christian brothers and sisters but as a body that belongs to every one of us. In fact, I know from personal experience that people of all regions and creeds actively participate in the activities and programmes of the YMCA. YMCA has become an integral part of the Indian ethos and the Indian way of life. It is not an exaggeration if I say that many of us have somehow and other been touched by YMCA in our lives, whether we have stayed in the YMCA hostel or undergone a training programme or honed our language skills in a YMCA institute, or, as in my case, made our first foray into local politics through a speech at a YMCA centre. This humanitarian and social work of YMCA has built enormous goodwill for the YMCA not only in India but all over the world.

3. In this context, when the message of peace-building and reconciliation comes from YMCA, it carries further and deeper and has greater resonance and relevance. For me, therefore, it is not surprising to see this initiative coming from the YMCA. I am also heartened by the tremendous response the YMCA Peace Forum has obtained, as reflected in the participation of so many delegates from India and abroad.

4. The notion of peace-building rests on an acknowledgement, particularly in post-conflict situations, that peace is not merely the absence of war and does not automatically follow at the end of war. To build peace, one must move from conflict and destruction to relief and rehabilitation, then to sustainable development, and to building democratic political institutions which will collectively help ensure that peace endures and the region does not lapse back into war.

5. With reference to our part of the world which is the focus of this meeting, I would say that as we are host to diverse communities, religions, ethnicities and ways of life, the message of this initiative is very important and relevant. South Asia is perhaps one of the most culturally diverse parts of the world. We are also the most populous and densely populated regions of the world with scarce natural resources. It follows from that we have the greatest requirement to live in harmony with each other and with nature. The mandate of the Asia Pacific Alliance of YMCA of (i) global citizenship and social responsibility; (ii) peace with justice; and (iii) sustainability for life - the three pillars on which Asia Pacific Alliance proposes to work- will find tremendous room for application in our South Asian context.

6. For centuries, South Asia has been the home for the peaceful coexistence of various peoples in harmony with nature. People of many faiths have lived together for ages and our region has given birth to many religions, be it Hinduism, Buddhism, Sikhism or Jainism. There were practicing Christians on the Malabar coast before Christianity reached Europe. Our society has since times immemorial placed virtue on frugal ways and on extracting the very least from nature. It is not a coincidence that a large percentage of our people are vegetarian. It is because, over the years, people in our region have realised that vegetarianism is a lifestyle that demands less from our planet. For instance, vegetarians contribute far less to global warming than meat-eaters! This is one possible example of the ways and means that this initiative can pick from our region and take the message forward.

7. The approach to implementing peace initiatives in this sub-continent could be learned from ground realities while implementing best practices from around the world. I know that I am addressing experts and therefore would not expand more on this subject. I would only like to reiterate my message that this initiative is most welcome and I am confident the deliberations of this Forum will throw up imaginative ideas on peace building and reconciliation in the South Asian context. I wish you all the best. I have great pleasure in inaugurating this Forum.

Thank you.

258 Keynote Address by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao at IDSA Conference on "SOUTH ASIA 2020: Moving towards Cooperation or Conflict?"

New Delhi, November 4, 2009.

Shri N.S.Sisodia, Director General, Institute of Defence and Strategic Analysis,

Distinguished Speakers,

Friends from South Asia,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Thank you for asking me to speak at this important Conference on South Asia organized by the Institute of Defence and Strategic Analyses.

That we strive for a peaceful and stable neighbourhood, and for building peaceful and mutually beneficial relations with our neighbours goes without saying. This is an issue of critical importance since in the absence of such a neighbourhood, our efforts to play any substantive regional or global role, in accordance with our size and economic strength, and also our unhindered economic development would stand to be affected. Therefore, having a peaceful and stable neighbourhood is one of our top most foreign policy goals.

The proposed theme of this Conference on the prognosis for the South Asian region in the coming decade is indeed of critical relevance to India and the region. The sub-text - moving towards cooperation or conflict - is in a sense also reflective of our collective efforts in the region to forge a more integrated South Asian region and the successes and shortcomings of the SAARC process, which is a tangible expression of these efforts. A certain sense of disappointment is understandable. While, we have indeed come a long way since SAARC was established in 1985, there is also no denying the fact that SAARC has not moved as quickly and substantively as all of us would have desired. An example that readily comes to mind is ASEAN. The ASEAN experience is a clear signal to potential opportunities that can be realized if we were to accelerate the process of regional integration. Greater economic cooperation and connectivity should be the lodestars for this endeavour.

Given our shared history and common cultural, linguistic and ethnic ties, there has always existed an implicit assumption that greater regional integration should have been easy to achieve. But that has not been the case. How do we do achieve this goal? What are the challenges we face on the path to such achievement? What is our approach to the region?

We believe that the future of peace, security and development of South Asia has to be embedded in the paradigm of common economic prosperity. India is also already engaged in this process at the bilateral level and collectively as part of the SAARC process. The challenge today for us is to build inter-dependencies which not only integrate our region but also create a vested interest in each other's stability and prosperity. Critical to this endeavour is connectivity of goods, people and ideas. India has also actively provided development assistance and is engaged in capacity augmentation and institution-building exercises in our neighbouring countries. Within this overall approach, there is the challenge of evolving differentiated responses best suited to the requirements of our neighbours as they are in varying stages of transition both on the political and socio-economic fronts.

I would argue that it is the threat of terrorism that is the most important threat facing us and which if not addressed immediately and collectively has the potential to engulf the region and beyond. At the same time, there are other developments that signal cautious optimism. Most of our neighbours are going through major internal political transformations that express the voice and aspirations of their peoples. India has been actively engaged with its neighbours to promote peace and stability in the subcontinent. There is also the challenge of managing relations with our immediate neighbours on account of the geography of the region and also because our bilateral relations cannot be seen solely from the foreign policy perspective.

Let me elaborate. Geography has played an important role in shaping perceptions of our neighbours in South Asia towards India. That India is a large country is a given fact. This in itself causes apprehensions of so-called domination among our neighbours. It is also a fact that most of our neighbours share borders not only with India but also in most cases with one more country in the region. However, in an almost gravitational sense, they have to necessarily depend on India for physical connectivity in the region. This dependence is more acute for land-locked countries. India has thus to play a central role in carrying forward the process of improving connectivity in the region. What is it that India can do to ensure that our neighbours feel more secure about us and that our approach is seen as more inclusive? Today, with sustained high economic growth rates over the past decade, India is in a better position to offer a significant stake to our neighbours in our own prosperity and growth. We have consistently conveyed to our neighbours that they need to see India as an opportunity and that India is ready to work with them for mutual benefit.

There is also a need to recognize that our relations with immediate neighbours in South Asia also have a clear domestic dimension. For example, our relations with Myanmar need to take into account the presence of tribal groups across our borders that can influence developments and impact on security in our bordering states of Arunachal Pradesh, Nagaland, Manipur and Mizoram. At the same time, these links could also be a powerful binder. Our dealings with Nepal need to take into consideration perspectives of bordering States such as U.P., Bihar, Sikkim. Similarly, our initiatives with Bangladesh need to take into account perspectives of West Bengal and our North-eastern States on issues such as migration, water sharing, trade or transportation.

There is also the challenge of globalisation that has brought problems of a transnational nature in its wake and that makes it mandatory for us to seek collaborative inter-state and regional responses. These problems include issues such as organised crime, money-laundering, pandemics, food security, energy security, etc.

Terrorism remains a central challenge to regional security. This was again underscored by the terrorist attack on our Mission in Kabul on 8 October 2009 as also previously by frequent terrorist incidents including the 26/11 Mumbai attacks. There is a real challenge posed by resurgence of the Taliban and Al Qaeda. There is a need for the international community to recommit itself in assisting Afghanistan. India is also playing its due part. Our assistance programme in Afghanistan worth US$ 1.2 billion has been focussed on building indigenous Afghan capacities and institutions for an effective state system that is able to deliver goods and services to the Afghan people.

There is a growing consensus that the increase in terrorist activities in Afghanistan is linked to the support and sanctuaries available in the contiguous areas. The international community should put effective pressure on Pakistan to implement its stated commitment to deal with terrorist groups within its territory or else the gains of the past eight years in Afghanistan would be wiped out. Failure to act effectively runs the risk of catapulting the region into a spiral of violence that would inevitably adversely affect the region including India. Recent incidents in our neighbourhood are also a stark reminder that those who strike Faustian bargains with such elements are often left to rue the consequences. We cannot afford to lose the battle against the ideologies of hatred, fanaticism and violence. We must act jointly and with determination to meet the challenge posed by terrorism and to defend the values of pluralism, peaceful coexistence and the rule of law.

We firmly believe that a stable Pakistan at peace with itself and region is a desirable objective. We have, on several occasions, conveyed to the Pakistani leadership our desire to engage in meaningful discussions and to develop our relations in a positive manner. This is only possible when Pakistan fulfils its commitment not to allow its territory to be used for terrorist activities against India.

Notwithstanding the threat that terrorism poses, other developments in the region, which if sustained and handled carefully, augur well for the region. India is also playing its due role to ensure that these developments become a source of greater stability in the region. Nepal today is undergoing a transition towards to a democratic polity. India has supported this process. We had also provided assistance to the peace process, including vehicles, communication equipment, electronic voting machines and other logistical support worth Rs 150 crores. We have been encouraging all political parties to cooperate with the new government in working towards early conclusion of the peace process on the basis of widest possible consensus.

The comprehensive defeat of the LTTE in Sri Lanka provides the country with a historic opportunity to ensure a future free from terrorism and conflict. We support a lasting political settlement in Sri Lanka that meets the political aspirations of all communities through the effective devolution of power. We have extended humanitarian assistance to Sri Lanka including for the rehabilitation of internally displaced persons. We are moving from purely relief efforts to a broader rehabilitation and reconstruction phase. The Government has already committed Rs. 500 crores for this purpose. Our assistance so far covers humanitarian supplies such as food, medicines, shelter material, and other essential supplies. We set up an emergency field hospital that treated over 50,000 people in the past six months'. Four Indian de-mining teams are presently working in Northern Sri Lanka. We are also providing assistance to revive agriculture there. Both sides are also discussing our readiness to assist in reconstruction of critical civil infrastructure in Sri Lanka.

A welcome development was the return of Bangladesh to multi-party politics. We are working closely with the newly elected Government to build further on our historical bonds of friendship and to take our relations forward in a mutually beneficial way. The Bangladesh leadership has assured us that Bangladesh's territory will not be allowed to be used by elements inimical to the interests of India.

Our close relations with Bhutan had developed further during the last one year and since the introduction of democracy in Bhutan. The India-Bhutan Friendship Treaty updated in 2007 not only reflects the contemporary nature of our relationship but also lays the foundation for their future development in the 21st century.

With Myanmar, India has consistently maintained that the national reconciliation process should be expedited and be more broad-based. We hope that free and fair elections would be held in Myanmar in 2010 as scheduled. Our engagement with Myanmar has grown constructively in recent years.

India welcomed the first multi-party elections held in Maldives in October 2008. Both governments are committed to maintaining and developing our close and friendly relations.

The SAARC process offers an important vehicle for achievement of a peaceful, prosperous and stable South Asian region. As the largest country in the region and its strongest economy, India has expressed its willingness to assume greater responsibility to encourage the SAARC process. In recent years, SAARC is undergoing a transformation from a declaratory to an implementation phase. Its core institutional mechanisms have been activated, namely, the SAARC Food Bank, the SAARC Development Fund, the South Asian University, the SAARC Arbitration Council, and the SAARC Regional Standards Organization. We have also disbursed our voluntary and assessed contributions of US$190 million. This is in line with India's asymmetric and non-reciprocal commitments to SAARC.

We are also pursuing several other regional economic cooperation mechanisms involving the region. These include the Bay of Bengal Initiative for Multi-sectoral Technical and Economic Cooperation, BIMSTEC. India is also a Summit Partner of the Association of South East Asian countries. These ties are growing exponentially as was witnessed during last week's Summit meetings in Thailand.

With regard to bilateral economic and commercial relations in the South Asian region, India has taken the lead. India is largest trade partner and one of the most important foreign investors in our neighbouring countries. We have established a free trade arrangement with Sri Lanka. There is duty free access wef January 1, 2008 for products originating from Bangladesh, except for items in the sensitive list, which has also been substantially pruned down.

In terms of trade infrastructure and connectivity, there are 15 transit routes from Kolkata /Haldia to Nepal for its third country trade. We have now agreed to add Vishakhapatnam port for this purpose. The creation of an ICD in Birgunj and extension of the railway line from Raxaul to Birgunj has facilitated movement of goods in transit by rail. There is also a direct road transit route from Nepal to Bangladesh for bilateral and third country trade. A direct railway transit route is under discussion. With Bangladesh, we have more than 20 operational land customs stations, 4 points for movement of goods by train and 8 routes for movement through river systems. Dhaka is connected with Kolkata by road and train service and to Agartala by bus service. With Myanmar, we are undertaking the Kaladan Multi Modal Transit Project involving sea, river and road connectivity and several road projects across the border.

Better connectivity is necessary to fully utilize our geographical resources endowment. The Government has embarked on an ambitious programme for upgradation of border infrastructure along our borders with Nepal, Bhutan, Myanmar and Bangladesh. These projects involve upgradation of highways, extension of railway lines into neighbouring countries, restoration of rail links with Pakistan and Bangladesh and setting up of integrated check points. These projects would lead to improvement of infrastructure in our bordering areas and improvement of transport connectivity with them.

SAARC has also already identified a number of projects based on its regional multi-modal transport study. In addition to increasing connectivity between India and its neighbours, several road corridors have been identified linking Afghanistan-Pakistan; Afghanistan-Pakistan-India-Nepal; Bangladesh-India-Nepal, etc. There is also a proposal to restore the ferry service between India and Sri Lanka through Colombo-Cochin route.

Our aspirations of full regional connectivity would not be met merely through physical connectivity. We also need to put in place enabling mechanisms to make travel freer and easier. India has taken measures to liberalise visas for students, teachers, professors, journalists and patients from SAARC countries. South Asia University is an ambitious project reflecting our effort to enhance connectivity of the mind. The SAARC University Project, which is scheduled to open in less than a year, would cater to more than 5000 students, when fully operational in five years' time.

Development cooperation is a natural and well-recognized method to promote closer regional ties. Our own fast pace of economic growth exerts a ripple effect in the region as it attracts our neighbours to access the benefits that stem from the growth of our market, our infrastructure, and our level of development in various fields, be it education, healthcare, financial services, and communications. As mentioned earlier, India has been actively involved in providing development assistance to our neighbours.

We have also begun discussing issues such as food security and climate change that impact on our development strategies and need our focused attention. The South Asia region is highly vulnerable to the effects of climate change in particular due to potential melting of glaciers and inundation of low lying islands and coastal areas. Increased glacier melts would initially cause floods but would eventually lead to reduced water flows in our major rivers. All these developments would have severe implications for food and water security in South Asia.

India is constructively engaging in the multilateral negotiations taking place under the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC). The main principle on which the Convention is based is the principle of "common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities". We firmly believe that Climate Change should not be an excuse to add a greater burden or impose conditionalities onto the development challenges that developing countries face. We also have to move away from concentrating on 'mitigation' only and ensure that there is a focus on adaptation, which is critical for developing countries.

Cognizant of the threat that Climate Change poses, India has already taken several independent initiatives. India has launched National Action Plan on Climate Change and India stands ready to share its experience with our neighbours. There are number of areas that are relevant to them such as our mission on sustaining the Himalayan ecosystem, protection of coastal areas, disaster management strategies and collaborative research on climate change modeling.

My address would be incomplete without addressing the subject of our relations with China, our largest neighbor. China borders our region of South Asia, and with India alone, it shares a border of almost 3500 km. The relationship we have with China is complex but growingly variegated in texture and substance. The rapid growth of both India and China is a phenomenon that in many ways is a source of energy and dynamism in the regional and global context. I see our dialogue with China acquiring further substance and relevance in the years to come, with even more effort and political will being invested in seeking a fair, reasonable and mutually acceptable settlement of the outstanding boundary question between the two countries. The maintenance of peace and tranquility in the border areas will receive close and continuing attention in this scenario. We are however conscious of the fact that outstanding issues in our relationship with China will take time to be resolved.

China's relations with our South Asian neighbours are also growing in many areas with increased trade and economic activity, political level interaction, and cultural and educational exchanges, apart from transportation links and connectivity. But the compelling logic and rationale for closer ties between our South Asian neighbours and India must not be deterred or diluted by such developments. These are ties dictated by geography, the need for security and stability, mutual economic advantage, transit and connectivity, shared cultural traditions, the movement of people, common approaches to the management of natural disasters and climate change, and developmental priorities that can only be achieved by close cooperation and constant dialogue.

In conclusion, and on balance, I believe that we can look to the future with a sense of optimism and purpose. We stand committed to both bilateral and regional efforts in building a stable, peaceful, vibrant and economically prosperous South Asia. The year 2020 is an achievable target date and we must jointly work to this end.

I am also certain that deliberations at this important conference would come up with useful ideas and suggestions that governments in the region can draw upon in our endeavour to forging closer regional integration. I wish the conference all success.

259. Inaugural Address by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at Conference on 'South Asian Economic Integration' organized by the Federation of Indian Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

New Delhi, November 17, 2009.

Dr Amit Mitra, Secretary General, Federation of Indian Chamber of Commerce & Industry,

Mr. Rajat Nag, Managing Director General, ADB

Dr Tariq Sayeed, Secretary General, SAARC Chamber of Commerce & Industry,

Dr. Sheel Kant Sharma, Secretary General, SAARC,

Distinguished delegates from SAARC member states,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to inaugurate this very important and very timely Conference on South Asian economic integration, and to share some thoughts on this subject.

SAARC countries represent one-fifth of humanity. It is only through closer economic cooperation that we can harness the region's full potential and bring the fruits of development to its people. It is heartening to see that this Conference intends to go beyond broad generalities, to discuss specific themes including trade, customs union, the South Asia Free Trade Area (SAFTA) and building a SAARC "brand".

It is encouraging that we are already considering a SAARC "brand", an indicator of how dynamically this young regional organisation has grown. In fact, SAARC is already being "branded" in some ways, through (a) its regional projects being implemented out of the SAARC Development Fund; (b) increased people-to-people level activities; and (c) establishment of regional entities such as the South Asian University in New Delhi, the SAARC Standards Regional Organisation in Dhaka and the SAARC Arbitration Council in Islamabad. The SAARC "brand" is set to grow stronger in coming decades.

Let me assure you that India is committed to fulfilling its responsibilities in SAARC in an asymmetric and non-reciprocal manner for the benefit of the countries in the region. Recent exchanges in the SAARC Summits have catalysed SAARC's transformation from declaratory to implementation phase. The recent Ministerial Meeting of SAFTA has taken forward the on-going negotiations for full implementation of SAFTA in letter and spirit.

India's has given zero duty access to Least Developed Countries (LDCs) from January 1, 2008, one year ahead of the target date and unilaterally reduced its Negative List with respect to LDCs from 744 to 480. A draft Agreement on Trade in Services is in the final stages of negotiation, to be ready for signature at the next SAARC Summit. Discussions are also ongoing in SAARC to strengthen financial integration with a view towards a regional Customs Union.

Ladies and gentlemen,

Let me now enumerate some of the milestones of SAARC.

The SAARC Food Bank is now operational with a total stock of 2,43,000 MT contributed by all SAARC member states. The establishment of the South Asian University is on schedule. We are in the process of acquiring 100 acres of land and are ready to disburse our financial commitment to the University to make it operational hopefully by July next year. The SAARC Development Fund's Social Window is already funding regional projects in SAARC member states. The SAARC Textiles Museum in New Delhi is on the threshold of establishment.

The signing of the SAARC Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters in Colombo at the 15th SAARC Summit has generated momentum for concluding agreements in other security related areas. For instance, a SAARC Regional Task Force recently finalized the Standard Operating Protocol on Trafficking of Women & Children.

People-to-people level exchanges and activities have risen significantly through SAARC training programmes, workshops and cultural activities. We have already held a SAARC Trade Fair, SAARC Handlooms and Handicrafts Exhibitions, South Asian Bands Festivals, SAARC Festivals of Literature, a SAARC Folklore Festival, a SAARC Food Festival and a SAARC Fashion Show.

A word about physical connectivity. I am glad that physical connectivity will be strengthened based on the recommendations of the SAARC Transport Ministers Meeting, which include (i) identifying three road corridors from SAARC member states through Pakistan to Afghanistan via the Attari-Wagah border; (ii) early commencement of Colombo-Cochin sea link; (iii) running of a demonstration container train from Pakistan to Bangladesh through India and Nepal; (iv) early commencement of direct air linkage between New Delhi and Male; and (v) establishment of an Expert Group to finalise Motor Vehicles and Railway Agreements.

As a mark of our commitment to regional integration, we have initiated regional projects in Telemedicine, Tele-Education, Solar Rural Electrification, Seed Testing Laboratories and Rainwater Harvesting that are progressing well.

Ladies and gentlemen,

No discussion on SAARC can be complete without touching upon the underlying factors affecting the overall political situation in our region. Given the shared history and common cultural, linguistic and ethnic ties, we see cooperation in South Asia as essential to the region's overall stability and prosperity. However, our engagement in general and within SAARC in particular, falls far short when compared to the success achieved in other regions, such as ASEAN. Whereas prospects for cooperation are bright, a realistic assessment indicates that these prospects have, to an extent, become captive to the security situation. Issues such as cross border terrorism and incidents of anti-India activities from territories of our neighbouring countries have impacted on the process of regional economic engagement, connectivity and people-to-people contacts. While this is unfortunate, the fact remains that the state of overall political relations influences other processes, including economic and trade relations and the development of SAARC as an instrument of regional growth.

In conclusion, let me say that very often in history, nations and governments have followed the path first taken by entrepreneurs, businessmen and daring individuals, who have set out a course in difficult, and sometimes uncharted, waters. I do not wish to recount here the numerous such examples that exist in international affairs. While the government is committed to the process of building deeper regional integration, South Asia is also looking towards its entrepreneurs and businessmen, to play a leading role in promoting economic cooperation and help build a climate of mutual trust and confidence. The need of the hour for South Asia is to move beyond security issues that shackle it, into an era of mutual trust and mutually reinforcing growth and development. United, the South Asian countries can swim and smoothly tide over obstacles like the global financial crisis. Divided, we may well remain boxed in, holding our future hostage to hostile mindsets. On this occasion of the SAARC Economic Integration Conference, I urge you all to dedicate yourself to the pursuit of greater flow of trade, investment, knowledge and skills, that would lead to a qualitative enhancement in the well being of the South Asian peoples. Let me assure you that the Government of India stands ready to assist you in every way in this noble endeavour.

I keenly look forward to a substantive outcome from this Conference, for use of our leaders at the next SAARC Summit.

Thank you.

AFGHANISTAN*260. Joint Statement issued on the occasion of the visit of the Afghan President Hamid Karzai.*New Delhi, January 12, 2009.

At the invitation Dr. Manmohan Singh, Prime Minister of the Republic of India, His Excellency Mr. Hamid Karzai, President of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan, is currently on a working visit to India.

2. President Karzai's visit to India is symbolic, to express Afghanistan's solidarity with the Government and people of India in the wake of the Mumbai terrorist attack. The deplorable incident shows that terrorism is a threat to the entire humanity.

3. The leaders called for the full compliance with bilateral, multilateral and international obligations of States to prevent terrorism in any manner originating from territories under their control since terrorism emanates from the sanctuaries and training camps and the sustenance and support received by the terrorist groups.

4. While reviewing their robust, strategic partnership, the two leaders expressed satisfaction at the progress in bilateral development and reconstruction projects in all parts of Afghanistan.

5. Prime Minister Dr. Singh conveyed to President Karzai that, following the completion of the road from Zaranj to Delaram in South-western Afghanistan, a second major infrastructure project, the Pul-e-Khumri to Kabul transmission line and the sub-station at Chimtala in Northern Afghanistan, will be handed over shortly to the Government of Afghanistan. The leaders expressed their satisfaction that the construction of the Afghan Parliament, a symbol of the common commitment of both countries to pluralism and democracy, has also begun.

6. Prime Minister Dr. Singh further conveyed that in order to help the fraternal people of Afghanistan in tiding over their current food crisis, India will gift Afghanistan 250,000 metric tonnes of wheat. The shipment will be effected immediately, as soon as the Government of Afghanistan has worked out its transportation arrangements.

7. President Karzai invited Prime Minister Dr. Singh for a State Visit to Afghanistan. The invitation was accepted with pleasure. The dates will be finalised through diplomatic channels.

8. The two leaders reaffirmed the special relationship between India and Afghanistan, to build a strong, united, and prosperous Afghanistan and to work towards peace, stability and development of the entire region.

261. Joint Statement on the visit of External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee to Afghanistan.*Kabul, January 22, 2009.

1. At the invitation of the Foreign Minister of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan Dr. Rangin Dadfar Spanta, Mr. Pranab Mukherjee, External Affairs Minister (EAM), Republic of India, visited Afghanistan on 21-22 Jan. 09.
2. During the visit, EAM called on H.E. Hamid Karzai, President of Afghanistan, and held discussions with Foreign Minister Dr. Spanta on a range of bilateral, regional and global issues of mutual interest.
3. The two Ministers underlined their strategic partnership, based on abiding historical and cultural ties, expressed their satisfaction on the progress of bilateral development and reconstruction projects, and reviewed the status of future programmes.
4. Today, President Karzai and EAM jointly inaugurated the 218 Km landmark Zaranj - Delaram road project* in the south-western Afghanistan connecting the capital of Nimroz Province to the Herat-Kandahar highway. This road, together with 60 kilometres of inner-city roads in Zaranj and Gurguri, was recently completed by India at a cost of US $150 million. The project symbolises India's strong commitment towards the development of Afghanistan.
5. India will also shortly be completing the Pul-e-Khumri to Kabul transmission line and sub-station at Chimtala. In this connection, on the request of the Government of Afghanistan, India will also construct an additional sub-station at Charikar for which the design and tendering work has been done and final award is awaited.
6. The two Foreign Ministers also jointly launched the restoration of Stor Palace within the precincts of the Afghan Ministry of Foreign Affairs in collaboration with the Aga Khan Trust for Culture.
7. Both sides reaffirmed their strong commitment to combat terrorism and reiterated that all countries should comply with their multilateral and international obligations and should fully control terrorist activities emanating from the sanctuaries and camps located within their territory.

* Built at a cost of Rs.600 crore, the 215-km long highway, was handed over to the Afghan authorities by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee in the presence of Afghan President Hamid Karzai and Foreign Minister Rangin Dadfar Spanta. "The completion of the road reflects the determination of both India and Afghanistan that nothing can prevent or hinder collaboration between the two countries," Mr. Mukherjee said at a function to mark the handover of the highway. Mr. Karzai said the completion of the project, which opened a shorter alternative route connecting Kabul to Iran, was a message to those who want to stop cooperation between India and Afghanistan. "Our cooperation will not stop," he said. The highway provides India easy and alternate access for its goods to Afghanistan via Iran. This is significant because Pakistan has been denying transit facility to India for Afghanistan through its territory. The Taliban was opposed to this project and launched frequent attacks on the construction workers. A total of six Indians, including a Border Roads Organisation driver and four ITBP soldiers, and 129 Afghans were killed in the attacks. Paying homage to those who made the "supreme sacrifice" during the construction of the highway, Mr. Mukherjee said, "I do believe that their blood was not shed in vain. Their sacrifice will fortify the foundation of India-Afghanistan friendship and that spirit will motivate us to usher in our future cooperation." The project would further regional cooperation by encouraging new trade and transit through Iranian ports and a supplementary access of Afghanistan to the sea. Besides the highway, Mr. Mukherjee said, India constructed 58 km of inner city roads in Afghanistan. Compared to the cost of other roads built in Afghanistan, the total cost of the highway project was modest. The project was initially estimated to cost Rs. 740 crore but the Border Roads Organisation completed it in Rs 600 crore and six months ahead of schedule, general manager of the BRO project Brig. N R K Babu, said. The 339 engineers of the BRO completed the highway construction in three years. On attempts to disrupt construction of the road, Mr. Karzai said, "The attempts had failed due to the commitment to complete the project. This road means a great deal for Afghanistan." Due to construction of the black top road, the journey between Delaram and Zaranj will be reduced substantially from 12-14 hours to two hours.

268. Address by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the release of the publication India's Foreign Relations - 2008 Documents - edited by Avtar Singh Bhasin and dedicated to Venkateswara Rao, martyred in the bomb attack on the Indian Embassy in Kabul on July 7, 2008.

New Delhi, August 18, 2009.

Foreign Secretary Smt. Nirupama Rao,
Director General of Military Intelligence,
Smt. Malathi Rao,
Shri A.S. Bhasin,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

...It was indeed very thoughtful of Shri A.S. Bhasin to have dedicated his annual compilation of the Ministry's documents for 2008 to the memory of Late Shri Venkat Rao. Words cannot convey the sense of bereavement felt, not just by friends and colleagues, but innumerable others who were deeply affected by the shameful terrorist attack on 7 July 2008, in which our brave colleagues made the ultimate sacrifice in the service of the nation. That act, like all such acts of mindless violence, reminded us, yet again, of how the menace of terrorism has become all pervasive and non-discriminating. This function today is dedicated to the memory of our colleagues Shri VV Rao, Brig. RD Mehta, our colleagues from the ITBP Shri Ajay Pathania and Shri Roop Singh, and the others killed in the cowardly attack on our Embassy in Kabul on the day.

Words cannot make good the loss felt by the family members, but the best that we in the Foreign Service establishment can do is to ensure that their sacrifice does not go in vain. We are committed to fulfilling our pledges towards the reconstruction of Afghanistan and to cementing our traditional friendship with the Afghan people. Acts of terrorism will not deter us, but will only strengthen our resolve to counter and bring to book those responsible.

Last Saturday, on the morning of our Independence Day, there was a terror attack at the headquarters of the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF), 70 meters from the Indian Ambassador's Residence in Kabul. The shockwaves of the blast damaged most doors and windows of the Ambassador's Residence. Notwithstanding the explosion, our Embassy in Kabul went ahead with the Independence Day Flag Hoisting function and the reception. Independence Day was also duly observed by our Posts in Jalalabad and Kandahar despite the very difficult security environment. I would like to take this opportunity to compliment the personnel of the Indian Mission and Posts in Afghanistan for their courage and commitment.

India's struggle against the menace of terrorism has been going on for decades now, and records and archives of India's foreign policy documents will bear witness to our efforts to curb this menace. It is quite befitting that a publication which records India's foreign relations documents for posterity, be a medium for honouring the memory of those who laid their lives in the cause of furthering that foreign policy.

I would like to thank Shri A.S. Bhasin who has tirelessly been compiling and editing the Foreign Relations documents since 2002. The publication, as also his other works, are of much help to researchers and academics who wish to pursue research of India's foreign relations, and who frequently desire an authentic ready-reckoner for this vast field of study. I wish him success in his further endeavours.

I have great pleasure in releasing the book.

Thank you.

269. Statement by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna on elections in Afghanistan.

New Delhi, August 22, 2009.

The Afghan Presidential and Provincial Council elections held on August 20, 2009, were one of the largest democratic exercises in the history of Afghanistan*. As a long-standing friend of the Afghan people, and a fellow member of SAARC, it is gratifying to see the democratic process taking strong root in Afghanistan. Despite the complex security environment and threats from terrorist groups, candidates have campaigned fearlessly and new voters registered themselves in large numbers. As a fellow developing country and a democracy, we remain strongly supportive of the election process and democratic institutions of Afghanistan. We admire the courage and determination of the Afghan voters and all the candidates in participating in this process despite the intimidation and violence which the opponents of democracy have subjected them to. We are confident that the current elections will strengthen democracy and pluralism in Afghanistan.

* The second presidential election in Afghanistan under the present constitution of Afghanistan was held on August 20, 2009. The previous election in 2004 was won by President Hamid Karzai, who is running for re-election. Elections for provincial council were held the same day. It was officially announced in May 2009 that 15.6 million voters had registered to vote, roughly half of the country's population; 35 to 38 percent of registered voters were estimated to be women. The Taliban had called for a boycott of the election, describing it as a "program of the crusaders" and "this American process".

270. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the Elections in Afghanistan.

New Delhi, September 19, 2009.

India welcomed the successful holding of the Presidential and Provincial Council elections in Afghanistan on 20 August, 2009. Given our historical relationship and as a fellow developing democratic country, India appreciates the determination of the Afghan people who participated in the election process despite threats and attacks meant to disrupt the elections. In this spirit and as a friend of the Afghan people, we congratulate all the democratic forces in Afghanistan. It is heartening to note that the campaigns were conducted in a democratic spirit, that there were no incidents of violence resulting from any clash between supporters of the candidates, and that participation in the elections was broad based all over Afghanistan.

We admire that the elections were conducted by national institutions, unlike the previous elections in Afghanistan. This Afghan-led process would go a long way in strengthening the democracy in Afghanistan.

We welcome the announcement of the preliminary results of all the votes counted by IEC in which President Hamid Karzai has emerged as the leading candidate having secured 54.62%, followed by Dr. Abdullah Abdullah at 27.75%. We are now looking to the early and successful conclusion of the electoral process and finalisation of the results after the completion of the legal procedures.

India reaffirms its commitment to strengthen the strategic partnership between the two countries and for the reconstruction and development of a pluralistic and democratic Afghanistan.

271. Question Relevant to Afghanistan asked from Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao at the media briefing for the Prime Minister's visit to Pittsburg for the G-20 Summit.

New Delhi, September 19, 2009.

Question: Madam, what is your reaction or rather Government of India's response on Afghanistan elections?

Foreign Secretary: Thank you for that question on Afghanistan. We have welcomed, as you know, the successful holding of the Presidential and Provincial Council elections in Afghanistan on the 20th of August. As you also know, we have a historical relationship with Afghanistan which is a fellow developing, democratic country. We appreciate the determination of the Afghan people who participated in the election process despite the threats and attacks meant to disrupt the elections. Therefore, we congratulate all democratic forces in Afghanistan. We admire the fact that the elections were conducted by national institutions, unlike the previous elections in Afghanistan. So, it has been an Afghan-led process which will go a long way in strengthening democracy in Afghanistan. We also welcome the announcement of the preliminary results of all the votes counted, in which President Hamid Karzai has emerged as the leading candidate having secured I believe 54.62 per cent followed by Dr. Abdullah Abdullah at 27.75 per cent. So, we hope for an early and successful conclusion of the electoral process and the finalisation of the results after the completion of legal procedures. I wanted to reaffirm on behalf of the Government of India our commitment to strengthening our strategic partnership with Afghanistan and to reconstruction and development of a pluralistic and democratic Afghanistan.

272. Response of Official Spokesperson to a question on "EAM's interview to the Wall Street Journal and whether there is a change in India's policy towards Afghanistan and holding of a dialogue with Taliban".

New Delhi, September 24, 2009

"There is no change in India's policy towards Afghanistan*. EAM has been misquoted in his interview with the Wall Street Journal and he did not say that there should be a political settlement with the Taliban. Our policy is one of strengthening the Government of Afghanistan in achieving its social and developmental objectives by rebuilding of infrastructure, providing employment, health, education, etc. It is for the Government of Afghanistan to take the initiatives necessary so that all those who abjure violence and extremism and accept Afghanistan's Constitution and democratic set-up, join the political process. It is not our position that a political settlement be attempted with those who do not share these aims".

* The spokesperson was referring to the misperception caused by EAM's remarks as carried by the Wall Street Journal that "if there are internal differences within Afghanistan, the leaders of Afghanistan will sort it out by themselves."

273. Concluding address by Foreign Secretary at the International Seminar on Peace and Stability in Afghanistan: The Way Ahead at the United Services Institution.

New Delhi, October 7, 2009.

It is indeed a pleasure to be addressing this august gathering of eminent scholars and policy makers. I have followed with interest the discussions over the last two days on what must rank as one of the most critical issues facing the international community and particularly this region today. There is little doubt that success or failure in our endeavours to ensure peace, stability and development for Afghanistan has consequences that extend far beyond our own countries, or even our own generation; and there are few decisions as momentous as those the comity of nations needs to make as we recommit ourselves to assisting the people and Government of Afghanistan in realizing stability and development.

Our understanding of the way ahead in Afghanistan has benefited greatly from the perceptive insights of the many distinguished speakers. Discussions during this conference have been significant, for they have brought together in one forum not just reputed scholars and policy makers from the US, Europe and Russia, but also those from Iran and the Central Asian Republics. We have long believed that any discussion on how best to assist Afghanistan would be incomplete unless the voices of the friends of Afghanistan are heard, voices that have a vital stake in ensuring the stability and reconstruction of Afghanistan. The challenge from a resurgent Taliban and Al Qaeda is real, and it is one that threatens us all. When we speak of recommitting ourselves to helping Afghanistan defeat the forces that seek to destroy all that has been achieved since 2001, it is important to recognize that all of us have an abiding interest in the success of this endeavour. Even as interest, goals, strategies and world views may conceivably diverge on other issues, on Afghanistan there is today a convergence among those present here. We need to build on that commonality of interests and purpose, focusing on the larger picture so that we serve the cause of peace in the region.

India and Afghanistan share a strategic and development partnership based on historical, cultural and economic ties. We have an abiding interest in the stability of Afghanistan, in ensuring social and economic progress for its people, getting them on the track of self-sustained growth and thus enabling them to take their own decisions without outside interference. The binding factor in our relationship is that the interests of Afghanistan and India converge.

In our efforts towards stabilisation of Afghanistan, the focus has been on development. Our U.S. $1.2 billion assistance programme, modest from the standpoint of Afghan needs, is large for a non-traditional donor like India. Our assistance programmes are being implemented in close coordination with the Afghan government, and are spread all over Afghanistan. They straddle all the socio-economic sectors of development: humanitarian; infrastructure; small and quick-gestation social projects; and skills and capacity development. India is the sixth largest bilateral donor in Afghanistan.

The principal objective of this effort is to build indigenous Afghan capacities and institutions for an effective governance system that is able to deliver goods and services required by the Afghan people, who have suffered years of unremitting violence.

India has five medical missions providing treatment and free medicines to over 1,000 patients every day, most of whom are poor women and children. We continue to support the Indira Gandhi Centre for Child Health in Kabul and have, only last month, connected it through a telemedicine link with two super-speciality medical centres in India. The one million tonnes of food assistance pledged in 2002 is used for providing 100 grams of high-protein biscuits to two million of the six million Afghan school-going children, a third of whom are girls.

In the infrastructure sector, the former Minister for External Affairs and President Karzai jointly inaugurated the 218 Kms Zaranj-Delaram road in January this year. The Pul-e-Khumri to Kabul transmission line and the sub-station at Chimtala was inaugurated by President Karzai in May. This has lit up Kabul, which has round-the-clock electricity supply for the first time since 1992. We are currently engaged in the construction of the Salma Dam on the Hari Rud River in Herat and the Afghan Parliament building, a visible and evocative symbol of democracy, the construction of which is in full swing. Both projects should be completed by the end of 2011. We have simultaneously commissioned around 100 Small Development Projects, which are typically quick gestation, smaller-scale social sector projects in outlying and frontier provinces, conceived and executed by local authorities.

For capacity development, we are providing 675 scholarships each, annually, for undergraduate and graduate students in India, and for Afghan public servants to train in Indian public training institutions for upto 180 days in areas of their choice. These are the largest such programmes that India has for any other country and the largest among the skills and capacity development programmes offered to Afghanistan by its development partners.

We have ensured that our projects are dictated by the needs and priorities of the local population. As a long standing friend of the Afghan people, and one with deep civilisational and historical ties, India is gratified at the progress that has been made in Afghanistan in recent years. It is important for the international community to maintain its commitment to the people of Afghanistan. India remains fully committed to assisting our Afghan partners in the process of reconstruction, and economic and human resource development, as they build a prosperous, democratic and pluralistic Afghanistan.

The second presidential and provincial councils elections conducted by the Afghan Election Commission on 20 August this year are a landmark event in Afghanistan's evolution as a democracy. As a fellow developing democratic country, India appreciates the resoluteness and determination of the Afghan people who participated in the election process, notwithstanding threats and intimidation by the Taliban. India has congratulated all the democratic forces in Afghanistan for their participation in the electoral process. It is heartening that the campaigns were conducted in a democratic spirit, that there were no incidents of violence resulting from any clashes between supporters of the candidates, that participation in the elections was broad-based, and that voting was across ethnic lines. While President Karzai got votes from the northern provinces, Dr Abdullah Abdullah also received support in the southern and eastern areas. The elections were conducted by national institutions, unlike the previous elections in Afghanistan.

The post-election period provides a fresh opportunity for a renewed commitment by the international community towards rebuilding Afghanistan. We should have the result of the first round of election around 12th October. Soon after the inauguration of the new Government, irrespective of whether the final result is settled in the first round or in a run-off, the international community and the Afghan Government would require to come together to configure the contours of their partnership for the next five years.

Given the turbulence of the past eight years and the recent dramatic decline in security, there is need for an intensified focus on security, governance and development by the Afghan Government and here the international community should do what it can to assist. Failure in Afghanistan's stabilisation will entail a heavy cost for both the Afghan people and the world at large.

The past compacts, such as those reached in London in January 2006 and Paris in June 2008 placed the responsibility for institution building and governance mainly on the shoulders of the Afghan people and government, without adequately resourcing that effort and eliminating the growing threat from terrorist groups destabilising the country. This is the last opportunity for the country to extricate itself from its endemic entanglement with violence and under-development and settle on a track of stability and sustainable progress.

While the Afghan government should spell out its priorities, the international community should come forward to provide the resources for fulfilling them. The Afghan leadership has itself stressed the need for a strong and genuine effort to improve governance, remove corruption and focus on development, especially in agriculture, rural development and infrastructure, with a shift in focus from the central to the provincial and district levels. All stakeholders now agree on the need for greater Afghanisation of the development process. The Afghan National Security Forces (ANSF) should be enlarged and developed in a professional manner, at a much faster pace. ANSF should be provided appropriate resources, combat equipment, and training.

Given its geographic location, Afghanistan has an immense potential to develop as a hub of trade, energy and transport corridors, which would help the long-term sustainability of development efforts in Afghanistan. There is a need for greater regional cooperation and economic integration of the Afghan economy with South and Central Asia. The historical and cultural relationship of Afghanistan with the other South Asian countries makes it a natural member of SAARC, which it joined two years ago. As its westernmost country, Afghanistan is the key link for SAARC member States with Iran and Central Asia. This economic interdependence could catalyse peace and prosperity in the region at large and in Afghanistan in particular.

As for the process of reconciliation, the existing process under the National Commission for Peace for reintegrating individuals with the national mainstream must be both enlarged and accelerated. We support the Afghan Government's determination to integrate those willing to abjure violence and live and work within the parameters of the Afghan Constitution, which provides the framework for a pluralistic and democratic society. This should, of course, go hand-in-hand with the shutting down of support and sanctuaries provided to terrorist groups across the border.

There is a growing understanding that the increase in terrorist actions in Afghanistan is linked to the support and sanctuaries available in the contiguous areas. That explains the particularly high-level of violence in the border areas of Afghanistan. That is perhaps the reason why the U.S. Administration unveiled its new Af-Pak strategy on 27th March 2009. The enunciation of objectives in the strategy is clear. The challenge is now about how to put this strategy into effect, for which there is no quick-fix solution.

The international community should put effective pressure on Pakistan to implement its stated commitment to deal with terrorist groups within its territory, including the members of Al Qaeda, Taliban's Quetta Shura, Hizb-e-Islami, Lashkar-e-Toiba and other like-minded terrorist groups. Without this, the gains made over the past eight years will be compromised and it will become difficult to forestall the restoration of status-quo-ante, to a situation similar to what prevailed prior to 11 September 2001. The world has come to realize, at considerable cost, that terrorism cannot be compartmentalized, and any facile attempts to strike Faustian bargains with terrorists often result in such forces turning on the very powers that sustained them in the past. A sense of defeatism pervades certain sections of international opinion. This needs to be guarded against, because it runs the risk of encouraging insurgent groups, besides weakening the authority of the Central Government and its institutions.

What we believe Afghanistan needs is a long-term commitment, even while remaining mindful of the challenges. The Afghan people have displayed resilience and a survival instinct even against the greatest odds. We must do our utmost to support them. An eminent panellist in the inaugural session yesterday succinctly put forward the two choices confronting the international community - invest and endure or improve in order to exit. India has already made up its mind - invest and endure because we believe in the cause of peace, democracy and development in Afghanistan. We know that the friends of Afghanistan will do likewise.

In conclusion, I would like to congratulate the USI, for organizing this international seminar, and as well as all the speakers, participants and the audience, who have contributed to the success of your deliberations.

274. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao to Kabul following terrorist attack on Indian Embassy in Kabul. New Delhi, October 10, 2009.

Following the heinous terrorist attack targeting the Indian Embassy in Kabul, Foreign Secretary visited Afghanistan on October 9-10, 2009*. While inspecting the Chancery premises and its surrounding areas, she was able to make an on the spot assessment of the devastation caused by the blast. She met the officers and staff of the Embassy, including the members of the ITBP contingent, two of whom sustained shrapnel injuries, and complimented their bravery, resoluteness and dedication for working unflinchingly under such trying circumstances. She assured them that the Government will take all possible measures to ensure their safety, security and welfare.

Foreign Secretary also extended her heartfelt condolences to the families of those Afghan nationals who lost their lives in this cowardly attack, particularly to the families of the two Afghan security personnel who died during the attack and whose presence of mind and alertness prevented what could have been a far greater tragedy.

She expressed her deep concern and revulsion over the barbaric and cowardly attack that claimed so many innocent lives and was so clearly aimed against the people of India and the people of Afghanistan and their abiding friendship. "The attack was clearly the handiwork of those who are desperate to undermine Indo-Afghan friendship and do not believe in a strong, democratic and pluralistic Afghanistan", the Foreign Secretary said. She added that "The international community and indeed the people of Afghanistan face a clear and present danger from the perpetrators of such wanton acts of terrorism and their patrons residing across the border." While condemning the terrorist attack on the Indian embassy, it was emphasized by the Foreign Secretary, on behalf of the Government of India, that the scourge of terrorism must be resolutely opposed, resisted and overcome through undiluted commitment and effort by the international community.

During her visit, Foreign Secretary met President Hamid Karzai, Foreign Minister Dafdar Rangeen Spanta and National Security Advisor Zalmi Rassoul, who conveyed their deep sorrow over the attack on the Indian Embassy and assured her that the Government of Afghanistan would do all in its power to expeditiously investigate the dastardly attack and bring to justice the perpetrators and those behind this attack. They were unanimous in their view that the attack was carried out by elements from outside Afghanistan seeking to damage the excellent relations that exist between India and Afghanistan. Foreign Secretary reiterated India's unwavering commitment to pursuing our bilateral development partnership and assisting the people of Afghanistan in realizing a democratic, peaceful and prosperous Afghanistan.

* The visit of Foreign Secretary took place following the targeting of the Indian Embassy in Kabul by a suicide squad of the Taliban, who according to the Al Jazeera TV even claimed responsibility for the attack and identified the bomber as Khalid. It may be recalled that on July 7, 2008 there was a similar attack on the Embassy, in which 40 people including two senior diplomats—a military attaché and a Counsellor besides members of the Indo-Tibetan Police providing security to the Embassy premises and Afghan nationals were killed. The present suicide attack killed 17 people and injured another 80 including three Indo-Tibetan Border Police personnel outside the mission. According to experts the present explosion was more powerful than the blast of July 7, 2008. Indian ambassador Jayant Prasad said the "embassy was the target" but the suicide bomber failed to breach the security perimeter. Characterizing the attack on the Indian mission in Kabul as the handiwork of those desperate to undermine Indo-Afghan friendship, New Delhi said it offered financial and medical assistance to Afghan nationals injured in the terror strike. Mrs. Rao however, refrained from pointing fingers at Pakistan. "I think the investigation should be completed," Ms. Rao told journalists when asked if Pakistan was behind the attack. The Afghan authorities however, had apparently no doubt of the direction the attack came and indicated that the attack was planned from "across the border," indirectly referring to Pakistan. "Whoever is responsible for this attack is against peace, is against democracy, is against people of Afghanistan and against the people of India," Ms. Rao simply said. Refusing to be intimidated by such clumsy attacks Ms. Rao reiterated New Delhi's "unwavering commitment to pursue our bilateral development partnership and assist the people of Afghanistan in realising a democratic, peaceful and prosperous Afghanistan." The External Affairs Minister asked to comment on the developments in Kabul, reiterated in Bengaluru on October 10, India's "determination to continue its work of developing infrastructure there".

Prime Minister Manmohan Singh spoke to President Hamid Karzai on Friday and expressed condolences over the loss of lives of Afghan nationals.

Afghan Foreign Ministry spokesman Fakiri said the "brutal attack" was carried out by "enemies" of Indo-Afghan ties and their "bases are outside Afghanistan." Afghan President Hamid Karzai strongly condemning the blast said in a statement: "This heinous act of terror was an obvious attack on civilians and the perpetrators of this attack and those who planned it are vicious terrorists who kill innocent people for their malicious goals."

U.S. Ambassador to India Timothy J. Roemer condemned the attack and described it as "deeply troubling." In a statement, he said that on behalf of President Barack Obama, he extended to the people of India, America's support and its concern over the bombing.

The irony is that only a day earlier on October 7, Foreign Secretary Mrs. Rao at a Seminar in New Delhi prophetically warned of the "recent dramatic decline in security", and the "need for an intensified focus on security, governance and development by the Afghan Government" an effort in which "the international community should do what it can to assist" because she warned "failure in Afghanistan's stabilisation will entail a heavy cost for both the Afghan people and the world at large". Mrs. Rao was quite forthright in analyzing the reasons for the decline in the security scenarios and the source of turbulence, when she said: "the increase in terrorist actions in Afghanistan is linked to the support and sanctuaries available in the contiguous areas. That explains the particularly high-level of violence in the border areas of Afghanistan". She called upon the international community to put "effective pressure on Pakistan to implement its stated commitment to deal with terrorist groups within its territory, including the members of Al Qaeda, Taliban's Quetta Shura, Hizb-e-Islami, Lashkar-e-Toiba and other like-minded terrorist groups. Without this, the gains made over the past eight years will be compromised and it will become difficult to forestall the restoration of status-quo-ante, to a situation similar to what prevailed prior to 11 September 2001." Underlining Indian conviction that "terrorism cannot be compartmentalized" she warned that "any facile attempts to strike Faustian bargains with terrorists often result in such forces turning on the very powers that sustained them in the past." She had no qualms in pointing out the "sense of defeatism (that) pervades certain sections of international opinion" and the need to guard against this, "because it runs the risk of encouraging insurgent groups, besides weakening the authority of the Central Government and its institutions".

275. Response of Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs to a question on second round of Afghan Presidential Elections.

New Delhi, October 21, 2009.

"We have noted the announcement by the Independent Election Commission of Afghanistan that there would be a second round in the Presidential Election involving a run off between President Karzai and Dr. Abdullah Abdullah on November 07, 2009*. It is our hope that the election process will strengthen democracy in Afghanistan and will be conducted peacefully, in an atmosphere devoid of violence."

---

* The second round of runoff elections for the Presidential Office became necessary because of the findings of a U.N.-backed panel that there had been massive fraud on Mr. Karzai's behalf in the August 20 vote and that he failed to win the 50 per cent required to avoid a runoff. The former Foreign Minister, Abdullah Abdullah, who contested the election in opposition to Mr. Karzai too gave his consent to take part in the November 7 second round. He said he telephoned Mr. Karzai to thank him for agreeing to hold the second round.

276. Media Report of the Defence Minister ruling out deployment of Indian troops in Afghanistan.

New Delhi, October 28, 2009.

Responding to a media question on the Indian military involvement in Afghanistan, in the light of the recent Yudh Abhyas (war exercise) between Indian and the U.S armies at Babina using tanks and para-troopers, the Defence Minister A. K. Antony said: "I am categorically saying that there is no question of Indian military involvement in Afghanistan...not now, not in the future..." He said at a news conference after inaugurating a three-day Coast Guard Commanders Conference in New Delhi.

The speculation became all the more rife because of the response of the US Army Commander to a question 'whether the U. S. Army would like Indian troops helping it in Afghanistan', he had said the American troops would be comfortable to operate jointly with India anywhere, anytime.

(Mr. Antony however, added that the India was seriously concerned over the deteriorating situation in both Pakistan and Afghanistan and underscored that the defence forces were ever alert to meet any challenge to the security of the country.)

277. Government of India's Statement on the announcement of the reelection of Hamid Karzai as President of Afghanistan.

New Delhi, November 3, 2009.

We have noted the announcement by the Afghan Independent Election Commission on November 2, 2009 declaring President Hamid Karzai's reelection as President of Afghanistan*. We congratulate President Karzai and look forward to partnering Afghanistan as it continues the process of its stabilization, reconstruction and development. The international community needs to reiterate its long-term commitment to ensuring security and development in Afghanistan, and to stand steadfast against the challenge posed by the Al Qaeda and the Taliban, which threatens the stability of Afghanistan and that of the world as a whole. India on its part stands fully committed to assisting the Government and people of Afghanistan as they build a pluralistic, democratic and prosperous Afghanistan.

* In the second round of the presidential elections, President's Karzai elections was announced after the only other candidate withdrew from the contest.

279. Statement by India welcoming the arrival of Afghan apples in the Indian Market.*New Delhi, November 23, 2009.

The first shipment of Afghan apples for sale in the Indian market - branded the 'the Silk Road Harvest' - left Kabul for New Delhi by an Air India Flight on November 11, 2009. This very special consignment was seen off at a function at the airport by the Afghan Minister for Agriculture, India's Ambassador in Afghanistan and farmers from the provinces of Kandahar, Ghazni, Paktia and Wardak.

In the Indian market, Afghan farmers will be able to receive four times the current low price that they are receiving for their apple exports. USAID experts in the Afghan Ministry of Agriculture have assisted with technical advice and marketing linkages with supermarkets and fruit markets in Delhi. The Government of India facilitated the mandatory Pest Risk Analysis for Afghan apples and will assist Afghanistan in training Afghan experts in meeting the phyto-sanitary standards required.

India provides a large and growing market for Afghan agricultural products, several of which - including Kandahari Anars and Kagazi Badams - have excellent brand value in the Indian market. Regional trade and transit arrangements for the transport of Afghan agricultural produce to the Indian market would facilitate both the growth of regional trade and prosperity, as well as the process of stabilization of Afghanistan and its reemergence at the cross-roads between Central and South Asia.

The growth of the Afghan agriculture sector is a key part of the efforts of the Government of Afghanistan to accelerate the process of reconstruction and development, provide an alternate source of livelihood for its predominantly rural population and counter the pernicious influence of terrorism, extremism and the narcotics trade.

Cooperation with Afghanistan in the agricultural sector is a key part of India's commitment to assisting the Afghan people in building a democratic, pluralistic and prosperous Afghanistan. Indian projects in the sector include the Salma Dam in Herat province, a cold storage facility in Kandahar, numerous Small Development Projects including establishment of demonstration nurseries, bore wells, culverts, canals, water supply projects and small water reservoirs, discussions on Indian assistance in establishment of an agricultural and technological university in Kabul, training of Afghan experts and provision of scholarships for Afghan students to study in India, and provision of high-protein biscuits to Afghan schoolchildren under a WFP programme and are all examples of India's commitment to helping Afghanistan in this important area that is of immediate consequence for its people, and for the international efforts to bring back peace and stability to Afghanistan.

It is hoped that the Silk Road Harvest is merely the first step in a process of freer and easier movement of goods in the region, which would allow Afghanistan to overcome artificial constraints on the development of its agricultural sector, improve trade and transit facilities, and contribute to the peace and stability of our region and the prosperity of its people.

280. Response of Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs to a question on US President Obama's Speech on Af-Pak Policy.

New Delhi, December 3, 2009.

We have noted US President Obama's speech* at West Point on December 1, 2009 and the announcement that 30,000 additional US troops would be deployed in Afghanistan in the first part of 2010. We welcome the emphasis in the US strategy on the strengthening of the Government of Afghanistan and Afghan security forces. We also welcome President Obama's reiteration of the need to squarely tackle terrorism, and for Pakistan to ensure that terrorists do not enjoy safe havens on its territory. India believes that it is in the interest of the international community to impress upon Pakistan that it must use all its influence and resources to implement its commitments to dismantle the infrastructure of terrorism and to deny sanctuary to all terrorist groups who operate from its soil.

In our view, it is essential that the international community shows unwavering commitment in resolutely opposing, resisting and overcoming terrorism and those who nurture, sustain and give sanctuary to terrorists and extremist elements. It is also imperative that the international community shows sustained and long-term commitment to assisting the Government and people of Afghanistan.

India for its part has attempted to help Afghanistan in its reconstruction efforts as a means to bringing about stability in that country. Our assistance, now over US$ 1.3 billion, is spread across Afghanistan and spans almost the entire gamut of economic and social developmental activities. Despite daunting logistical and security challenges, two major GOI-funded infrastructure projects have been completed - construction of the 218 km road from Zaranj to Delaram in Nimroz province and the construction of the 220 KV Transmission Line from Pul-e-Khumri to Kabul together with the sub-station at Chimtala. Construction of Afghanistan's new Parliament building, a symbol of the common commitment of both countries to pluralism and democracy, is also progressing. India reiterates its determination to fulfil its commitment to the Afghan people and Government as they build a peaceful, democratic and pluralistic Afghanistan.

* The Spokesperson was reacting to the United States President Barack Obama speech made on December 1 that the US would pour 30,000 more troops into Afghanistan, to "seize the initiative" and to end the war but at the same time he announced that he would start a pullout of US forces by 2011.

280A. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the Telephonic conversation between External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna and British Foreign Secretary David Miliband.

New Delhi, December 22, 2009.

British Foreign Secretary David Miliband spoke with EAM on December 22, 2009 on telephone. The Ministers exchanged views on bilateral relations and regional and international issues of common concern. British Foreign Secretary reiterated an invitation for EAM to attend the Conference on Afghanistan scheduled to be held in London on January 28, 2010.

EAM underlined the importance of the international community reaffirming unambiguously its commitment to strengthening the Government of Afghanistan and continuing its support to the development and reconstruction of the country. He conveyed India's position that the international community must show unwavering commitment in resolutely opposing, resisting and overcoming terrorism and those who nurture, sustain and give sanctuary to terrorists and extremist elements. EAM reiterated India's determination to fulfill its commitments to the Afghan Government and people as they build a peaceful, democratic and pluralistic Afghanistan.

283. Statement by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee at the unveiling of Model of Core Shelters for Cyclone "Sidr" affected villages in Bangladesh.

Dhaka, February 9, 2009.

Hon'ble Minister,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

My last visit to Dhaka was in the aftermath of the devastating cyclone 'Sidr' in Bangladesh on November 15, 2007. During my visit I had visited some of the cyclone elected areas and vividly recall the devastating impact of the cyclone which caused severe loss of several lives, property and untold sufferings to the people of Bangladesh. I admire the people of Bangladesh for their courage, endurance and resilience with which they have reconstructed and rebuilt their lives after the devastating calamity.

2. Ladies and Gentlemen, as a close and friendly neighbour, India stands committed to assist Bangladesh in its hour of need. After the natural calamities in Bangladesh in recent years, India has readily provided aid and assistance including cash assistance of USD 10 million and food aid consisting of essential items including rice and milk powder, etc., worth nearly USD 40 million. The 5,00,000 MT of rice for which we had granted a waiver on ban of export has also been supplied to Bangladesh.

3. India is committed to rehabilitating 11 cyclone affected villages. I have the pleasure to unveil today the model of the 2800 core shelters which we would be constructing soon in these 11 cyclone 'Sidr' affected villages. The modalities for implementation of the project have been worked out in consultation with the Government of Bangladesh and work would on the project would start soon. The unit has been designed to utilize locally available material to the maximum extent possible and this project will also contribute to the socio-economic development of the region as we would be engaging the local people for executing the project.

4. I wish to express my gratitude to Dr Abdur Razzak , Minister of Food and Disaster Management for his presence today and hope this project will contribute to further strengthening relations between our two countries.

Thank You.

284. Address by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee at the ceremony of unveiling the Foundation Stone Plaque of 'Kalabhaban' for the Department of Theatre and Music, Dhaka University.

Dhaka, February 9, 2009.

His Excellency Mr. Nurul Islam Nahid, Hon'ble Minister for Higher Education

Vice-Chancellor Prof. Arefin Siddique

Distinguished Faculty members, students, guests

Ladies & Gentlemen

I am very happy to be here today at this prestigious and a leading educational institution of our region. This great institution has the distinction of giving this nation, great leaders who led its struggle for liberation. Intellectuals like Dr Muhammad Shahidullah and Prof. Abul Kashem from this University have led the Language Movement that sowed the seeds of liberation of Bangladesh.

2. India and Bangladesh share a common history, heritage and culture. Our multifaceted relationship encompasses every aspect of human life - commercial, intellectual, social, culture. It is therefore natural for people of both countries to aspire for greater connectivity and people to people contact. Last year on Pehali Besakh on April 14 both countries took a historic step by starting the Maitree Express train service between Dhaka and Kolkatta. Our relations have witnessed an upward swing in the recent past we, on our part, have tried to sustain this engagement by taking several important steps, including unilateral gestures to Bangladesh. These are designed to build trust and mutual confidence.

3. My visit to this eminent institution today is to extend India's support to the construction of Kalabhaban for the Department of Theatre and Music of the University. This is reflective of our commitment to strengthen the existing bonds of friendship, especially between the youth of our two countries, and our shared cultural values. Greater interaction particularly among the youth and the student community will contribute significantly in enhancing these bonds.

4. I would like to mention that with the aim to promote exchanges between students and teachers, India has taken the initiative, under the SAARC umbrella, to set up the South Asian University in New Delhi. It is our hope that this University will foster a sense of South Asian community by bringing together future generations of students in the common pursuit of quality education and to prepare them for the challenges of the new millennium that cut across borders such as terrorism, climate change and energy security.

5. I believe that economic development takes place in a given social and cultural environment. Therefore an appreciation of the cultural milieu is important in our development efforts. Our region enjoys rich cultural diversity. We have a responsibility to pass on our inherited culture in all its richness and variety to our future generations. Imagine a tomorrow where all these forms of vibrant dance and music are only remembered as past glory. We cannot allow such a situation to occur. Our efforts must create a favourable environment for the cultural traditions and practices to flourish. In our march towards progress and prosperity, our cultural heritage is a shared asset that should form another basis of connectivity between our two countries. Our support for Kalabhaban derives from the firm belief that we should encourage our youth to keep these skills and creativity alive and robust. We must ensure the survival of our traditional art, our dance forms and our music.

6. It gives me great pleasure to unveil the plaque of the foundation stone of Kalabhaban for the Department of Theatre and Music of the University of Dhaka. I am confident that construction of this Kalabhaban would provide opportunity to budding musicians, playwrights, dramatists, actors to realise their dream.

Thank You.

285. Joint Press Conference of External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee and Foreign Minister of Bangladesh Dr. Dipu Moni.

Dhaka, February 9, 2009.

Statement Foreign Minister of Bangladesh (FM): My friends from the media in Bangladesh and our friends from the Indian regional and international media - a very Good Afternoon to all of you.

I have the honour and privilege to be with you this afternoon, with the Honourable External Affairs Minister of India, Mr. Pranab Mukherjee. Mr. Mukherjee is a very old friend of Bangladesh and an outstanding statesman, whose contribution to Indian national politics and to the promotion of robust Indo-Bangladesh relationship needs no reiteration.

He has visited Bangladesh on many occasions in the past, but his present visit is taking place at an important juncture in Bangladesh's history. We have just had a landmark general election in Bangladesh which has seen a restoration of democracy in Bangladesh and election of the grand alliance under Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina.

Mr. Mukherjee has come not only to congratulate the people of Bangladesh but also he is carrying a special message from Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh for our Honourable Prime Minister.

This morning, Mr. Mukherjee, Dr. Hassan Mahmood and I had the opportunity to have comprehensive discussions on how India and Bangladesh - two close friendly countries, bound by common history, shared democratic values and a whole range of mutually reinforcing interests - can move forward to further enrich our relations. Our discussions covered entire range of our bilateral relations encompassing issues of common interest. We discussed practical ways in which we can add substantial contents to our already significant economic relations with specific focus on promoting two-way trade, reducing the trade gap between the two countries, trade-creating investments and a whole range of trade facilitation measures. Our discussions on connectivity-related issues were constructive where we shared our views on the matter with specific focus on our national interest.

We also had comprehensive discussions on the security-related matters including our common concern on the threat posed by anti-people activities of the fundamentalists and extremists. From the Bangladesh side, we shared our ideas of a South Asian Task Force that can be useful in promoting cooperation to complement independent national action of all the willing countries joining the Task Force. We also categorically assured Mr. Pranab Mukherjee that Bangladesh will not countenance any anti-Indian activities by elements inimical to the interest of India using Bangladesh's territory. Similarly, we have also sought India's cooperation against elements who are trying to harm Bangladesh.

The question of peaceful management of the Indo-Bangladesh borders, finalization of the demarcation of the land boundaries between our two countries and our maritime boundaries also featured in our discussions. Bangladesh also specially requested Mr. Mukherjee to extend India's full cooperation to revive, for a positive forward movement on the stagnating discussions between the two countries on the water-related issues. We discussed how these discussions could be carried forward with positive results.

We agreed that all the existing instruments at our disposal will be fully utilized with due sense of purpose and urgency to elevate the level of cooperation between our two countries to a new height. We are hopeful that the present visit of Mr. Pranab Mukherjee will open a new phase of coordination and cooperation between our two countries on a whole range of bilateral, regional and international issues.

We also took the opportunity provided by our discussions to convey to the people and the Government of India, the best wishes of the people and Government of Bangladesh.

Statement by External Affairs Minister of India (EAM): Honourable Minister, Representatives of Media, Ladies and Gentlemen

I am extremely delighted to be here today and take this opportunity to convey warm greetings and congratulations to the friendly people of Bangladesh on the successful conduct of free, fair and peaceful elections in Bangladesh. As a close and friendly neighbour India warmly welcomes the return to multiparty democratic politics in Bangladesh and looks forward to closely working with the newly elected government under the leadership of H.E. Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina to further strengthen the ties between both countries.

I have had very fruitful discussions with the Foreign Minister H.E. Dr. Dipu Moni and Home Minister H.E. Advocate Sahara Khatun on the entire gamut of our bilateral relations including issues related to security, border management, strengthening connectivity, promoting trade and investment and strengthening people-to-people contact between both countries.

Our relations have witnessed an upward swing in the recent past. We, on our part, have tried to sustain this engagement by taking several important steps, including unilateral gestures to Bangladesh. These are designed to build trust and mutual confidence. They include allowing Bangladesh to export eight million pieces of readymade garments to India duty-free, lifting the ban on FDI from Bangladesh, providing duty-free access to several items and pruning the sensitive list for promoting exports from Bangladesh to India. Needless to add, India, as a friendly neighbour, always remains committed to supporting the people and strengthening its relations with Bangladesh.

Today we have also signed two Agreements - one on bilateral trade and the other on bilateral investment promotion and protection. These would further strengthen the framework for trade and investment between both countries.

Ladies and Gentlemen, in a globalized world, it is important for both countries to enhance connectivity, linkages and boost our trade which would bring prosperity to the region. Last year on Pehali Besakh on April 14 both countries took a historic step by starting the Maitree Express train service between Dhaka and Kolkatta. Initiatives like these generate synergy and result in a mutually beneficial relationship. It is important to recognize the mutuality of our interest. Both countries are also undertaking several initiatives to improve the trade infrastructure, including Land Customs Stations, Road, Rail and riverine routes to help facilitate greater economic engagement. I call on the private sector of both countries to seize these opportunities.

Ladies and Gentlemen, India remains committed to support Bangladesh in its hour of need. We have readily provided Bangladesh aid and assistance to help it overcome the damage caused by some of the worst natural disasters in recent years. These included cash assistance of USD 10 million, supply of food aid consisting of essential items including rice and milk powder of a total value of nearly 40 million USD. In the aftermath of the cyclone in November 2007, India sent an emergency relief package of essential commodities, we have already delivered the 5 lakh tonnes of rice waiving ban on export.

Today I have unveiled the model of the 2800 core shelters which we would be constructing soon in the 11 cyclone 'Sidr' affected villages. Later this afternoon, I will unveil the Foundation Stone for the construction of Kalabhaban at the Dhaka University.

Ladies and Gentlemen, an area of concern for both countries is to combat the growing menace of extremism and terrorism in the region. Closer cooperation on security issues is the need of the hour. We should move to address such issues with the understanding that both our countries will benefit in the long run.

Thank you.

Questions and Answers:

On the question of the proposal for a Regional Task Force against Terrorism. [ Masood Karim (Jugantor, Bangladesh)]

External Affairs Minister (Mr. Mukherjee): So far as the concept of Regional Task Force to fight terrorism is concerned, certain regional and international mechanisms already exist. All of us are part of the United Nations Security Council Resolutions Committee of 1267 set up by the United Nations Security Council to ban the terrorist organizations when it is referred to and after the due investigations, there is a mechanism and this mechanism is used effectively from time to time. Of course, we discussed with my counterpart, Her Excellency the Foreign Minister of Bangladesh, about the concept of regional architecture. There is no conflict between the regional architecture and bilateral arrangements. What is more important is the sincerity to fight the menace of terrorism. It can be achieved if we have bilateral mechanism, if we have regional mechanism, if we have global mechanism. But, if there is inability, incapability or unwillingness to tackle with the problem of terrorism and to fight against terrorism as a global issue, then the problem comes. Architecture framework does not stand in the way of fighting against terrorism whether it is bilateral or multilateral.

Foreign Minister (Mr. Dipu Moni): Our Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina has proposed this Task Force to combat terrorism and we have discussed this with Hon'ble Foreign Minister of India, Mr. Pranab Mukherjee this morning and we will be discussing, we will have dialogues with our other regional neighbours, our neighbours and we will discuss the modalities of doing it and how best we cooperate in combating terrorism. All the countries have their national mechanisms. In addition to that since terrorism is a problem, which is not contained by any borders, so combating terrorism also needs cross-border regional cooperation to be effective. That is why this proposal has been made and we would be holding talks with our other neighbours to find out the best modalities on how to do it. Thank you.

On the question of Bangladesh not allowing extremism in its land and the bilateral aspect of security. [Jayanto Ghoshal (Ananda Bazar Patrika, India)]:

Foreign Minister: I would like to reiterate our Government's firm stand against anyone, whoever it is, from whichever country, having whatever links with anyone, to use our country or to harm anyone in the region or anywhere else. If we have concrete information, we will be vigilant about this and if we have information regarding this we will definitely act on this.

External Affairs Minister: We heard the statement of Her Excellency the Prime Minister when she made a firm commitment not to allow Bangladesh to be used by the countries or the forces inimical to India. During my discussion with Her Excellency the Foreign Minister and H.E. the Home Minister, we have been reassured of this commitment.

On the question of scheduling a meeting with the Leader of the Opposition [The News Today (Bangladesh)]

External Affairs Minister: There are two questions. First whether the visit to and interaction with the Leader of the Opposition is there or not. You know this schedule is fixed as per the mutual convenience of both sides. I wanted to have this meeting, but due to paucity of time because of short duration of my stay here, it could not materialize. I have to go back. Our Parliament session is going to start within couple of days. My Prime Minister is not fully recovered. My workload in the domestic sector is so heavy that except visit to Bangladesh, I had to cancel six foreign trips, which we had between 23 January - till date. All others are cancelled because of the domestic compulsions. But I kept Bangladesh and I reduced it from two days to one. That is the reason, there is no other reason.

On the question of Trade deficit, India's readiness to revoke the trade and non-tariff barriers and access of Indian market? [Mr. Shamim Ahm (United News of Bangladesh)]

External Affairs Minister: My answer regarding the trade imbalance. Of course, I am aware of the trade imbalance. And every time we discuss, we try explore the possibilities how this gap can be reduced, being former Foreign Trade Minister, I can tell you there is no mechanism through which bilateral trade between two countries in respect of each and every country, could be balanced. It is not possible. But it is possible to reduce the gap and to keep it within manageable limits. After my talk during my last visit, we have removed tariff barriers on number of issues. We have taken steps to reduce the non-tariff barriers on a number of items. This time, during my interaction with the Foreign Minister I have requested them to give me a list from which Bangladesh Government is interested so that we can further prune the negative list. We have already pruned the negative list. In this connection you may recall, unilaterally, we declared at the 14th SAARC Summit - India will allow large number of items without any duty from the least developed countries, including Bangladesh.

On the issue of border killing by BSF [Shamim Ahmed, UNB]

External Affairs Minister: We have discussed about Border Management. In border management the problems of exchange of fire, of course, is an important ingredient but there are other aspects and what we have discussed. This include the plan of action which was considered between the two border security forces Chiefs, the BSF and DG, BDR in the meeting that took place last time, to take it further and to work out a mechanism through which we can avoid the unpleasant and unnecessary action.

Foreign Minister: We believe that the terrorists don't have any borders, they don't have any religion, they don't have any nationality. They are terrorists. Whoever tries to use our territory to harm anyone we will put a stop to it. We will be vigilant. We are reassuring not just the honourable Foreign Minister of India but like to reassure all of us that we will be vigilant and we will not let anyone use our territories for any kind of terrorist activities.

On the issue of setting any trade targets for the two sides to achieve [Mr. Sagar Kulkarni (Press Trust of India)]

External Affairs Minister: We have the regular mechanism of the Joint Commission, which is being chaired by two Foreign Ministers. I have requested the Foreign Minister to fix the date of the meeting of the next meeting of the Joint Commission. We could not have the meeting of the Joint Commission for quite some time. These trade figures, trade targets have been fixed at the meeting of the Joint Commission. I have requested when the Joint Commission will be meeting, I think this time we will meet in Delhi, and we are also exploring the possibility of mutually convenient dates, there we will discuss these issues.

286. Response of Official Spokesperson of Ministry of External Affairs on the developments in Bangladesh.*New Delhi, February 26, 2009.

In response to a question on the developments* in Bangladesh, the Official Spokesman said that this was an internal matter for Bangladesh. We are confident that they will resolve the situation amicably. As regards our border (with Bangladesh), the area is safe and secure.

---

* The Spokesperson was referring to an armed rebellion by the Bangladesh Rifles (BDR) to seek better pay and break Army control. According to media reports the mutineers' representatives came out of the besieged headquarters for talks with Home Minister Sahara Khatun and other government leaders at a nearby hotel to end the impasse over their surrender. The mutinous BDR men earlier agreed to surrender their arms after a two-hour meeting with Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina at her official residence. The government also granted amnesty to the mutineers but asked them to surrender arms and get back to barracks. But the mutineers inside the sprawling headquarters compound began demanding through loudspeakers that the Army withdraw, otherwise, as they feared, the military could "finish them at any time." Despite Ms. Hasina's assurance to meet their demands, the men said they would not move from their position until the Army was withdrawn. They said they would not surrender their arms on the basis of a verbal assurance of the government. They demanded the Army cordon around the BDR headquarters be withdrawn immediately. The mutineers also demanded the matter be discussed in Parliament immediately. Media reports said the mutiny started at around 8 a.m. on February 25 when a meeting between officers and jawans to discuss the latter's demands was being held at Pilkhana, the headquarter of the BDR. At one stage, the jawans started indiscriminate firing, including mortar shells, taking full control of the headquarters.

287. Briefing by the Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs on the Letter from External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee to Prime Minister of Bangladesh Sheikh Hasina.

New Delhi, March 2, 2009.

EAM Mr. Pranab Mukherjee in his letter to H.E. Sheikh Hasina, Prime Minister of the People's Republic of Bangladesh, today, expressed great shock at the tragedy* that had unfolded over the last few days in Bangladesh. He conveyed deepest condolences of the Government and the people of India and his own behalf to the Government, the Bangladesh Army, and the families of those who had lost their near and dear ones.

EAM noted that such barbaric acts had no place in a civilized society. He unequivocally condemned the same, as also all efforts aimed at destabilising a democratically elected Government. He expressed solidarity with the Prime Minister of Bangladesh and her Government in this hour of difficulty.

EAM added that as a close and friendly neighbour of Bangladesh, India wished to see a democratic, stable and prosperous Bangladesh. India stood ready to extend whatever support and assistance that Bangladesh may require at this juncture.

* Mr. Mukherjee's letter referred to the BDR two-day mutiny by the personnel of the Bangladesh Rifles (BDR), in which the rebels killed some army officers on deputation with the border force. The mutiny was apparently triggered by the demand for better pay and allowances and working conditions by the jawans of the BDR. The mutineers returned to the barracks after surrendering that arms when assured of pardon by the Prime Minister herself. The number of officers/soldiers killed remained unspecified.

289. Information on infiltration from neighbouring countries given by the Minister of State in the Ministry of Home Affairs Mullappally Ramachandran in a written reply to a question in the Lok Sabha.

New Delhi, July 14, 2009.

The year-wise apprehensions of illegal Bangladeshi Nationals by the Border Guarding Forces on the Indo-Bangladesh Border (IBB) during the last three years and the current year are as under :

Year	No. of people apprehended
2006	5130
2007	4206
2008	2711
2008 upto June	984

As per available information, the infiltration has decreased.

Government has drawn action plan and has adopted a multi-pronged strategy for effective domination of international border including the following : Construction of border fencing, patrol roads and flood lighting along international borders, includes the Indo-Bangladesh border.

- (i) Round the clock surveillance of the borders by Border Guarding Forces (BSF in the case of IBB).
- (ii) For effective domination of international borders by the Border Guarding Forces, additional 509 Border Out Posts (BOPs) have been sanctioned along Indo-Bangladesh and Indo-Pak Borders.
- (iii) Introduction of modern surveillance equipments including night vision devices, etc. for effective border domination.
- (iv) Up-gradation of intelligence machinery.

In this connection a report appearing in the daily The Hindu on January 16, 2009 on the interim order of the Indian Supreme Court is relevant and is reproduced below:

"Alarmed at the infiltration the Supreme Court on January 15 directed the Union government to take immediate steps for issue of Multi-Purpose National Identity Cards

(MPNIC) to Indian citizens in Assam and other north-eastern States. The court also asked it to prepare a National Identity Register (NIR) to check the infiltration of Bangladeshis. A Bench of Chief Justice K.G. Balakrishnan and Justices P. Sathasivam and J.M. Panchal said the cards should be the basis for citizens to avail themselves of benefits such as ration card, school admission and inclusion of name in electoral rolls. The Bench gave this interim direction on a public interest litigation petition filed by O.P. Saxena, president, All India Lawyers Forum for Civil Liberties. He sought a direction to the authorities to deport about two crore Bangladeshi migrants staying in the country. The petitioner had highlighted the problem of migrants who had infiltrated into the country, which shares a border of over 4,000 km. with Bangladesh running across various States. The petitioner alleged that such large-scale influx was causing social and law and order problems. The Bench noted that the Union government, in its affidavit filed in 2006, stated that it proposed to issue the MPNIC to citizens in the border States and create an NIR to provide a credible identification system through e-governance. "This would be a difficult task to be accomplished by the Government of India, which can initiate steps in this direction so that the problem could be solved to a reasonable extent," the Bench said. Earlier, during arguments, the CJI orally told Additional Solicitor-General Amarendra Saran: "You [government] issue the MPNIC and insist on this for the citizens to avail [themselves of] all the facilities. You can start this at the village level. You create a situation whereby a person not in possession of this card is not in a position to avail facility and then he won't stay here. Now they [Bangladeshi migrants] get better facilities than normal Indian citizens. No country will allow that. If infiltrators enjoy all facilities it will be difficult to separate them."

The interim order referred to the Centre's affidavit on fencing of the India-Bangladesh border in two phases, the first one started in 1989 was in an advanced stage but still the work could not be completed. It directed the Government of India to take urgent steps to complete the fencing to prevent infiltration; for this purpose land acquisition must be completed expeditiously. On the petitioner's contention that sufficient tribunals had not been set up for proper identification of Bangladeshis, the Bench directed the Centre to set up adequate tribunals, which should dispose of the pending cases expeditiously. It ordered the Centre to file a status report in eight weeks on the steps taken to identify the illegal Bangladeshis, number of tribunals set up and cases disposed of. Senior counsel Vijay Hansaria, appearing for the petitioner, alleged that infiltration was on the increase and the migrants were getting ration cards, enlisting their names in the voter list and exercising their electoral right. He wanted adequate and time-bound arrangements to be made to ensure the return of the Bangladeshi nationals. Referring to the submission of senior counsel K.K. Venugopal, appearing for West Bengal, that a number of Bengali-speaking people identified as Bangladeshis were kept in camps as Bangladesh was refusing to take them back, the Bench asked the Centre to hold talks with the authorities concerned."

290. Extract relevant to Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh's meeting with Bangladesh Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina from the Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon on the conclusion of the NAM Summit.

Sharm el-Sheikh, July 15, 2009.

In the last meeting of the day Prime Minister met with Prime Minister of Bangladesh Sheikh Hasina. It was the Prime Minister's first meeting with her after her victory in the election in Bangladesh; and her first meeting with him after his victory in elections over here. They congratulated each other on the elections. It is a very close and intimate relationship. As you know, in any such relationship there will always be issues but no issues that we think we cannot solve through bilateral discussions with goodwill on both sides. So, we looked at which parts of the relationship we need to build. Prime Minister said that he hoped to continue widening, deepening, broadening the relationship in every sphere at a pace and speed which Bangladesh is comfortable with. One of the issues that were mentioned was naturally the use of Bangladeshi territory by Indian insurgent groups who use it. She assured the Prime Minister that this would not be allowed; and that action would be taken against such elements who try to use their territory.

There was also a discussion on various projects which are of interest to both sides. The Tipaimukh issue has been active in the last few weeks in the Bangladeshi media and I think some Bangladeshi political circles have been raising it. We have been talking to the Parliamentary Standing Committee on Water Resources in Bangladesh Parliament. We have invited them to send an all-party delegation to visit Tipaimukh and to actually see it, to see what is actually going on so that a lot of the exaggerated fears or claims about it would be set at rest; and that ultimately we might start looking at more creative solutions, at solutions where both sides develop an interest on how they run or operate these projects. That is because, as you know, Bangladesh for a considerable time has been speaking of upstream storage being the solution to their problems. They have been talking of upstream storage in Nepal in the past. But this also in effect would amount to upstream storage and power at a time when both Bangladesh and India need power desperately. So, we said we are ready to look at all kinds of creative solutions to see how we try and solve these problems.

Their Parliamentary Standing Committee on Water will be visiting on the 29th and 30th. We will go to the site and we will arrange to show them the site so that they see it themselves.

There was considerable discussion of the potential of railway projects, of other projects that both sides are interested in. So, we will be developing those over the next few months. But both sides are happy, I think, with the way the relationship is going. So, it was a very useful meeting. It has set out our agenda for our work in the next few months.

It also requested for removal of barriers to Indian investments and port restrictions for specific commodities.
- Both sides agreed to comprehensively address all outstanding land boundary issues.   - b. Agreement of transfer of sentenced persons,
  - c. Agreement on combatting international terrorism, organized crime and illegal drug trafficking.

BHUTAN*293. Remarks by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna on arrival at the Paro Airport.*Paro(Bhutan), June 18, 2009.

I am very happy to be here on my first visit abroad as the External Affairs Minister of India. We wish to reaffirm our close relations. I bring greetings and good wishes from the government and people of India for Bhutan.

India and Bhutan share uniquely warm and cordial relations. These are founded on close consultations, maturity, complete trust, mutual understanding, shared interests and mutually beneficial cooperation. They are an example of good-neighbourly relations.

I look forward to audiences with His Majesty the King of Bhutan and His Majesty the Fourth King. I also look forward to my meetings with Hon'ble Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of Bhutan to further strengthen our bilateral relations and economic cooperation.

We are privileged to be a close development partner of Bhutan for about half a century based on the Royal Government's priorities. We, therefore, rejoice in Bhutan's progress and prosperity.

While our multi-faceted cooperation covers a broad canvas, cooperation in the hydropower sector is a key element. Building on the successful execution of the three hydro projects - Chukkha, Kurichu and Tala - the Governments of the two countries have decided to add another 10,000 MW of hydropower capacity by 2020. This would substantially benefit both the countries.

We congratulate the Royal Government of Bhutan for the successful completion of the first year of the historic transition to Constitutional Democratic Monarchy. India has been privileged to share its experience with Bhutan through interaction between Parliamentarians of the two countries.

I am happy to flag off the first Druk Air flight from Paro to Bagdogra that would facilitate greater connectivity to promote trade and tourism between our countries. I also look forward to signing the MoU on Nehru-Wangchuck Scholarship that would provide an opportunity to meritorious and talented Bhutanese students to study in prestigious Indian Universities and Institutions.

I hope that my visit would further strengthen the bilateral links between the two countries.

Thank You.

294. Press interaction of Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon with media in Thimpu.*Thimpu, June 18, 2009.

Foreign Secretary (Shri Shivshankar Menon): Welcome ladies and gentlemen, I thought I would brief you about the events today during EAM's first ever visit abroad which he chose to make to Bhutan.

As you know, he arrived early this morning in a special aircraft. The first thing he did at Paro airport itself was to flag off the new flight to Bagdogra of Druk Air. EAM and Lyonpo Ugyen Tshering signed the boarding cards themselves for some of the passengers and saw the flight off.

Soon after coming here, the Minister had an audience with His Majesty the King. His Majesty was gracious enough also to offer lunch at Dechhencholing Palace. Thereafter, he met the with the Fourth King, the previous Druk Gyalpo, at India House, which was an informal meeting, and then went to the Secretariat where he had a meeting with Lyonchhen Prime Minister Jigmi Thinley. Later in the evening there will be a banquet by the Prime Minister in the Royal Banquet Hall at 7.45 pm.

In all these conversations it was evident that the depth, the warmth and the meeting of minds that characterize India-Bhutan relations were stronger and deeper than ever. This was an occasion for the Minister to show his commitment to this relationship by coming here first, by making this the first of all of his foreign visits as Minister. It was also an occasion for him to learn about the relationship, to talk about the details. The Dechhencholing especially described the nature of the relationship to him in very warm terms, so did the King, so did the former King. In fact, the word they used was to say that we have excellent relations. In all cases, everybody - the Minister, everyone he met - said that they saw India and Bhutan's future as being interlinked. They naturally discussed the nature of that relationship, of how it has evolved, of how India looks forward to working with Bhutan to bring about development and prosperity.

Politically, as you know, the last year has been a very active year within Bhutan and in India-Bhutan relations, as Bhutan has made the transition to democracy, as they have had their elections, and then the Coronation that took place in November. Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh visited Bhutan in May last year. He addressed the National Assembly. Thereafter, for the Coronation, our President herself was here, and so were Mrs. Sonia Gandhi and her family as well as EAM. There has been a series of high-level visits from Bhutan to India that took place last year. Prime Minister Thinley visited India last year. If you look at, it has been a very active period it in terms of visits, in terms of political exchanges.

In terms of work on the ground as well we have set ourselves a very ambitious target of at least 10,000 MW of electricity being generated in Bhutan through India-Bhutan cooperation by 2020. We are on track. We have a programme which actually plans for more than 10,000 MW. We have an Empowered Joint Group which is headed by very senior people on both sides to make sure that this is actually gets done. They have met once. We have signed an MoU. We have done all the agreements. We will meet again very soon within a month so that we can actually see the implementation on the ground.

The Minister was also briefed about the progress in Bhutan itself by the Prime Minister. He expressed gratification to hear how the various issues in, what he called at one stage, the 'Kingdom of Happiness' are being dealt with and how smoothly the democratic transition is taking place.

It is important to note that ours is not just any relationship, but one which probably does not have another similar relationship anywhere in the world. This is also a relationship which is absolutely trouble-free. It is a relationship in which we are joined by what we both want to do together, what we have achieved in the past - which is also quite a great deal - and by what we want to do together.

As we were coming back in the car the Minister was telling me that it has really been a wonderful visit, that it reinforces his conviction for the future of the relationship.

I will be happy to take questions, if any.

Question: Sir, what were the other issues that figured in the meeting between the PM and the EAM?

Foreign Secretary: There was a fair amount of detail from the PM about how development is going on. Then there was a discussion also on complementarity between the economies. For instance, NASSCOM has been here recently; NIIT is starting a big project here. They took a road show with their Communications Minister to India which was successful in signing contracts. So, there are Indian IT companies looking at setting up centers and so on here. Recently the Indian Chamber of Commerce from Kolkata was here. They also have some ideas. Many of them are useful ideas because they actually take development down to the grassroots. They were talking, for instance, of organic-farming, of producing organic fertilizers. This is a niche which is now increasingly important in the world. There was some discussion, for instance, with His Majesty the King about the environment, and all that Bhutan has done is quite remarkable. I myself can see the difference in Thimpu from when I first came here almost thirty years ago. You can see the greening that has been undertaken. There was discussion on new and renewable energy, solar, wind, the effects of Aila, etc. But this is a discussion between friends who have the same interests, who want to do things together. It is an easy sort of discussion. I can go through a long list like this.

Question: Were any regional issues discussed in the meeting?

Foreign Secretary: Not really. SAARC Summit was discussed briefly because Bhutan will host the next SAARC Summit next spring. We were talking about how that would be done and what ideas Bhutan has. There are still about ten months. It will be in the next March actually.

Question: (inaudible)

Foreign Secretary: SAARC is the real issue of the discussion. Otherwise, there was this general review of what is happening in the region. But, as I said, it was between two ...

Question: Can you tell us a bit more about your discussions with King IV ...

Foreign Secretary: Today's relationship we owe in great part to what he has done and what he did right through to nurture the relationship, to bring it to this stage where we are so comfortable, so easy in working with. Some of it was for the future - what sort of things he thinks we might be doing or we should be doing. We discussed that. There again, I think he has a sort of vision, a long-term vision, for Bhutan and for India. Primarily, as he always says, I think he likes to say that whatever he does, he does for Bhutan's interest, for the country's interest. But he does not see a difference between the two. He feels also that our futures are interlinked. So, he has a long-term strategic sense of the relationship which is always useful and refreshing and for me educative to listen into.

Question: I will come back to the regional issues. Was there any particular country which was discussed when you were talking about a general review of the regional issues?

Foreign Secretary: ... Nepal, for instance. The situation in Nepal, -- (inaudible)

Thank you

295. Speech by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the Banquet in his honour during his visit to Bhutan.

Thimpu, June 18, 2009.

Your Excellency Lyonchhen Jigmi Thinley

Honorable Prime Minister of Bhutan,

Excellencies,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am deeply touched by your warm welcome and kind hospitality. I am delighted that my first visit abroad as External Affairs Minister is to Bhutan, our closest friend and neighbor. India-Bhutan relations are an example of good neighbourliness. The Bhutanese people enjoy a very special place in the minds and hearts of all Indians. My visit, therefore, is to reaffirm the deep emotional bonds of friendship between our two countries that have few parallels in the world.

Excellency, our relationship is 'special' because it is historic and time tested. It is 'special' because it is founded on extraordinary goodwill and absolute trust. And it is 'special' because it is based on a genuine concern for each other's interests and welfare.

Since the historic day of 21st September 1958, when Prime Minister Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru came to Bhutan, traveling across the Himalayas on foot and on horseback, both countries have worked assiduously to give our special relationship a boost to develop in a multifaceted way. The substance of our bilateral ties are manifested in the ever widening canvass of our interaction covering a broad spectrum, such as, power, transport, communications, infrastructure, education, IT, industry, medicine and agriculture.

Mr. Prime Minister, the principle of mutual benefit guides our relationship. The most outstanding example of this is our collaboration in the hydel-power sector. The beginning was modest. But success gave us confidence. We have now embarked on the exciting journey to fulfill Prime Minister, Dr. Manmohan Singh's visions of generating 10,000 MW of hydel power for export to India by 2020. This, when realized, will benefit both countries enormously.

As you are aware, Excellency, India has just had its general election. As the world's largest democracy, we consider it our sacred duty to work even more closely with Bhutan, the world's youngest democracy. I take this opportunity to assure you that India will stand with Bhutan in the fulfillment of its democratic aspirations. Democracy has come to Bhutan in the most unique circumstances. I wish to put on record my sincerest tribute to the vision and foresight of Fourth Druk Gyalpo, His Majesty Jigme Singye Wangchuck, and the King, His Majesty Jigme Khesar Namgyel Wangchuck, whose personal examples of leadership, sagacity, and statesmanship will forever remain an inspiration not only for Bhutan but also to the world.

Mr. Prime Minister, Bhutan is going through a historic phase of transition. India celebrated with Bhutan the 100th anniversary of the Wangchuck dynasty, the Coronation of His Majesty the King, the first elections and the adoption of the new Constitution in 2008. We rejoice in the success of Bhutan. We celebrate its increasing prosperity. We admire its unique notion of Gross National Happiness. We respect its deep commitment to the preservation of its environment. We applaud its endeavours for the preservation of its glorious culture and heritage. We salute this beautiful kingdom which is the youngest democracy in the world and has the youngest King at its helm.

In the years ahead, both our countries will need to work together even more closely in deepening and widening the canvass of our bilateral engagement. India will fulfill its commitments under Bhutan's 10th Five Year Plan, and for the fruition of many other projects where we are working together, including new and emerging areas such as IT. In Bhutan's march to peace, progress and prosperity, India will be your reliable companion.

May I take this opportunity, Mr. Prime Minister, to once again thank you for the very warm and cordial hospitality extended to me and members of my delegation. We greatly value your commitment to the strengthening of Indo-Bhutan relations. We know the great experience and wisdom you bring to your new responsibilities. I am confident that, under your guidance, Indo-Bhutan relations will grow from strength to strength.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen, may I request you to join me in raising a toast to:

- The good health and well being of His Majesty Jigme Khesar Namgyel Wangchuck, the King of Bhutan;
- To the progress and prosperity of the friendly people of Bhutan; and
- To the everlasting friendship between India and Bhutan.

Namaste and Tashi Delek

296. Remarks by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna on the occasion of the signing of Memorandum of Understanding on Nehru-Wangchuck Scholarships.

Thampu, June 19, 2009.

Foreign Minister Lyonpo Ugyen Tshering,

Excellencies,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

India's first Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru made a historic visit to Bhutan in September 1958. He came to this beautiful country trekking and traveling on horseback across the Himalayas. In Bhutan he received a very warm and memorable welcome by His Majesty the late Third Druk Gyalpo, Jigme Dorji Wangchuck.

Following this historic meeting, India and Bhutan have forged a special relationship noted for its warmth, trust and understanding, and a genuine concern for each other's well-being. It is fitting, therefore, that on my first visit abroad as the External Affairs Minister of India, I have come to Bhutan, and during my visit we have signed a Memorandum of Understanding that recalls the indelible legacy of Jawaharlal Nehru and the legendary role of the Wangchuck dynasty.

The Nehru-Wangchuck scholarship will be available to talented and meritorious Bhutanese nationals for undertaking studies in prestigious universities and institutions for courses leading to graduate and postgraduate degrees or diplomas, with priorities accorded to postgraduate professional studies.

I am confident that the Nehru-Wangchuck scholarships will further cement the already exceptionally close ties between our two countries and will, in particular, provide new opportunities to the talented youth of Bhutan.

I have had the most rewarding and pleasant stay in Bhutan. I had audiences with His Majesty the King of Bhutan and His Majesty the Fourth King. I called on the Prime Minister of Bhutan and met my friend Foreign Minister Ugyen Tshering. All the discussions were most friendly and covered various aspects of our close relationship and how to take it forward.

Before I conclude, I must say that Bhutan's natural beauty is captivating, the affection and graciousness of its people touching. I carry back very cherished memories of the warm hospitality accorded to me and my delegation during my visit.

Thank you.

298. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on the visit of the King of Bhutan.

New Delhi, December 21, 2009.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good afternoon to all of you. First of all, thanks for your patience. We had to slightly adjust the timing of the briefing. I appreciate your understanding. Let me accord a very special welcome to our media friends from Bhutan. We are absolutely delighted that you could join us today. I am also joined by my good friend and colleague Mr. Satish Mehta who is our Joint Secretary (North).

You are aware that on the invitation of the President of India, the Fifth King of Bhutan His Majesty Jigme Khesar Namgyel Wangchuck is paying a state visit to India, from 21st to the 26th. His Majesty arrived today morning. This is his first visit to a foreign country since his formal coronation on the 6th of November 2008, as well as after Bhutan became a democratic Constitutional monarchy in July 2008. He had earlier visited India in February 2007 after becoming the Fifth King of Bhutan on 9th December 2006. Many of you would recall that our President had travelled to Bhutan from the 5th to the 8th of November 2008 to attend the formal coronation of His Majesty.

India and Bhutan have a unique, unparalleled and time-tested partnership for peace and friendship. The foundation of this relationship was laid during the visit of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Bhutan in 1958. The basic framework of India-Bhutan relationship is the Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation of the 1949, which was updated and made contemporary during the visit of the King of Bhutan in February 2007.

Over the past fifty years our relations have deepened. Both countries have been responsive to each other's interests and sensitivities. Our bilateral relationship is characterised by regular high-level exchanges and close multifaceted ties. Prime Minister had visited Bhutan in May 2008 when he inter alia dedicated the Tala hydroelectric project to the nation. Our External Affairs Minister paid his first visit after assumption of office, to Bhutan in June 2008. Bhutanese Prime Minister His Excellency Jigmi Y. Thinley visited India in June-July 2009. These are just to highlight a few important visits. As I said, we have had a number of regular high-level visits from both sides.

I would particularly like to note that India continues to be the largest trade and development partner of Bhutan. Over 90 per cent of Bhutan's trade is with India. Significantly, since 2006 Bhutan's exports to India have been more than Bhutan's imports from India primarily due to exports of energy from Bhutan to India. In 2008 India's exports to Bhutan were Rs. 1734 crore and imports were Rs. 2148 crore, which constituted over 99 per cent of Bhutan's total exports worldwide.

Our multifaceted cooperation covers sectors like hydro power, health, education, human resource development, media, information technology, telecom, etc. One of the key areas of cooperation has been water resources particularly in our assistance to Bhutan in harnessing their hydroelectric potential and generation of hydroelectric power.

Three major hydroelectric projects have already been commissioned with Government of India's assistance. These include the Chukha Project which is 336 MW; the Kurichhu Project which is 60 MW; the Tala Project which is 1020 MW. The fourth one Punatsangchhu, which is 1200 MW, is currently under construction.

As I mentioned, surplus power generated from Bhutan is made available to India. Significantly, during the visit of our Prime Minister to Bhutan in May 2008 we committed to develop 10,000 MW of hydro power in Bhutan by the year 2020. We are also assisting Bhutan in development of infrastructure and other sectors.

Sustained Indian assistance to Bhutan over the past fifty years has played an important role in the infrastructure and economic development of the country taking its per capita income to over 2000 dollars, which is amongst the highest in South Asia. Bhutan's planned developmental effort began in the early 1960s. I would just like to note that during the Tenth Five-Year Plan of Bhutan, which is from 2008 to 2013, India's direct assistance accounts for Rs. 3,400 crore. If you take all elements, it would be close to Rs. 10,000 crore.

The visit of His Majesty the King of Bhutan would provide another opportunity of high-level exchange of views between the two countries. The King is accompanied by a high-level delegation that includes the Minister for Foreign Affairs, the Minister for Economic Affairs, the Chairman of the Royal Privy Council and a number of other high-level dignitaries.

While in India, His Majesty would be meeting the President of India who would also be hosting a banquet in his honour. The Vice-President of India, the Prime Minister, Chairperson of UPA, the Finance Minister, the External Affairs Minister, the Home Minister, the Leader of Opposition, the National Security Advisor and Foreign Secretary would be calling on the King of Bhutan. There will be delegation-level talks with the Prime Minister. The discussions are expected to cover a whole range of issues of mutual interest, bilateral cooperation including cooperation in sectors like hydro power, IT, health, civil aviation as well as regional and international matters of common interest.

I would particularly like to draw your attention to the fact that the King would be visiting a photo exhibition titled "Bhutan - An Eye to History", profiling India-Bhutan relations at the National Gallery of Modern Art at 1130 hours day after tomorrow, the 23rd of December. I can see that most of you have already received the invitations. If you have not, kindly collect one and also see the Press Release that we have issued, copies of which we have also made available to you. I would like to extend a special invitation to you all to the Exhibition tomorrow. If you for some reason cannot come, do pass on your invitation to a media colleague and let us know so that we know whom to expect.

Friends, it is a very special exhibition and it documents the early photographic records of the Himalayan Kingdom of Bhutan and the close ties of friendship that exist between our two countries. The collection has a premiere showing the remarkable photographic work of the Fifth King His Majesty Jigme Khesar Namgyel Wangchuck as well as his father the Fourth King of Bhutan. Some of the photographs are quite rare which have never been displayed. So, it is a very special exhibition. As I said, we will be very happy to see you all present at the inauguration by His Majesty, which is at 1130 hours on the 23rd. The King would also deliver the Madhavrao Scindia Memorial Lecture at Nehru Auditorium, Teen Murti, at 1730 hours on the same day, the 23rd of December.

Several agreements and MoUs are proposed to be signed during the visit covering sectors like hydro power, health, civil aviation, information and communication technology, etc. The visit of His Majesty the King of Bhutan would contribute further to strengthening and expanding our bilateral relations. This is what I wanted to say by way of introduction. My colleague Mr. Satish Mehta and I will be very happy to take any questions that you may have on the visit of His Majesty the King or the relationship.

Question: Could you update us about the level of diplomatic and otherwise engagement of China in Bhutan because it is important from Indian perspective? And could Mr. Mehta give us an update on the Chinese level of preparedness, militarily as well as infrastructure-wise, at the Bhutan-Sikkim-Nepal tri-junction?

Official Spokesperson: All that I would like to say is that I have given you a perspective on India-Bhutan relations and that is what we would like to give you. Bhutan's relations with other countries are the prerogative of Bhutan.

Joint Secretary (North): I have nothing more to add.

Question: Will there be any possible discussions that may take between the NSA and the Chief of Army Staff? If so, what would they focus on?

Joint Secretary (North): We really cannot presuppose what would be discussed.

Official Spokesperson: As I have already mentioned, we have a very important relationship, given its sweep, content and dimensions, which I have already enumerated. During the visit, I have also indicated to you the high-level delegation that is accompanying His Majesty. I did mention that the range of discussions will be very broad both covering matters of bilateral interest, our multifaceted cooperation in different fields as also issues of regional and international importance. But, as my colleague said, what will be discussed in particular or specifically, obviously we cannot prejudge the specifics. We would, as and when possible, certainly give you a sense of the discussions.

Question: What are the MoUs that are going to be signed during His Majesty's visit?

Joint Secretary (North): Vishnu gave you a sense of the sectors that we propose to sign agreements on and those are the sectors that would be covered in the MoUs. But let them get signed tomorrow and then you will have all the details.

Official Spokesperson: If you want I can repeat. We are expecting a number of agreements and MoUs which would cover sectors like hydro power, health, civil aviation, information technology and so on.

Question: Can you give more details in terms of the hydro power projects?

Official Spokesperson: We will certainly be more than happy to give you all the details. I know your interest in hydro power and, therefore, I dwelled on it at length. I have already given you a sense of the importance that both countries attach to this sector, and how the projects have developed, what is on the anvil. I specifically mentioned that during the visit of the Prime Minister, it has already been agreed that by the year 2020 we would assist Bhutan to develop or harness up to 10,000 MW of generation capacity. So, certainly the hydroelectric sector is a very important sector.

Question: What is their requirement in terms of energy at this point of time? How much of that is being fulfilled by India?

Official Spokesperson: Bhutan is a country of about 700,000 people. So, whatever is their requirement certainly that is met first. Whatever is the surplus, which is substantial, is made available to us.

Question: All of it?

Official Spokesperson: Yes. That is again quite significant from our point of view. I did mention in particular that since 2006 and especially after the Tala Project was dedicated to the nation, the exports from Bhutan have exceeded imports by Bhutan and it is precisely because of the power sector.

Question: Could you please elaborate on cooperation so far as civil aviation is concerned? ...(Inaudible)... Apart from that, we do also have some problem related to the use of currency in the border areas because Bhutanese currency is being used in ...(Inaudible)... There have been some cases of fake currency also. Will this also be discussed?

Joint Secretary (North): Indian currency is acceptable in Bhutan as legal tender. So, that is not a problem insofar as I know of it. I am not particularly aware of Bhutanese currency being used in India. But in bordering areas it possibly happens. I am not aware of it. And I am not aware of any large scale use of fake currency also. We have not heard of that on the India-Bhutan trade side.

On the civil aviation, right now we have some flights from Bhutan. Druk Air has some flights. The idea is to expand the cooperation in this sector and the agreement is directed towards that.

Question: Is there any proposal also to connect Bhutan and India by a rail line?

Joint Secretary (North): As you know, there was an announcement during the visit of Prime Minister of India to Bhutan in May 2008 to have this railway line called Golden Jubilee Railway Line which would link Bhutan to India. In terms of announcement it is already there. Now we have to work on it. It takes time to put everything in place.

Question: We understand that a number of projects and agreements, as you have said, are going to be signed. Can you give us any figures in terms of how much any of these projects is worth?

Joint Secretary (North): I can only talk in terms of hydroelectric projects. The only one which is right now under construction is Punatsanchhu-I. All projects in which you work, you work in very difficult geologies and what you anticipate does not always happen. So, it is difficult to put a figure at this stage. When you make a DPR there is an estimate. But once you start moving forward, the geology turns out to be the way it turns out to be. So, to be able to pin down a figure would be difficult. The hydroelectric projects by definition are very large.

Question: Sir, many insurgent groups of Northeast take shelter in Bhutan. Is there a possibility of some talks on this important issue during this visit? (free translation from Hindi text)

Joint Secretary (North): We already have an extradition treaty with Bhutan. In 2003, if you remember, His Majesty the Fourth King of Bhutan, who was then the King of Bhutan, personally led an expedition against the terrorists in the Bhutanese side. India and Bhutan cooperate very closely on all issues including security. And as JS(XP) mentioned, Home Minister would be calling on His Majesty. As I said, it is not for me to prejudge what will be discussed.

Question: What is the total electricity production of Bhutan and how much of it is given to India?

Joint Secretary (North): There are two things in the total electricity production - one is installed capacity and second is the actual generation. Actual generation depends upon, in the case of hydro power, rainfall and how much of it is caught. So, it changes every year including this year. But it is substantial. Again, it depends upon how much they generate and how much they use. But out of what is generated, a very substantial part is exported to India as a general rule.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.

299. Briefing by the Official Spokesperson on bilateral talks between Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and the King of Bhutan.

New Delhi, December 22, 2009.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good evening to you all. I would like to give you a perspective on the bilateral talks today between the Prime Minister and His Majesty.

As you know, His Majesty Jigme Khesar Namgyel Wangchuck, the Fifth King of Bhutan is on a State visit to India from 21st to 26th December at the invitation of the President of India. Today he held one-on-one talks as well as delegation level talks with the Prime Minister of India. From our side, Prime Minister was assisted by our External Affairs Minister, Finance Minister, Home Minister, Power Minister, NSA, Principal Secretary to PM, Foreign Secretary, Ambassador of India to Bhutan and others. His Majesty the King was assisted by the Bhutanese Minister for Foreign Affairs, Minister for Economic Affairs, the Chairman of Royal Privy Council, the Foreign Secretary, the Bhutanese Ambassador to Delhi and others.

The discussions covered a wide range of subjects of mutual interest, bilateral cooperation as well as matters of regional and international interest. Prime Minister has described the visit of HM as 'historic' hailing Bhutan as "India's closest friend and neighbour". You would recall that this is the King's first visit to any foreign country after his formal coronation on the 6th of November 2008. Prime Minister also observed that India wants the democratic experiment in Bhutan to succeed and that we will provide all possible support.

Prime Minister emphasised the importance of people-to-people contacts and particularly spoke of the desirability of greater interaction between Parliamentarians. Hon'ble Speaker has accepted an invitation to lead a Parliamentary delegation to Bhutan next year. Prime Minister also assured that no stone would be left unturned to help Bhutan in realising its potential of creating generation capacity of 10,000 MW by the year 2020.

Let me get into some specifics because yesterday I found a lot of interest in the energy sector. As I mentioned yesterday, the Punasangchhu-I project which has an installed capacity of 1200 MW is already under construction. Implementation agreements on two other projects will be concluded by early next year. These are Punasangchhu-II which is again 1200 MW; and Mangdechhu which is also 1200 MW.

Another mega project Sankosh, which is 4,000 MW, is under discussion. Prime Minister conveyed to HM that the DPRs for all these three projects would be ready by the year 2011. You have just been given the list of the Agreements and MoUs that have been signed. So, you would notice that in addition to what I have mentioned, at Serial Nos. 9 to 12 there are four other MoUs which have been concluded to undertake DPRs for four hydroelectric projects.

Moving on, the Prime Minister complimented His Majesty's vision of 'Gross National Happiness' which he described as "ecological sanity". And he assured that India would do everything possible in helping Bhutan realise its vision. The two sides also exchanged notes on the SAARC Summit which would be held in Bhutan next year. Prime Minister said that India will work closely with Bhutan to make it a memorable event.

His Majesty the King of Bhutan, expressing happiness at the quality of our ties, the depth of our ties and said that he will always be protective of India-Bhutan friendship and would be mindful of India's interests.

As you can see from the paper that is with you, in all, 12 MoUs covering a wide range of areas were concluded. We have also attempted to give you a gist in Column 2 highlighting the significance of the MoUs. Let me particularly draw your attention to a couple of MoUs. One is at Serial No.4 on the IT sector. This is a MoU that has been concluded on the 'Total Solutions Project'. The additional details I am sharing with you are not there in the paper. The project involves an assistance of Rs. 205 crore over a five-year period from India. It would significantly help making nearly half of Bhutan's population e-literate. 7,000 government officials, 5,000 teachers, 1600 enterprises, and very significantly 200,000 rural children will benefit from the project with which an NIIT and others will be associated. Also, 168 IT-enabled schools will be established.

As significant is the MoU at Serial No.1 on the health sector where India has agreed to set up a 50-seat undergraduate medical school and hospital patterned on All India Institute of Medical Sciences. Some details are with you. You are aware that we have been lending assistance to our neighbours on the Small Development Projects. It has also been decided that Rs.700 crore would be earmarked during the Tenth Five-Year Plan for undertaking Small Development Projects in Bhutan, particularly in rural Bhutan, covering areas like sanitation, education, health, water, culverts, bridges or anything as per the wishes of the Royal Government of Bhutan. India has also committed to an assistance of Rs.25 crore for earthquake relief effort in Bhutan.

Let me point out that we have no divergences or outstanding issues with our neighbour. In sum, the discussions were excellent which is reflective of our warm and close ties. We regard His Majesty's visit as a milestone in reinforcing and further expanding the wide canvas of relations between India and Bhutan.

I will be happy to take a few questions, if you have any.

Question: Can you give a ...(Inaudible)... figure ...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: Yes, happily. I had mentioned yesterday that Bhutan's planned developmental effort had begun in the 1960s, and during their Tenth Plan which is from 2008 to 2013, almost 23 per cent of the plan outlay would be covered by direct Indian assistance which accounts for Rs.3400 crore. If you add other elements including payment for hydro power, refund of taxes, etc., it all adds up to something like Rs.10,000 crore. That is the broad framework of assistance. There have been some additional elements today which I enumerated, for example the Rs.25 crore for the earthquake relief. This is for the Tenth Five-Year Plan. But the generation capacity of 10,000 MW that I mentioned is over a period till 2020. Here, as the DPRs are finalised we will have a better sense of the expenditure involved and then we will discuss with the Royal Government of Bhutan what will be the quantum of our assistance and so on.

Question: I just wanted to check if the ICT project is a part of the planned Rs.10,000 crore or separate.

Official Spokesperson: That is correct.

Question: What kind of help will India be rendering for the SAARC Summit next year in Bhutan?

Official Spokesperson: As I said, there was an exchange of views on the SAARC Summit. The Prime Minister had conveyed that we will support Bhutanese effort to make it a memorable event. This is what the Prime Minister mentioned. We will be in touch with Royal Government of Bhutan to see what kind of facilitation or assistance they may require for the SAARC Summit.

Question: My question is related to the MoU at Serial No.6 for Cooperation in Search and Rescue. Will the Indian Air Force be involved in this if there is a need for search and rescue operations in Bhutan?

Official Spokesperson: In Column 2 we have already described the nature of the MoU. I do not have anything more to add to it at this stage.

Question: Any discussion on the North-East insurgent groups which have been ...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: Security and Defence cooperation was also discussed during the bilateral talks. As was mentioned yesterday by me and my colleague, we receive excellent cooperation from Government of Bhutan in respect of the Indian Insurgent Groups in southern Bhutan.

Question: ...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: The question was as to how much of power comes to India? My understanding is that currently Bhutan's total requirement does not exceed 400 MW. The installed capacity in Bhutan is around 1500 MW. After their needs are taken care of, the entire surplus comes to India.

Question: Will that power be distributed to different States in the country or in the North-East?

Official Spokesperson: That is a question best addressed to the Ministry of Power as to how they distribute it.

Question: You said 10,000 MW of installed capacity by 2020. Is it total installed capacity or additional?

Official Spokesperson: Total by 2020. As I mentioned, it is about 1500 MW right now. Punasangchhu which is under construction is 1200 MW. Then Punasangchhu-II and Mangdechhu are 1200 MW each, so that is another 2400 MW. Then Sankosh is 4,000 MW. And you have seen the other MoUs that have been concluded.

Question: ...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: At the moment what we have and what we could share I have already given to you. By and by we will share more details.

Thank you.

300. Speech by President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the banquet in honour of the King of Bhutan Jigme Khesar Namgyel Wangchuck.

New Delhi, December 22, 2009.

Your Majesty Jigme Khesar Namgyel Wangchuck, the King of Bhutan, Excellencies,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to welcome Your Majesty and the distinguished members of your delegation to India. This visit, the first abroad after your Coronation in November 2008, is a milestone in the special relationship between our two countries.

Your Majesty, I have the fondest memories of my visit to your beautiful country last year on the historic occasion of your Coronation. The warm hospitality and welcome accorded to me shall forever remain etched in my memory.

We consider Bhutan as our closest friend and neighbour. Our relationship is special because it is based on mutual respect, deep understanding and goodwill. Ever since the historic visit of Prime Minister Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru to your beautiful country in 1958, this relationship has grown exponentially and to mutual benefit. Today, it encompasses hydropower, transport, communications, infrastructure, education, IT, medicine and agriculture, to name just a few sectors. The agreements that have been signed, between our two countries today, are a testimony to the ever-expanding ambit of our bilateral engagement. Our working together successfully in the hydropower sector is an important example of mutually beneficial cooperation between our two countries. It gives us inspiration and confidence to achieve the target of 10,000 MW of new hydropower capacity by 2020.

In recent times, Bhutan has seen historic developments. We were witness last year to Your Majesty's Coronation; that was also the year when the first elections were held and a new Constitution adopted. We are confident that under your guidance, and your personal emphasis on harmony and constructive engagement, democracy in Bhutan will grow and flourish. I want to assure Your Majesty that any assistance that India can provide to the friendly people of Bhutan on this remarkable journey will always be forthcoming.

We in India rejoice at the success of Bhutan and its increasing prosperity.

We admire its unique paradigm of Gross National Happiness which seeks to balance economic growth with deep respect for the environment and the preservation of culture and heritage. India, and indeed the world, has much to learn from it.

Your Majesty, the future of Bhutan is safe in your hands. I say this because you embody the passion and commitment of youth with the wisdom and statesmanship that are intrinsic in your personality, and which have been handed down to you as a legacy by your forefathers, and in particular, by His Majesty the Fourth King, who we deeply respect. I recall, in this context, what you said to the people of your country during your Coronation Address, "Throughout my reign I will never rule you as a King. I will protect you as a parent, care for you as a brother and serve you as a son. I shall give you everything and keep nothing." I can only say that love and a sense of duty towards the people is very evident in the sentiments expressed in these words.

May I take this opportunity to wish you great success in the decades ahead. May your reign bring Bhutan unprecedented happiness and prosperity. May these years be for you, personally, one of fulfillment and happiness. I am confident that under your leadership India-Bhutan relations will grow on the strong foundations of the past, and will accomplish, in the fullest manner possible, the potential of the future.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen, may I request you to join me in raising a toast to:-

- the good health and well being of His Majesty Jigme Khesar Namgyel Wangchuck, the King of Bhutan;
- the progress and prosperity of the friendly people of Bhutan; and
- the everlasting friendship between India and Bhutan.

301. Joint Press Statement on the visit of the Bhutanese King Jigme Khesar Namgyel Wangchuck.

MALDIVES*303. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence on the visit of the Minister of Defence and National Security of Maldives Ameen Faisal.*New Delhi, February 4, 2009.

India and Maldives will work together to meet the threat of sea-borne terrorism. This emerged during a meeting between the Defence Minister Shri AK Antony and the visiting Minister of Defence and National Security of Maldives, Mr. Ameen Faisal in New Delhi on Tuesday, February 03, 2009. Mr. Faisal is leading an 8-member Maldivian delegation on a visit to India from 1-5 February, 2009.

Shri Antony assured the Maldivian leader of India's continued support to the island nation in meeting all its security and development* needs. He said that the strategic interests of India and Maldives are interlinked and that New Delhi was keen to strengthen and expand the defence relations between the two countries in the coming years. The two leaders agreed that we have a joint interest in the security of the sea lanes of communication. They also decided to enhance training and joint exercises.

The Indian Army conducts a joint exercise 'Ekueuvrin' with the Maldivian National Defence Forces on counter-terrorism. The Indian Coast Guard also conducts an exercise on maritime rescue operations and patrolling of seas around Maldives called 'Dosti'.

* It may be recalled that in January 2009 when the Maldivian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Ahmed Naseem visited India he had said that the new democratic government in the Maldives would look towards India for support and advice on economic and social development of Maldives. Speaking to Hindu in Chennai on February 4, he said that following the recent change in government, the Maldives was committed to creating a transparent economy. Decentralisation and privatisation were key priorities, he said, to tackle the huge debt that stood at nearly 54 per cent of the GDP. "We are seeking assistance from the Indian government on the know-how and technicalities [of decentralisation]. There are also a lot of government enterprises that are white elephants. Selling off shares of these companies to the private sector and foreign players, including utility companies, transport companies, fisheries [and others] is a priority area," he said. In its foreign policy, the Maldives recognised the importance of a regional approach to achieve growth, and was hence focusing on India and its South Asian neighbours, Mr. Naseem said. In his current visit, he had visited hospitals in Bangalore and Chennai along with the Deputy Minister for Health to look at partnerships to treat the drug abuse victims and treat the malaise in society. An agreement would be firmed up when the Minister for Health visited India later this month.

304. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence on the visit of Defence Minister A. K. Antony to Maldives.*Male, August 18, 2009.

India and Maldives today agreed on a series of measures to step up defence cooperation between the two countries. The decisions were taken at the back-to-back meetings that the Defence Minister Mr AK Antony had with the top leadership of Maldives including the President Mohammed Nasheed and the Defence Minister Mr. Ameen Faisal.

Later addressing a joint press conference with Mr Faisal, Mr Antony said 'the defence and security of both our countries are intertwined'. He said his visit is a reiteration of the existing robust relations that already exist between the two countries. Mr Antony said Maldives and India are 'good friends and equal partners' in this relationship. He said India will extend all assistance to Maldives based on the latter's requests. He said both countries face myriad security challenges especially from the sea and it would be New Delhi's efforts to help its neighbor in whichever way it can.

Replying to a question if his visit was driven by consideration of any third country, Mr Antony said 'I didn't come here to discuss about other countries' and said 'don't go by rumours'. He said the purpose of his visit was not to enter into any agreements but to expand our cooperation within the existing framework which is a robust one.

Speaking on the occasion, Mr Faisal said relationship between India and Maldives is not based on any 'self interest or undue influence'. He said the people of Maldives are indeed grateful to India for its 'unconditional and selfless assistance in most trying times'.

Mr Antony is leading a high level delegation comprising the Defence Secretary Shri Pradeep Kumar, DG Armed Forces Medical Services Lt Gen NK Parmar, DG Coast Guard Vice Admiral Anil Chopra and Deputy Chief of Navy Staff Vice Admiral DK Joshi.

Shortly after his arrival in Male', Mr Antony called on President Mohammed Nasheed. This was followed by wide ranging discussions held with Vice President Mohammed Waheed Hassan Manik, the Special Envoy to the President Mr Ibrahim Hussain Zaki, the Minister of Foreign Affairs Dr. Mohammed Shaheed, the Defence Minister Mr Ameen Faisal and the Minister for Home Affairs Mohammed Shihab. Mr Antony also inspected a guard of honour at the Maldives National Defence Force Headquarters.

This visit of Mr Antony to the Maldives was long due and is aimed at consolidating the long standing robust defence and security ties between the two Defence forces. It would also serve to strengthen the ongoing bilateral relations between our two friendly countries, which go back to at least two-and-a-half millennia. India, has always considered its relations with Maldives as very special. Our bilateral defence relations are based on trust and confidence that we have been able to build through several decades of hard work. Recognising the common security interests and maritime challenges faced by our two Indian Ocean nations, India has always come forward to share its experience, expertise and resources with Maldives in the spirit of friendship and brotherhood.

At discussions held at the Integrated Headquarters of the MNDF, the emerging security challenges in the region and the need to strengthen joint and collective mechanisms to mutually counter them were highlighted. The MNDF also expressed its concerns over the crucial tasks of safeguarding and protecting the vast Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ) of the Maldives, while expressing its need to develop and enhance maritime surveillance and aerial mobility capabilities.

In this context, the Indian Defence Minister reiterated Indian Government's continued support to assist the Maldives National Defence Force in their efforts to build capacity and enhance capability. He expressed confidence that the two defence forces would continue to work closely together to ensure a peaceful maritime environment in the seas around us as also to establish joint mechanisms to effectively challenge the common scourge of terrorism, drug trafficking and piracy. Recognizing the MNDF's need for a quick first response capability in events of calamities - both natural and man made as also medical evacuations and Search and Rescue (SAR) requirements, the GoI would be transferring to the Maldives a "DHRUV" helicopter, manufactured by Hindustan Aeronautics Limited, Bangalore, for use by the MNDF. The Govt of India would also be assisting the MNDF in setting up and equipping a 25 bed hospital at Male as also provide training to MNDF Doctors and paramedics.

The scope of the ongoing joint MNDF Marines/Army and the Coast Guard exercises would be enhanced and Hydrographic survey and other joint events including surveillance and co-ordinated patrolling by IN and MNDF CG ships would continue apace. MNDF CG ship Huravee which was transferred to MNDF in 2006, would be provided a three month long refit by the GoI at Naval Dockyard Vizag. Besides this, the vast training interaction existing is also poised to grow further. Both sides also agreed to work together in preparing Maldives claim on extended continental shelf delineation to be submitted to the UN.

The discussions were held in the spirit of friendship and mutual respect and were very fruitful. The Indian Defence Minister would depart the Maldives on the 22nd August 2009 on conclusion of the two day official visit.

305. Question in the Rajya Sabha: "Extradition Treaty with Nepal".

New Delhi, February 26, 2009.

Will the Minister of EXTERNAL AFFAIRS be pleased to state:

- (a) whether India and Nepal have decided to modify the existing extradition treaty that would allow the two countries to handover criminals of third country.
- (b) if so, the details thereof;
- (c) whether the nexus between Trans-border criminals is increasing and in the absence of extradition treaty, criminals are freely enjoying; and
- (d) if, so, the reaction of the Government thereto?

The Minister of External Affairs (Shri Pranab Mukherjee):

(a) to (d) An extradition treaty, concluded on October 2, 1953, is currently in force between India and Nepal. The text of a new extradition treaty has been finalised between the two Governments. The new extradition treaty was initialled in January 2005 and awaits formal signatures. Under the provisions of the new treaty, it is possible to extradite third country nationals for extraditable offences as described in the treaty.

306. Statement by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee on Nepal.*New Delhi, May 4, 2009.

What is happening in Nepal is internal to Nepal. We wish Nepal well in its transition to a fully democratic polity and would hope that the present crisis is resolved in a manner which contributes to the early conclusion of the peace process.

We would hope that the broadest possible political consensus would make it possible for Nepal to concentrate on the agreed tasks of Constitution making and of democratic transition.

* The EAM was referring to the resignation of the Nepalese Government led by Pushpa Kamal Dahal 'Parchanda' after the refusal of the President to endorse the decision of the Cabinet to dismiss the Army Chief Gen. Katawal. This was the first government formed in Nepal after the general elections and abolition of monarchy. Meanwhile the Prime Minister Manmohan Singh on May 4 said the absence of peace and stability in India's neighbourhood could affect its security situation. "Today, there is lack of peace and stability in our neighbouring nations; be it Nepal, Pakistan and Sri Lanka. It [the developments] can also affect the security situation in our country," he said at an election rally. The Union Home Ministry directed border guarding force, Seema Suraksha Bal (SSB) which patrols 1750-km border, to remain on high alert on the India-Nepal border.

307. Statement by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna on Nepal.*New Delhi, May 25, 2009.

We congratulate Mr. Madhav Nepal on his election as the Prime Minister of Nepal. We hope that the peace process, including the important task of Constitution drafting, will now move forward expeditiously. We have a unique relationship with Nepal. We stand ready to support Nepal in any manner it would want us to.

308. Opening Remarks by Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon at his press conference.

Kathmandu, June 21, 2009.

I have just completed a busy two day visit to Kathmandu.

2. During my stay in Kathmandu, I called on the President Dr. Ram Baran Yadav and Prime Minister Mr. Madhav Kumar Nepal. I also called on the Foreign Minister Ms. Sujata Koirala.

3. I had a bilateral meeting with Foreign Secretary of Nepal. We reviewed bilateral cooperation and discussed issues of mutual interest.

4. I was received by Nepalese leaders across the political spectrum including the former Prime Minister and President of Nepali Congress, former Prime Minister and Chairman of UCPN (Maoist) and Chairman of CPN (UML).

5. The purpose of the visit was to exchange views on the future course and prospects of our bilateral relations*. There have been major developments in Nepal and India. We have undergone a general election where the government got a strong popular mandate for its foreign and domestic policies and plans. A new government has also been formed in Nepal. It is therefore natural that the two close and friendly neighbours, who are linked in so many ways which are unique to us, should, at this moment, exchange views on the future course of our relations.

* Answering questions he said that most of the reports of India-Nepal border problems were "blown out of proportion." He, however convinced Kathmandu to revitalise mechanisms for effective border management. "We need to develop low-level mechanisms, at the local level where we can deal with the practical problems before they become either exaggerated or before they are made political, which I am afraid has happened in some cases," he said at a press meet.

"We don't want small incidents to be exaggerated and blown out of proportion and to affect people's perceptions of this (Nepal-India) relationship." He said having a border management would help deal with those incidents. Most of the reported atrocities of Shastra Seema Bal (SSB) on Nepali people "were not true but played up for political purposes." There were reports of displacement of thousands of Nepali people in Dang district by the SSB and also of its indecent behaviour with Nepali women. Mr. Menon made it clear that India never interfered in Nepal's politics. Asked about the Unified Communist Party of Nepal (Maoists) blaming the CPN-UML-led government to be a puppet of India, he said, "We did not interfere." India had over and over again tried to make that clear but admitted that there were a lot of "noises" in democracy.

He denied that the Maoists' accusation affected India's relations with Nepal's Maoists. India would work with all those who shared the goals of writing the Constitution and completing the peace process.

6. India has an interest in the success of Nepal's transition to multi party democracy and peace process. These are issues which are to be decided and settled by the Nepali people and their representatives. For our part, India will continue to support Nepal in its transition in the hope that the fraternal Nepali people achieve their aspirations for a peaceful and prosperous future. India will do all it can to help these processes of positive change in Nepal.

7. I return to India convinced of the significance and great potential of India-Nepal relations, which is heightened in these times of rapid change. Relations with Nepal are and will continue to be a matter of the highest priority for India. A peaceful democratic Nepal is in the interest of the Nepali people, of India and of our region.

Thank You.

309. Press Release of the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon to Nepal.

New Delhi, June 21, 2009.

Foreign Secretary Mr. Shivshankar Menon paid an official visit to Kathmandu from 20-21 June, 2009.

During the visit, the Foreign Secretary called on the President Dr. Ram Baran Yadav and the Prime Minister Mr. Madhav Kumar Nepal.

The Foreign Secretary also called on the Foreign Minister Ms. Sujata Koirala, Defense Minister Ms. Bidya Devi Bhandari and Home Minister Mr. Bhim Rawal. The Foreign Secretary had a bilateral meeting with Mr. Gyan Chandra Acharya, Foreign Secretary, Nepal.

Besides, the Foreign Secretary met the former Prime Minister and President of Nepali Congress Mr. G P Koirala, former Prime Minister and Chairman of UCPN( Maoists) Mr. Puspha Kamal Dahal 'Prachanda', Chairman of CPN (UML) Mr. Jhala Nath Khanal and Deputy Prime Minister Bijay Gachchdar and had discussions with leaders from a wide cross section of political parties.

The purpose of the visit was to exchange views with the leaders of Nepal on the future development and strengthening of relations between the two countries.

During the meetings, the Foreign Secretary reiterated India's commitment to further strengthen and enhance ties with Nepal. He also reiterated India's commitment to assist the Government and people of Nepal in their transition to multi-party democracy and in their peace process to achieve their aspirations for a peaceful and prosperous future.

The meetings were held in a friendly and cordial atmosphere reflecting the close, friendly and unique relations that exist between India and Nepal.

310. Extract relevant to Nepal from the Statement of External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna in the Parliament.

New Delhi, July 9, 2009.

Nepal

14. Finally, I wish to inform the House of recent developments in Nepal. As Hon'ble Members are aware, the peace process in Nepal after the Constituent Assembly elections last year has gone through many ups and downs.

15. Due to the nature of our relations and the open border, developments in Nepal have a direct impact on us. We are therefore concerned at the lack of progress on peace process issues and fraying of the political consensus that was critical to the peace process. The task of constitution making has also not progressed as per agreed schedule, and it remains to be seen whether it can be completed by the stipulated timeframe of April 2010.

16. There are also significant differences between political parties as to the structure of governance, issues like federalism etc., which they need to resolve. The Army Integration Special Committee, with the mandate to supervise, integrate and rehabilitate the combatants of the Maoist Army, was constituted in January 2009 along with a Technical Committee. No tangible progress has been achieved by it on the issue, too. Over 19,600 combatants of the People's Liberation Army (PLA) of the Maoists and over 4000 cadres disqualified by the UN Mission in Nepal (UNMIN), which include minors, continue to stay in cantonments with their upkeep paid for by the Government of Nepal and international donors.

17. Prime Minister Prachanda resigned on May 4, 2009, after a political crisis brought about by his insistence on removal of the Chief of Army Staff of Nepal Army in spite of opposition from major political parties, including the main coalition partner CPN-UML, and advice of the President.

18. Following his resignation, a new coalition Government has been formed under the leadership of Prime Minister Madhav Kumar Nepal of CPN-UML. The coalition Government is supported by 22 political parties and enjoys a majority in the 601 member Constituent Assembly, which also acts as Legislature-Parliament.

19. On her part, India has provided full support to the ongoing peace process in Nepal, including material assistance to strengthen the civil security forces and law enforcement machinery, and support for elections to the Constituent Assembly. We hope that the new government would be able to move expeditiously on the tasks of constitution making and conclusion of peace process on the basis of widest possible consensus. We have conveyed our commitment to assist the Government and people of Nepal in their endeavour of transition to multi-party democracy and conclusion of peace process, in any manner and to the extent Nepal would like us to.

20. The open border between India and Nepal offers opportunities, as well as challenges. Recently, there were allegations in the Nepalese media of encroachments on the border by Sashastra Seema Bal (SSB), which were found to be false. Strip maps covering about ninety six percent of the India-Nepal boundary have been jointly finalized and initialed. We have also agreed to establish local level mechanisms across the border to address issues related to border management.

21. Closure of the breach in the embankment of the Kosi river that occurred in August 2008 in Nepal has been carried out. We are also carrying out additional anti-erosion and protection works.

22. Our relations with Nepal are unique, and will continue to be a matter of highest priority for India. We do not view our fraternal ties with Nepal through the prism of its relations with any other country. A peaceful democratic Nepal is in the interest of the people of Nepal, of India and of our region. India will continue to support Nepal in its democratic transition and economic development in any manner and to the extent it would like us to.

23. Thank you!

311. Media Report of the Visit of the Nepalese Foreign Minister Ms. Sujata Koirala.

New Delhi, August 12, 2009.

In talks with several Union Cabinet Ministers, visiting Nepalese Foreign Minister Sujata Koirala was informed of India's intentions to start work on the coastal road which will connect 22 districts of the underdeveloped Terai region and the construction of a power transmission line to Muzzaffarpur.

The two sides also exchanged notes on the proposed trade treaty as well as the peace process in Nepal with India pointing out that any unrest impacted the security situation in both countries.

The Nepalese assurance on not allowing its territory to be used against anti-India forces came following concerns raised over the large scale influx of fake currency in the country. Nepal sought Indian assistance to modernise its border forces with communication and surveillance equipment to nab drug runners and counterfeit currency traffickers. It also suggested that India could take more active interest in training its police personnel.

Apart from the coastal road and the transmission line, the two sides also exchanged notes on the construction of the Tanakpur-Mahendernagar Road which would be an off-shoot of the multi-purpose Pancheshwar project. Nepal also raised the issue of hiking the scholarship for its students and wanted its students in select colleges in India to be allowed to pay for their fees in Indian rupees instead of dollars.

In her meeting with the Union Home Minister P. Chidambaram Ms. Koirala discussed various issues, including the circulation of fake currency. Intelligence inputs suggest that the porous India-Nepal border is one of the main routes for bringing counterfeit currency into India. "Nepal and India share a lot of common interests. We are friendly countries. We have an open border and we have spoken about security and how we can mutually work for proper security on the border," Ms. Koirala told journalists. Asked about the fake currency problem, she said, "Of course it is a concern for everybody. Nepal wants to control it on its side of the border, while India wants to do the same this side. We will have a meeting to chalk out a strategy to deal with the menace."

313. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs regarding the attack on Indian priests at Pashupatinath Temple in Kathmandu.

New Delhi, September 5, 2009.

The attack on the two newly appointed Indian priests, Girish Bhatt and Raghavendra Bhatt, at the revered and sacred Pashupatinath temple in Kathmandu on September 4, 2009, has caused deep anguish and serious concern in India. The matter was immediately taken up through our Embassy in Kathmandu at the highest levels in the Government of Nepal and our concerns conveyed.

2. As per age old tradition and custom, Pashupatinath temple appoints priests from India. In this instance, after receipt of appointment orders from the Prime Minister of Nepal on September 2, 2009, the two priests were doing shuddikaran anushthan behind closed doors for joining puja duties from 5th September as required by temple customs. At about 1330 hours on 4th September, 10-12 Maoist cadres, led by Punya Prasad Pandey (ex-member of Pashupati Area Development Trust/PADT) and Ramesh Dongel (ex-member of PADT), barged into the room where the two Indian priests were doing the anushthan, and assaulted and man-handled them.

3. The Ambassador of India in Kathmandu took up the matter immediately at the political level and the Police authorities were also contacted. Senior Nepali Police officers visited the site and have deployed a new security contingent. A team from the Embassy of India, Kathmandu, visited the Pashupatinath Temple to reassure the Indian priests. We understand that the Nepalese authorities have apprehended over 25 persons in connection with this incident, including the ringleader.

4. The Nepalese authorities at the highest level have assured us that they are taking additional steps to ensure the safety and security of Indian priests in Nepal to resolve the problem.

* On the same day External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna also said that India had taken up with Nepal the attack on two Indian priests by Maoists at the Pashupatinath temple on September 4 in Kathmandu. In the incident two newly appointed priests at the temple hailing from Karnataka were beaten up by a group of Maoists who were reportedly angry over continuing the practice of appointing only Indian priests in the temple. The Minister speaking in Bangalore said: "We are aware of the attack and are in touch with the Nepal government. We are also in touch with the Pashupati Area Development Trust. They have enhanced security around the temple and also provided enough security

5. We strongly believe that this unprovoked and criminal act of violence goes against the grain of the civilisational ties of friendship that have existed since time immemorial between the peoples of Nepal and India. The safety and security of Indian citizen's abroad is an abiding and core concern of the Government of India and we continue to closely monitor the situation surrounding yesterday's unfortunate incident in Kathmandu.

to priests in the area where they stay." He noted that it was a tradition in that temple to allow Indian priests to perform pujas. Similar tradition existed in Kashi where priests from Nepal perform pujas. The two priests, Girish Bhatta and Raghavendra Bhatta, were performing religious rituals when they were attacked by the Maoists armed with rods and sticks.

Treasurer of the Pashupati Area Development Trust (PADT) Narottam Vaidya said the priests, Raghavendra and Girish, were manhandled in the temple premises. The police have arrested a man in connection with the incident. Minister for Federal Affairs, Constituent Assembly, Parliamentary and Cultural Affairs, Minendra Rijal condemned the attack and said the government would take strong action against those who tried to disrupt the nitya puja (daily worship) at the temple. "I express the government's commitment to provide any level of security to allow these pujas to take place," he said, requesting the protesters not to "politicise the appointment". [Prime Minister Madhav Kumar Nepal recently approved the recruitment of the priests from Karnataka. They were set to start puja (worship) on September 5. But some people had been protesting against the government's decision to recruit Indian priests. Meanwhile, the government on September 4 evening declared the Pashupati area a prohibited zone and stepped up security].

314. Remarks by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao at the media interaction at the end of her visit to Nepal.*Kathmandu, September 15, 2009.

It is an honour and a privilege to be in this beautiful city, the capital of Nepal. It brought back fond memories of my previous visits. It has been a very busy but most useful visit to Kathmandu. This is also my first visit to Kathmandu after assuming the charge of the Foreign Secretary.

2. During my stay, I called on the President Rt Hon'ble Dr. Ram Baran Yadav and Prime Minister Rt Hon'ble Mr. Madhav Kumar Nepal. I also called on Deputy Prime Minister H.E. Mr. Bijay Kumar Gachhadar, Foreign Minister H.E. Ms. Sujata Koirala*, Home Minister H.E. Mr. Bhim Bahadur Rawal and Defence Minister H.E. Ms. Bidya Devi Bhandari.

3. I conveyed to the Prime Minister of Nepal the Greetings and the best wishes of Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh and our commitment to the fulfilment of the various understanding reached during his visit to India last month.

4. In my meeting with Mr. Gyan Chandra Acharya, Foreign Secretary of

* The Nepalese Foreign Minister Ms. Sujata Koirala who had visited New Delhi a week earlier welcoming the F.S's visit said: "We should be more open and hold frank discussions about our bilateral issues," and added that Ms. Rao also held similar views. "If our distance increases, others would try to take advantage of it," she pointed out. An agreement was reached to execute the projects mutually-agreed upon during Prime Minister Madhav Kumar Nepal's recent visit to India. "This would help establish even better relations between the two countries," Ms. Koirala said. Earlier on her arrival, Ms. Rao said she would try to "strengthen the long-standing relationship between the two countries." In recent days, issues such as border disputes and fake Indian currency have been a cause of concern for both nations. Media said a whole range of issues such as an extradition treaty, fake currency, border problems, operation of direct flights from Kathmandu to six Indian cities, and others were discussed in depth. Further discussion would take place when a Home-Secretary-level meeting takes place in November first week in Kathmandu. Mrs. Rao said on September 15 that she raised India's security concerns with the Nepal government. "I reiterated India's security concerns and the use of Nepalese territory for anti-India activities," she said. "The Nepalese side unequivocally reiterated its commitment that such activities will not be allowed." Ms. Rao, after meeting the Home Minister Bhim Rawal, said she was assured by the Nepal government that cases of counterfeit currency would be investigated. Mrs. Rao who visited the sacred Pashupatinath Temple (ten days after the attack on Indian priests there) said "I prayed that His blessings and His benedictions will be showered on the people of Nepal, with whom we share very close ties of friendship, solidarity, and partnership." Later she said the "Government of Nepal has reassured me that they have taken all necessary measures to ensure the security and well-being of the Indian priests and continuation of regular prayers at the temple."

Nepal, we reviewed bilateral cooperation and had a very useful discussion on issues of mutual interest.

5. The purpose of the visit was to exchange views on the further improvement of our bilateral relations and to focus on implementation of the rich and vast agenda agreed upon during the visit of the Prime Minister of Nepal to India as contained in the Joint Press Statement. As you know, the Civil Aviation Secretary level talks have already taken place in New Delhi during which both sides have agreed to increase the number of seats from 6000 to 30000 between Kathmandu and the Indian metros. This will promote tourism, people-to-people contact and economic cooperation between the two countries. The Home Secretary level talks will take place on November 6-7 in Kathmandu during which the entire gamut of bilateral security issues will be addressed. I reiterated India's security concerns and the use of Nepalese territory for anti-India activities. The Nepalese side unequivocally reiterated their commitment that such activities will not be allowed.

6. I was received by Nepalese leaders across the political spectrum including the former Prime Minister and President of the Nepali Congress, Mr. Girija Prasad Koirala and the Chairman of CPN (UML), Mr. Jhala Nath Khanal. I assured these leaders of India's strong commitment of support to Nepal in its transition to a democratic, prosperous, peaceful and stable future.

7. I visited the sacred and revered Pashupatinath Temple today. The political leaders, with whom I interacted, have conveyed their regret at the recent unfortunate incident involving the unprovoked attack on Indian priests that took place at Pashupatinath. The Government of Nepal has reassured me that they have taken all necessary measures to ensure the security and well being of the Indian priests and continuation of regular prayers at the temple.

8. India has an abiding interest in the success of Nepal's transition to multi-party democracy and the completion of the peace process. A peaceful, democratic and prosperous Nepal is in the interest of the Nepali people, of India and of our region. India is committed to assist the Government and people of Nepal in these processes of historic change in Nepal.

9. I am convinced of the significance and the great potential of India-Nepal relations, which is heightened in these times of rapid change. Relations with Nepal are and will continue to be a matter of the highest priority for India.

Thank you.

315. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce on the signing of the Treaty of Trade and Agreement of Cooperation to Control Unauthorized Trade.

New Delhi, October 27, 2009.

Shri Anand Sharma, Union Minister of Commerce and Industry and Mr. Rajendra Mahto, Nepalese Minister of Commerce and Supplies today signed the 2009 India-Nepal Treaty of Trade and Agreement of Cooperation to Control Unauthorized Trade. The 2009 Trade Treaty revises the 1996 Trade Treaty between the two countries. The 1996 Treaty has been a turning point in the trade relations between the two countries and resulted in phenomenal growth of bilateral trade from Rs. 28.1 billion in 1995-96 to Rs. 204.8 billion in 2008-09. While the Nepalese exports to India increased from Rs. 3.7 billion to Rs. 40.9 billion, the Indian exports to Nepal increased from Rs. 24.4 billion to Rs. 163.9 billion during the period -1995- 2009.

After signing the agreement, Shri Sharma said, "There is need to shift the Indo-Nepal trade to the higher level and attain better qualitative dimensions. The opening of new lines of products and duty free access in India will provide further boost to the growing Indo-Nepal Trade", he added and hoped that the revised treaty would help facilitate Trade by opening new land routes for trade between the two countries. The current treaty is expected to provide further access to Nepalese products into India and to enhance and expand bilateral trade between the two countries, the Minister further added. The changes introduced in the Treaty are:

"The validity of the Treaty has been increased from five to seven years, along with the provision of automatic extension for further periods of seven years at a time. This will provide more stable framework for bilateral trade and promote investments in Nepal based on preferential access provided by the Treaty to Nepalese products.

"No discrimination will be made in respect of tax, including central excise, rebate and other benefits to exports merely on the basis of payment modality and currency of payment of trade. This will bring the bilateral trade conducted in Indian Rupees at par with trade in convertible currency and will end the existing mechanism of Duty Refund Procedure (DRP) which was procedurally cumbersome. It will provide Nepal a direct control on the customs duty revenues on import of manufactured goods from India. It will also allow Indian exports to avail benefit of export promotion schemes prevailing in India, making these products more competitive for further sale or value addition in Nepal. (This change would be made effective from the date to be mutually agreed to. Modalities will be developed for smooth transition from the existing to the new system.)

- The time limit for temporary import of machinery and equipment for repair and maintenance has been raised from 3 to 10 years.
- Several new items of export interest to Nepal have been added to the list of primary products giving these items duty free access to India without any quantitative restrictions. These include floriculture products, atta, bran, husk, bristles, herbs, stone aggregates, boulders, sand and gravel.
- Criterion for calculating value addition for gaining preferential access to India has been changed from ex-factory basis to FOB basis.
- India has agreed to consider waiver, on request from GON, of any additional duty that may be levied over and above CVD.
- Both sides have agreed to exempt exports of goods, which are already covered under forward contract, from imposition of restrictions on exports.
- Both sides will grant recognition to the sanitary and phyto-sanitary certificates issued by the competent authority of the exporting country based on assessment of their capabilities.
- Articles manufactured in Nepal, which do not fulfill the criteria for preferential access will be provided MFN access to the Indian market. The certificate of origin in case of such exports has been prescribed.
- The provisions regarding safeguard measures in case of serious injury to the domestic industry have been streamlined.
- A joint mechanism, comprising local authorities has been established to resolve problems arising in clearance of perishable goods.
- An Inter-Governmental Sub-Committee (IGSC) at the joint secretary-level has been established. Existing Inter-Governmental Committee (IGC) at the Secretary-level will meet once in six months and the IGSC will meet at the interval of the two IGC meetings.
- Four additional Land Customs Stations (LCSs) will be established to facilitate bilateral trade: Maheshpur/Thutibari (Nawalparasi); Sikta-Bhiswabazar; Laukha-Thadi; and Guleria/Murtia, bringing the total number of Stations to 26.
- Bilateral trade will be allowed by air through international airports connected by direct flights between Nepal and India (Kathmandu/Delhi, Mumbai, Kolkata and Chennai).

- The Indian side has agreed to review and simplify the existing administrative arrangements for operationalisation of fixed quota for acrylic yarn, copper products and zinc oxide.
- India has agreed to consider several additional products as wholly produced or manufactured in Nepal for the purpose of gaining preferential access to the Indian market. It includes articles collected in Nepal fit only for recovery of raw materials and waste and scrap resulting from manufacturing operations in Nepal.
- India has agreed to assist Nepal to increase its capacity to trade through improvement in technical standards, quarantine and testing facilities and related human resource capacities.

The main features of the 1996 Trade Treaty were:

- Duty free access to each other's primary products as per agreed list.
- Nepalese manufactured products are allowed non-reciprocal access to the Indian market, free of basic customs duty, provided the goods are manufactured with Nepalese and/or Indian inputs. If third country inputs are used, at least 30% value addition is required to attract duty free access.
- Annual quotas for duty free access in respect of four items - vegetable fats (100,000 tons) acrylic yarn (10,000 tons), copper products (10,000 tons) and zinc oxide (2,500 tons);
- MFN access for three items - cigarettes, alcohol (excluding beer) and cosmetics with non-Nepalese and non-Indian brands;
- Goods manufactured by small scale units in Nepal enjoy the same benefits as SSIs in India with regard to tax exemption;
- Designates twenty two points on India-Nepal border for bilateral trade.

The 2009 Agreement of Cooperation to Control Unauthorized Trade will allow export of goods imported by Nepal from India to the third countries without necessity of carrying out any manufacturing activity in Nepal. This will enhance exports from Nepal to third countries where it has a better market access as compared to India. Similarly it will allow export of the goods imported by India from Nepal to third countries. This will help Nepalese exporters to take advantage of the third country market access developed by the Indian export houses.

India and Pakistan today (1 January 2009), through diplomatic channels simultaneously at New Delhi and Islamabad, exchanged lists of nuclear installations and facilities covered under the Agreement on the Prohibition of Attack against Nuclear Installations and Facilities between India and Pakistan. This agreement was signed on 31 December 1988 and entered into force on 27 January 1991.

Under the Agreement, the two countries, on first January of every calendar year, are to inform each other of Nuclear Installations and Facilities to be covered by the Agreement. 318. Statement by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee on evidence on Mumbai attacks being handed over to Pakistan.

New Delhi, January 5, 2009.

We have today handed over to Pakistan evidence of the links with elements in Pakistan of the terrorists who attacked Mumbai on 26th November, 2008.

We are also briefing all our friendly countries. I have written to my counterparts around the world giving them details of the events in Mumbai and describing in some detail the progress that we have made in our investigations and the evidence that we have collected.

The Ministry will also be briefing all resident Heads of Missions here in the next 24 hours. Our Ambassadors will be doing the same in their respective countries of accreditation.

What happened in Mumbai was an unpardonable crime. As far as the Government of Pakistan is concerned, we ask only that it implement the bilateral commitments that it has made at the highest levels to India, and practices her international obligations. These are clear. It is my hope that the world will unite to achieve the goal of eliminating the threat of such terrorism.

319. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon after India had handed over the dossiers on Mumbai terror attacks to Pakistan.

New Delhi, January 5, 2009.

Foreign Secretary: Thank you for coming.

As you know, earlier today we handed over to the Pakistani High Commissioner here in New Delhi, and in Islamabad to the Pakistani Foreign Secretary, material that has emerged from the investigation into the terrorist attacks in Mumbai. This material includes material from the interrogation of Mohammed Ajmal Kasab, the Pakistani national who is in our police custody; details of the terrorists' communication links with elements in Pakistan during the Mumbai attack; details of the recovered weapons and equipment and of other articles that we have recovered from the boat, from the sites where the attack took place; and details of data that we have recovered from the GPS instrument and the satellite telephones that we have recovered. This material, as you know, is linked to elements in Pakistan.

We have told the Pakistani authorities that it is our expectation that as Pakistan is obliged to, under the various bilateral commitments which she has undertaken and the international commitments that she has, that Pakistan will investigate this material, follow the evidence wherever it may lead, and share the results with us and extend to us legal assistance so that we can bring the perpetrators to Indian justice. We have also said that we would hope that Pakistan would implement her various commitments not to permit terrorism in any manner from any territory under its control against India.

We have also today begun the process of briefing friendly governments. The External Affairs Minister has written a letter to his counterparts around the world along with a detailed brief on the events in Mumbai. We started the process of briefing friendly governments today in Delhi by briefing the representatives of countries who had lost their nationals in the Mumbai attacks, this afternoon at 3:30 in MEA. We will continue this process with other friendly governments tomorrow.

We have also the Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Mr. He Yafei in Delhi at this moment for discussions on bilateral relations, on the preparations for the meeting of G20 leaders in London in April on the financial crisis. And naturally he briefed us on his discussions in Pakistan where he was the end of last month. And we also briefed him on the material that is with us that has emerged from our investigation.

I must make it clear that this is still an ongoing investigation and it is not as though this investigation is over. But we feel that we are at the point where it is clear that the crime might have been committed in India but the conspiracy behind the crime was in Pakistan, and hence our request to Pakistan to fulfill her commitments to us. It is also our feeling that terrorism of this sort is a threat to the entire international community. And this is why we are briefing our friends because it is really time that the world acted to eliminate this threat.

I will be very happy to answer any questions which you might have.

Question (Ms. Sara Sidner, CNN): How long has this evidence been in the hands of Indian authorities? And is this the first time that Pakistan is getting hard evidence from India?

Foreign Secretary: As far as the Mumbai attack is concerned, this is evidence that we have developed since the attack began on the 26th of November. Bits and pieces of it have been developed over time. At that time itself we had mentioned to Pakistan that all the indications that we had were that the attack had come from Pakistan. The External Affairs Minister had spoken to his counterpart on the 28th (November), we had then made a demarche on the 1st (December). We had high level contacts as well. The Pakistani side had informed us that they were undertaking their own investigation, and that they would see what they found on their side. We have now shared with them some of the results of what we have discovered as a result of, as I said, an ongoing investigation. And we would hope that they would now follow these leads in Pakistan and see where they lead, and help us to bring the perpetrators to justice.

Question (Ms. Sara Sidner, CNN): Is this the first time they have had evidence?

Foreign Secretary: We have given evidence in previous cases. For instance, after the attack on our Embassy in Kabul we held a special session of the Joint Anti Terror mechanism where we had given some evidence to Pakistan which suggested that there were elements in Pakistan who were involved in that attack. In several cases in the past we have shared evidence. But we are hoping that the previous pattern is not repeated in this case.

Question (Ms. Sara Sidner, CNN): So, this is the first time since 26th November.

Foreign Secretary: I think you have to give somebody else a chance.

Question (Mr. Javed Khan, Pakistan Broadcasting Corporation): Mr. Menon, the evidence which you just mentioned, like Thuraya telephone calls and the GPS data, was there right with the Indian authorities in the beginning. Why India did not share it with Pakistan then?

Secondly, why has India not responded to Pakistan's offer of a joint investigation into the Mumbai incident?

Foreign Secretary: I think we needed to be sure of what we had collected. We needed to go through the process of investigation. This is normal. I mean the Pakistan side was doing what they could on their side; we had to do what we did on our side. We have now shared what we have found with Pakistan. We would expect that Pakistan would do the same in return, and would share what they have.

You asked why we have not chosen to respond to the idea of a joint investigation. I think the law is quite clear. Jurisdiction rests with the country whose territory the crime is committed on. In this case it is a crime in India with a conspiracy in Pakistan. So, we will investigate in India; we expect Pakistan to investigate in Pakistan, and to render legal assistance to us, as she is obliged to under the various Conventions that exist. We have existing mechanisms. But so far as the history of attacks shows they have not been successful in preventing such attacks. So, I think it is naturally incumbent on us now to try and make sure that they work. And we hope to do so.

Question (Mr. Simon Daniel, Reuters): Do you have solid evidence of the complicity of current or recently former members of the ISI in these attacks? And have you presented such evidence to Pakistan?

Foreign Secretary: We will follow the evidence wherever it leads. It is hard to believe that something of this scale that took so long in the preparation, and of this nature which amounts really to a commando attack, could occur without anybody anywhere in the establishment knowing that this was happening. And that actually beggars the imagination. Wherever the evidence leads we will follow it. But we are at this stage, as I said, in an ongoing investigation. We are not going to say yes or no, this is where the line ends. We cannot, because we still have to continue with this investigation, and most of it now has to be done in Pakistan.

Question (Mr. Sanjay Majumder, BBC News): Mr. Menon, will you accept the results of any investigation conducted by Pakistan, or you are also asking for your own investigation teams? And since you are sharing this information with other governments, are you hoping that organizations such as the FBI will be given access based on the information you have provided and can, therefore, carry out some investigations on your behalf in Pakistan?

Foreign Secretary: You are asking me for several blank cheques, all at the same time. I cannot say whether I will accept something that I have not even seen, that has not even been offered, that I have not heard of! This is purely hypothetical. Every part of your question is hypothetical. So, please do not ask me to say, "Yes, I will accept; I will not accept", what somebody may at some stage in the future offer or give me.

Question (Mr. Sanjay Majumder, BBC News): But you said you asked for legal assistance. Can you amplify what kind of legal assistance? Would that mean access to your investigation teams?

Foreign Secretary: I think there is an accepted international legal obligation to render legal assistance. Under the SAARC convention it is quite clear what kind of legal assistance that is. It extends up to and it includes extradition.

Question (Mr. Mathew Rosenberg, Associated Press): Pakistan has arrested several senior Lashkar leaders and cracked down on the charities that are linked to Lashkar. What other concrete steps does Pakistan need to take to satisfy India? And you mentioned bringing the perpetrators to Indian justice. Does that mean that India wants Pakistan to hand them over to be tried here in India?

Foreign Secretary: As of now I have your word that some people have been arrested. Nobody has told us this officially yet from Pakistan. Secondly, we have seen a similar thing when Lashkar was declared a terrorist organization after the attack on the Indian Parliament in December 2001. And within three months they were back in business. Jamaat-ud-Dawa, which was declared a terrorist organization early in December, is still functioning as far as we can see. It is updating its website. Several of its organizations are still working. So, frankly, what we have seen so far does not impress us. Our goals are quite clear. What we want, as I said over and over again, is to bring the perpetrators to Indian justice, and to guarantee that there are no terrorist attacks from Pakistan on India. I think that is our goal.

Question (Mr. Mathew Rosenberg, Associated Press): Does Indian justice mean being tried in India?

Foreign Secretary: Where else is there Indian justice?

Question (Ms. Caren, ABC News): I just want a follow up. You said on 11/28 and the 1st of December that there was contact. Is that regarding evidence where you were able to say we have this evidence, and now this is the official evidence you are giving? So, there has been communication back and forth regarding what you found and what you burnt?

Foreign Secretary: Let us be careful in the words we use. We have given them material that has come out from our investigation.

Question (Ms. Caren, ABC News): Along the way.

Foreign Secretary: Evidence is what a court accepts under the law. There is an Evidence Act and so on. So that is not a word I will use right now. What I would use right now is we have given them the material that has come out of the investigation that leads to Pakistan. All of the material we have given them is linked to Pakistan, elements in Pakistan. We expect them to investigate, look into it, share the results with us. And we will take it from there.

Question (Ms. Parrull Malhotra, CNN-IBN): Do you see any value in Indian investigators questioning Pakistani suspects in Pakistan? Secondly, your thoughts on the FBI not getting access to suspects and places?

Foreign Secretary: Same question, same answer. Hypothetical. As of now, all we have seen is denial or confusing, contradictory statements. So, whether or not Indians go there, who else gives us what information, frankly, all that is hypothetical.

Question (Mr. Rajiv Sharma, Free Press Journal): Though there is no extradition treaty between India and Pakistan, would you say that it is really not so much mundane because Pakistan is signatory to so many international conventions including some UN Resolutions which demand that any terrorist crime committed on the soil of a country, that obligates that country to extradite the suspects behind?

Secondly, does the evidence you have shared with Pakistan include the DNA samples of Kasab?

Foreign Secretary: Our understanding of the law is quite clear that under several international instruments, with or without a bilateral extradition treaty, in terrorist offences of this nature Pakistan is obliged to extradite the criminals. Otherwise, if we were told - as we have heard some people say - that Pakistan will never extradite anybody, then in effect we are saying that a Pakistani national who commits a crime in India and manages to get back to Pakistan has immunity. That is what it would amount to. Our understanding, for instance, is that under the SAARC Convention against Terrorism there is an obligation to extradite. In fact, that convention was written the way it is in order to avoid the fact of a bilateral demand, and it actually makes some multilateral obligation of it. And that is why that Convention was written the way it was. There are other international instruments as well, and we can mention a long list of them. But that is our understanding of the legal situation.

Question (Mr. Rajiv Sharma, Free Press Journal): Have DNA samples of Kasab been given?

Foreign Secretary: No, we have not. But it is available; we have made it known to them that it is available.

Question (Mr. Manish Chand, INS): Sir, you just spoke about several mechanisms not working in the past. Now what about this Anti Terror Mechanism? In the light of what has happened, denials and the rest coming from Pakistan after Mumbai attacks, are we planning to continue with this Anti Terror Mechanism or is there a move to scrap it?

Also, when you talk about some people in the Pakistani establishment being in the know about the Mumbai attacks who are you referring to? Are we talking about the ISI here?

Foreign Secretary: As far as mechanisms are concerned, frankly, we are no longer interested in words, in mechanisms. We want actual action against the perpetrators. I think if we are to believe in sincerity and to see a way forward. I think what we expect now is action. We have gone through this process, for a long period, of showing evidence, of going through the various mechanisms. So, as far as we can see, the answer is not whether we scrap a mechanism, or add a new mechanism, or tinker with all this. This is form rather than substance. The substance of it is we would like action on the material that we have shared with Pakistan so that we can bring the perpetrators to justice. That is it.

Question (Mr. Amit Barua, The Hindustan Times): Mr. Menon, since the 26/11 attacks, how would you assess the response of key players in the international community? There has been a lot of public support, but do you think that enough is being done by them to actually tell Pakistan that they need to be serious this time? We had a similar situation after the attack on our Embassy in Kabul when there was a lot of support and a lot of statements were made, some meetings took place. But do you believe that the international community is doing a sufficient amount to press Pakistan on this occasion?

Foreign Secretary: I think we have seen an unprecedented level of international support and the international response has been very heartening from our point of view. The international community responded immediately by declaring Jamaat-ud-Dawa a terrorist organization. The kind of support and detailed assistance that we have received from several friendly countries is actually very heartening. Whether this is sufficient to induce Pakistan to do what she should, I do not know. That frankly is between them and Pakistan. That is not for me to say. I think we have made it clear what we expect. But the primary responsibility here - because the links lead back into Pakistan, they do not lead into other countries - is for Pakistan to act. We will continue to work with our friends in the international community to see that that happens to the extent it can.

Question (Mr. Siddharth Varadarajan, The Hindu): Mr. Menon, does the material that you have handed over to Pakistan include the names of handlers or people at the other end of the telephone line who either are in or have recently been part of the ISI?

Secondly, are you not interested in access to people arrested either now or in the future? For example, you are saying it is a hypothetical question but, there is an announcement by the Pakistani Government that bank accounts have been frozen. Would you like to see for example details of some of these accounts, what have the recent transactions been? Have you made a request of this kind to the Pakistani authorities?

Foreign Secretary: It is quite clear that what we would like from the Pakistani authorities is all the information related to this crime. So, it is not a question of our making a specific request for one bit of information or another. We want to know how this conspiracy was formed; how it was carried out; how the training, the planning, the organization and the actual handling which went on right through the crime was done. That is what we would like to know. We would like to know it all. So, it is not just one part or the other. And that general request is available. That is why the general request for legal assistance. I think that is quite clear because it includes everything, including the results of investigation, but also goes beyond that all the way up to extradition, as I said. From what we have given them, frankly I cannot answer where those leads end or how far they go.

Question (Mr. Siddharth Varadarajan, The Hindu): Have you named the people?

Foreign Secretary: We have named those people whom we identified on the basis of the interrogation or on other bases that we knew of.

Question (Mr. Siddharth Varadarajan, The Hindu): Have you named the ISI or Lashkar?

Foreign Secretary: Frankly, the relationship that Lashkar-e-Toiba has enjoyed with the ISI in the past is a matter of history. It is a very fine line to draw between who is ISI, who is not ISI, and so on. So, I do not want to get into saying so and so is, so and so is not, so and so did, so and so worked for them, so and so did not work for them, so and so was supported, I do not want to get into that at all. As I said, we will follow the investigation wherever it leads. And whoever is responsible for this, I think, has to pay.

Question (Mr. Chris Morris, BBC News): Just a follow up on that previous question there. The fact you say that it is hard to believe that there were no elements in the state involved suggests to me that you have strong suspicions but no concrete proof. Is that correct?

Foreign Secretary: I am not getting into the quality of the proof. I am not getting into a judgment on which bits of the proof are strong, weak. I am not getting into that at all. We have our own procedures for making evidence under the law in India available. So, that we will have to continue to follow. And that frankly is not a judgment that we in the External Affairs Ministry take. That is something that is a part of the internal legal process in India. So, I am not going to go into saying this is clinching, this is not clinching, something else leads somewhere. As I said, it is an ongoing investigation; it will go on; we will follow it where it leads. But I am not going to go into that.

Question (Mr. Chris Morris, BBC News): But do you think the distinction between, rather an ugly phrase, non-state actors and state actors is an important one?

Foreign Secretary: We do not think there is such a thing as non-state actors. Even the so-called non-state actors function within a state, are citizens of a state. And certainly we find that distinction almost impossible to believe.

Question (Inaudible): Again, just to clarify what you are asking for. In the material that you have presented today, are you asking for Pakistan to extradite individual suspects? If so, how many, and are they current or retired members of the ISI? And, if not, what exactly are you asking Pakistan to do?

Foreign Secretary: Ditto. Same answer. It is hypothetical. I have told you what we asked. I told you we asked for legal assistance; we asked for assistance in bringing the perpetrators to Indian justice; we have also asked for credible action to guarantee that no terrorist attacks from Pakistan take place against India. The rest, all your other questions, are contained within that.

Question (Inaudible): But are you asking for extradition of the individual suspects?

Foreign Secretary: I told you I am not going to get into that. We will see where we go with this, with the answers that we get. So far we have not got any answers at all.

Question: Pakistan has also proposed to send a high-level delegation to Pakistan to discuss all these issues. India has rejected that?

Foreign Secretary: We are not quite sure what purpose that serves. First I think we need to see credible proof of sincerity. This is not an issue of words, of discussions, of a delegation, of another mechanism. As I said before, these are form, but they beg the substance of real action.

Question (Ms. Sheela Bhatt, Rediff.Com): Sir, there was a general perception after the Mumbai attack almost for a month that Pakistan is in a denial mode. Do you think that kind of an attitude generally is still persisting?

Secondly, you have already briefed us about how from all over the world support is coming to India about this issue. Particularly I would like to know what kind of a role Iran and China are ready to play to pursue Pakistan to understand India's expectations on this issue. Lastly, I would like to ...

Foreign Secretary: How many questions? Hang on.

Question (Ms. Sheela Bhatt, Rediff.Com): Sri Lanka issue is important. I just wanted to request you to please address that. Thank you.

Foreign Secretary: You have asked two questions. One is about international reactions. I do not want to go into how individual countries have reacted. Today when we discussed this, I think we have, with the Chinese Vice Foreign Minister for instance, we also discussed our cooperation, our counter terrorism cooperation; and both of us stressed how important it was. We have been, as I said, heartened by the response that we have got across the board from all the countries. The Iranian Vice Foreign Minister was here a week and a half ago where again we discussed this issue. What we heard from him was a clear condemnation of what happened in Mumbai or of the terrorism that was involved. I think the world is quite clear on where it stands on this kind of terrorist attack. And I think the world was horrified by the scale and the nature of this attack because it really was of a level of barbarity which I think was pretty well unprecedented. But I do not want to go into what each country will do. We would hope that certainly this kind of opinion in the world will also translate into encouragement to Pakistan to do the right thing. And that would be our expectation. That is really why we are briefing our friends around the world.

To respond to the other question of yours, I think I have made it clear to you, and we have made it clear to Pakistan also what we expect and what we would hope would happen in the future. There might have been denial in the past. We have been told by Pakistan that they are ready to cooperate with us. But the proof of the pudding is in the eating. We would like to see some real cooperation.

Question (Mr. Ranjeet Kumar, Navbharat Times): There were nine other terrorists who came from Pakistan who were killed. Do you have information about them? Have you shared information about them with Pakistan and other countries?

Foreign Secretary: We have shared information.

Question (Mr. Ranjeet Kumar, Navbharat Times): Can you share it with us?

Foreign Secretary: As I told you, the release of information in India into the public domain is something that follows the normal legal process. That is not something we do.

Question (Mr. Srinjoy Chowdhury, Times Now): You have given this information to the Pakistani Government. Now you cannot wait forever for a reply. What kind of timeframe are you looking at? What is your expectation? When do you expect a reaction?

Secondly, you said that you expect an investigation on the other side. Has there been an investigation? Have you been told anything about it? If there is an investigation, what is the result? It has been five weeks.

Foreign Secretary: We were told by the Pakistan Government in December that they were carrying out their own investigation. As for a timeframe, we would like to have the results as quickly as possible. We would like to see real action as soon as possible.

Question (Mr. Yuri Solonin, Parlamentskaya Gazeta, Russia): Is the Indian Government or the Indian Ministry of External Affairs going to strengthen cooperation in the frame of Joint Anti Terrorism Groups with the major players of international affairs? If so, in what way are you going maybe to strengthen the sharing of intelligence information, or maybe to provide some joint exercises against terrorism and so on?

Foreign Secretary: As of now we do cooperate with several countries in counter terrorism measures in various ways. Some of them you have mentioned yourself. One of the ways in which we have strengthened this actually since Mumbai is in a much quicker, much more detailed exchange of information, which has been going on. We will talk to our partners and see what they are comfortable with, what we are comfortable with, and we will certainly look forward working with the international community because we think this is a threat to the entire international community. It is not just a threat to India. The way this has been done, the manner in which it has been prepared, and the ideology that goes behind it, I think suggests that this is a threat to the entire international community. So, certainly we will strengthen the ways in which we work with our friends and partners.

Question (Mr. Manish Chand, INS): Sir, what is the Indian stand now about Prabhakaran? Have you heard anything latest?

Foreign Secretary: Our position is quite clear that there are several aspects to the Sri Lankan problem, and that no one of them is sufficient to solve the problem. There is no military solution to this problem, for instance, no matter how the military situation might fluctuate. One side might be up, down, today, tomorrow, whatever. But that is neither here nor there. There is a political aspect which needs work because until there is a political understanding within the framework of a united Sri Lanka, within which all the communities in Sri Lanka are comfortable, you cannot speak of a political solution of the situation in Sri Lanka. There is a third aspect, which is a direct result of the military conflict and the absence of a political solution, which is the humanitarian problem for which, as you know, we have been working in the last several months as the fighting is intensified, to try and get relief to supplies and to try and get help to the civilian population who is caught up in this conflict. That we will continue to do. And we will continue to work with all those who are willing to do so, to try and help those poor civilians who are trapped in this zone of conflict. Quite frankly, the military situation might change, might vary. But there is more to the situation in Sri Lanka than just the military situation. I think that is very important.

On Prabhakaran our views are well known. I think we have consistently sought his extradition to face charges here, to face trial here actually. And that continues. That is a request we have renewed repeatedly.

Question (Mr. Manish Chand, INS): Mr. Menon, the Chinese Government and the state-controlled media there have been silent on the complicity of Pakistan based elements in the Mumbai attacks. This time around in your conversation with the Chinese Vice Foreign Minister, did you see a change in the attitude? What are the Chinese telling us?

Foreign Secretary: I think we have shared some material with the Chinese authorities as well. EAM has written to his Chinese counterpart as well. I do not think there is any denial of the fact that there is terrorism and that it is coming out of Pakistan. I do not see that. What I do see is an understanding that this is a problem which affects, from their point of view, their relationships with two countries. Today the Vice Foreign Minister described India as a strategic partner. And he described Pakistan is a very close and important friend of China. So, I heard from him a natural concern that how this would affect both.

He also made it quite clear that on the terrorism issue China stands very firmly with us; looks forward to cooperating with us against terrorism; and that we will make sure that our joint institutions - we have a Joint Working Group for instance on counter terrorism with China - work effectively.

Thank you.

320. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the handing over of evidence to Pakistan.*New Delhi, January 5, 2009.

The Foreign Secretary has handed over this morning to the Pakistan High Commissioner in New Delhi material linking the Mumbai attack of 26 - 29 November, 2008 to elements in Pakistan. Our High Commissioner in Islamabad is doing the same with the Pakistan Foreign Office*. This material includes:

- Material from the interrogation of Mohammed Ajmal Kasab, the Pakistani national who is in police custody.
- Details of the terrorists' communication links with elements in Pakistan during the Mumbai attack.
- Recovered weapons and equipment and other articles.
- Data retrieved from recovered GPS and satellite phones.

This material is linked to elements in Pakistan. It is our expectation that the Government of Pakistan will promptly undertake further investigations in Pakistan and share the results with us so as to bring the perpetrators to justice. We would also hope that Pakistan will implement her bilateral, multilateral and international obligations to prevent terrorism in any manner from territory under her control.

* When the Indian High Commissioner Satyabrata Pal handed over the same material to Pakistan Foreign Secretary Salman Bashir in Karachi, the latter conveyed to the High Commissioner that Pakistan was carrying out its own investigations and was determined to uncover the full facts pertaining to the Mumbai terrorist attacks ... The government of Pakistan will evaluate the information provided by India so far," said a statement from the Pakistan Foreign Ministry. It was also Pakistan's desire, according to the statement, to deal "effectively" with the issue of terrorism, which was a regional phenomenon requiring "close co-operation" between the countries.

On the same day the evidence was handed over to Pakistan the Chinese Vice Foreign Minister He Yafei was in Delhi and when he called on the Indian Foreign Secretary Mr. Shivshankar Menon, the latter, beside discussing the bilateral relations, also presented Mr. Yafei a copy of the dossier containing information on phone intercepts between the terrorists and their handlers, material recovered from the abandoned boat and the bodies of terrorists besides other details. "China described India as a strategic partner and Pakistan as close and very important for China. But it is clear that on terrorism China stands very firmly with us," Mr. Menon said. The two sides also noted the interaction on cooperation -- related issues and resolved to make sure that the Joint Working Group on Counter-Terrorism worked more effectively. Mr. He Yafei wanted India and Pakistan to resolve the issue through dialogue and assured New Delhi that Beijing would sift through the material provided by it.

"We had very good talks with the Foreign Secretary ... We got a full briefing from our [Indian] colleagues. We would study them [the evidence] of course ... We would see. My visit here is to encourage both sides to find a way out through dialogue and consultation ... it is the best way," the Chinese Vice Foreign Minister told journalists. (Mr. He, who visited Pakistan 10 days ago, noted that his interaction with both nations showed they had the will to find a way out through talks.)

321. Inaugural speech of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Conference of Chief Ministers of Indian States on Internal Security.

New Delhi, January 6, 2009.

We last met to discuss internal security issues in December 2007, a little over a year ago. The twelve months that have passed since then have been a difficult period for us. The security situation has, if anything, become even more complex. Many predictions made a year ago have unfortunately turned out to be true. In some cases the scale and magnitude of terrorist attacks appear to have been stepped up exponentially. In the prevailing circumstances we cannot afford to take a partial or segmented view. A holistic approach to our security concerns is definitely called for.

During the past year, we faced a severe challenge from terrorist groups operating from outside our country. Many of them act in association with hostile Intelligence Agencies in these countries. The attempt has been to exploit our vulnerabilities, and at times they do succeed as is evident from the terrorist attack in Mumbai. Our problems are compounded by the fact that we have a highly unpredictable and uncertain security environment in our immediate neighbourhood. The Governments in some of our neighbouring countries are very fragile in nature. The more fragile a Government, the more it tends to act in an irresponsible fashion. Pakistan's responses to our various demarches on terrorist attacks is an obvious example*.

We face multi-dimensional challenges of different kinds, but the most serious threats are those posed by Terrorism, Left Wing Extremism and insurgency in the North East. Left Wing Extremism is primarily indigenous and home-grown. Terrorism, on the other hand, is largely sponsored from outside our country, mainly Pakistan, which has utilized terrorism as an instrument of * Reacting to the evidence provided to Pakistan on the Mumbai attack, Pakistan responded by saying that the information given to it by India did not constitute "proof" and, responding to Prime Minister Manmohan Singh's speech, warned that allegations against the Pakistani state could end "all prospects of serious and objective investigations" into the incident.

In the National Assembly, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Malik Adam Khan and Foreign Secretary Salman Bashir told the Committee on Foreign Relations that the material handed over by India was "not sufficient" and could not be regarded as "evidence." "India did not give any proof; it has given information, some documents containing their investigations [into the attacks]. Pakistan wants credible, and according to the law, evidence from the Indian government," Mr. Bashir told the House. On New Delhi's demand for extradition of fugitives, Mr. Bashir said Pakistan did not have an extradition treaty with India. He told the committee that India had escalated the military tensions in the entire region.

State policy. Insurgency in the North-East exploits disparities in income and wealth but it is also sustained by the sanctuaries provided to the leaders of insurgency movements in the neighbouring countries. There are, hence, fundamental differences in the way we need to view the internal security challenge and deal with the three threats that I had mentioned.

In the previous meeting it had been mentioned that terrorists were enlarging the canvas of threats. Increasingly, their concentration was on attacking economic, infrastructure, and iconic targets, apart from political, military and security ones. Mention had also been made of the fact that the sea route was now being exploited and explored as an alternative to land routes. It had, therefore, been suggested that there should be greater vigilance along our coast line and better monitoring of maritime activity in our territorial waters. The terrorists who carried out the attack on Mumbai on November 26, 2008 used the sea route, and managed to evade our coastal surveillance.

Calculating and responding to security challenges of this nature is in itself a complex exercise at the best of times. It becomes even more challenging in the circumstances I have just now mentioned. Our security calculus is a matrix of many imponderable factors, but there are two fundamental and underlying aspects, i.e., protecting the territorial integrity of the country and ensuring our internal security.

A strong sense of nationhood is important to withstand both these types of threats. Our nation is clearly united in our determination to defeat both external as well as internal security challenges. Our determination and sense of nationhood derives from our inheritance of a great historical experience of a multi-ethnic, multi-religious, multi-caste and multi-lingual society. Today, even as Pakistan engages in whipping up war hysteria, our nation remains steadfastly united and, if anything, the process of national consolidation is becoming stronger.

Dealing with internal security problems does not alter this dynamic. The situation may appear challenging and it is challenging but it is by no means beyond control. Concerns may exist that our defence mechanisms to thwart the numerous threats are inadequate. There may be criticism that the range of the instruments that we possess to deal with internal security threats, are not sufficiently sophisticated. Clearly, there is need to review the effectiveness of our set up for the collection of technical signalling and human intelligence. The training and equipment provided to our security forces also requires a careful review. I will admit that a great deal more can, and needs to, be done. Both the Centre and the State Governments must attend to this national task with speed, efficiency and utmost commitment.

Our external policies have been dictated by a desire to have a supportive neighbourhood. Unfortunately, we cannot choose our neighbours, and some countries like Pakistan have in the past encouraged and given sanctuary to terrorists and other forces who are antagonistic to India. We have tried to minimize the impact of such hostility by erecting certain defences. We have fenced our border along the Line of Control in Jammu and Kashmir, from where the vast majority of the infiltrations into India tended to take place. We are currently fencing our border with Bangladesh, from where also a number of infiltrations have been reported.

Consequent upon this, those in charge of the terrorist infrastructure in Pakistan have resorted to other stratagems to infiltrate terrorists into India. Infiltration is occurring via Nepal and from Bangladesh, though it has not totally ceased via the Line of Control in J&K. We are aware that the sea route is another option that is now being exercised. A few interceptions have taken place, though we failed to intercept the 10 Pakistani terrorists who came by sea from Karachi on November 26.

The terrorist attack in Mumbai in November last year was clearly carried out by a Pakistan-based outfit, the Lashkar-e-Taiba. On the basis of the investigations carried out, including the Agencies of some foreign countries whose nationals were killed in the attack, there is enough evidence to show that, given the sophistication and military precision of the attack it must have had the support of some official agencies in Pakistan.

We are aware of the existence of different concentric circles of terrorism which impact on our security. The Mumbai terrorist attack fell into the category of one carried out exclusively by a foreign based outfit. There are other concentric circles of terrorism that often involve a combination of external forces backed by internal elements. There are still others which are essentially indigenous in character.

Recent patterns of terrorist incidents also suggest that increasingly the attacks have a pan-Indian and trans-national aspect. The terrorists are able to fashion new techniques and employ new skills. There is growing emphasis on 'mass casualty attacks'. Terrorist communications have become state-of-the-art. Use of the Internet and Voice Over Internet Protocol connectivity, gives the terrorists greater anonymity and makes detection difficult for the authorities.

Attacks today are again less random than previously. In the case of Mumbai, a definite link can be discerned between our economic and security interests.

Targetting of foreigners, specially from the West, was obviously intended to convey an impression that India was unsafe as a destination for the West and Western investments. We need to effectively counter this impression. We need to ensure that another major terrorist attack does not take place on our soil. We must implement the policy of 'Zero Tolerance of Terrorism' with total commitment.

Few countries have suffered so frequently or faced so much violence at the hands of terrorists as our country. During the past year, there have been terrorist attacks in Delhi, Hyderabad, Bangalore, Jaipur, Ahmedabad, Surat, Assam, Mumbai and some places in U.P. and these show higher levels of sophistication with each attack.

What makes terrorism particularly threatening at this moment is the impression of vulnerability combined with the display of greater sophistication in techniques and methodologies of terrorist outfits. The challenges before us are to demonstrate that we have both the capability as well as the sophisticated instrumentalities to anticipate and overcome the shifts and changes in terrorist methods. We cannot, therefore, afford to conceptualize narrowly. We must not react merely to immediate events.

This is the underlying message contained in the Home Minister's letter inviting you to this Meeting. It is important at this juncture to demonstrate our combined will, and that we are effectively galvanizing the internal security system to deal with future terrorist attacks. Technology is empowering non-state actors across the globe and it is necessary for us to come up with a comprehensive strategy that combines the best of technological and human capabilities within the country to defeat terrorism in all its manifestations.

The Home Minister has already outlined a number of steps that have been taken in recent weeks to erect additional mechanisms to counter future terrorist attacks. The main message is that we need to break down barriers to information-sharing between the various agencies.

What I would add is that we need better intelligence and perhaps, more importantly, sophisticated assessment and analysis of the intelligence that is available. Complaints are often heard that the intelligence provided by the Agencies is not actionable. All intelligence produced is actionable, though it may not always be specific. It depends on the capability and ingenuity of those who assess the information to further develop and convert the fragmentary pieces of intelligence into a complete whole and for those who have to act on it to possibly pursue each and every lead.

Getting information early in time is vitally important and we need to encourage the setting up of an elaborate information system at the village, block and district level to report on any and all untoward events and incidents. Mobile telephones today provide opportunities for easy communication. Even our fishermen out at sea can use mobile telephones to report any untoward incident in our territorial waters. We must understand that no counter-terrorist action can hope to succeed unless it is based on the cooperation of the community and hence the importance of an expanded community policing system in our country. I would request the Chief Ministers to personally attend to this vital task.

The information available from diverse sources, thereafter needs to be properly channelized to reach a common point such as the recently revitalized Multi-Agency Centre in Delhi for collation and analysis. It will, hence, be necessary to establish Centers locally, at the State and lower levels across the country, to collate all the available information which might have a bearing on a potential terrorist situation. Other countries which have a federal structure similar to ours, like the United States, do have such centers spread across the country to coordinate local level responses to terrorism.

A large empirical data base will not yield results without using techniques such as structured analytic methodologies to convert the mass of information into actionable intelligence. Applications such as Threat Assessment Modeling and Artificial Neural Networks will have to be added to the existing analytic techniques. Three Dimensional Modeling of Critical Infrastructure is a new aspect that needs to be introduced. In several situations, we could even think of a Virtual Operations Centre.

I recently had occasion to mention in Parliament that the time had come for us to establish a permanent Crisis Management Group to handle the fallout of major terrorist attacks anywhere in our country. This is now being established. We have also begun the process of strengthening maritime security against asymmetric threats from the sea. We have coordinated measures to plug loopholes in regard to our air space. The process of augmenting and strengthening our counter-terrorist forces has also begun.

What we hope to achieve is closer scrutiny and attention as well as a more rapid response to new and emerging threats. Our aim is to achieve the concept of total security.

Additionally, I would here also like to refer to the danger from Left Wing Extremism. Naxalite groups do pose a challenge, though of a different nature. Left Wing Extremism has been in vogue for four decades now, but the danger is that over time the nature of the movement has substantially altered. From an ideologically driven movement it has been transformed into one in which the military ethos has become predominant. The CPI-Maoist is perhaps the only militant organization in the country which has its own Guerrilla Army, though, as yet, this is of modest proportions. It is perhaps the only militant body to-day which has a rigid organizational structure. They also have some rudimentary capabilities to manufacture arms. They show increasing sophistication in the way they carry out attacks. They also do not seem to have any dearth of new recruits to the movement.

Quite a few States in the country are affected by Left Wing Extremism, notably Chhattisgarh, Jharkhand, Orissa, Bihar and Andhra Pradesh. As the movement spreads, and becomes more energized and active, we must ponder deeply on how best to effectively deal with it. This is so, as the movement still retains a modicum of ideological appeal. It is still able to garner support from among members of Civil Society and Civil Liberties organizations. It still attracts sections of the youth. Choosing the right methods and adopting a proper strategy are therefore important so that the action we take does not give a greater fillip to the growth of the movement.

Finally, I would like to say that Terrorism should not be conceptualized solely in military terms. While taking all the measures necessary to prevent terrorist attacks, we must simultaneously ensure that the concept of terrorism is delegitimized through better investigation and superior intelligence. We must convince the world community that States that use terrorism as an instrument of foreign policy, must be isolated and compelled to abandon such tactics. We must engage vigorously in debates to press the point that 'soft' support for terrorism cannot any longer be endorsed. We must demonstrate that an alert pluralistic and secular society such as ours is the best defence against terrorist onslaughts. Terrorism, Naxalism and Insurgency in the North-East, Hon'ble Chief Ministers, constitute major challenges for our national security establishment. We need to mobilize all our wisdom, knowledge and experience to meet these challenges head on. I am confident that our nation has the resilience and will power to emerge victorious in this fight. I wish you all success in your deliberations.

322. Response of Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs to Pakistan's rejection of evidence.

New Delhi, January 7, 2009.

We have seen the Pakistan Foreign Office Press Release of January 6*.

Since the terrorist attack on Mumbai on November 26, the Government of Pakistan has asked India for evidence. On January 5, we gave them the evidence. Less than 24 hours later, the Pakistan Foreign Office has chosen to reject this evidence. How can this rejection be credible or be based on a real examination and investigation of the evidence? This is a political rejection without any basis.

It is unfortunate that the Pakistan Foreign Office has chosen to regress into its previous patterns of denial of facts, evidence and reality.

The Pakistan Foreign Office statement also reiterates so-called "constructive" proposals for a new mechanism and a high level visit. There are existing bilateral mechanisms set up at the highest level, such as the Joint Anti Terror Mechanism, which Pakistan's evasion and denial have made infructuous. It is, therefore, unclear what purpose would be served by yet another mechanism, or by a high level visit, especially if Pakistan continues to maintain the attitude revealed by the Foreign Office Press Release.

The issue is not words or statements or the situation in South Asia. The issue is what Pakistan does about terrorist attacks on India from Pakistan.

* On January 6 the Pakistan Foreign Ministry issued a press release under the caption: "India Whips up Tension" which read: "The Government of Pakistan emphatically rejects the unfortunate allegations leveled against Pakistan by the Prime Minister of India in New Delhi today. Instead of responding positively to Pakistan's offer of cooperation and constructive proposals, India has chosen to embark on a propaganda offensive. It will not only ratchet up tensions but also cloud facts and destroy all prospects of serious and objective investigations into the Mumbai attacks. This approach is fraught with grave risks and will further vitiate the situation in South Asia. Only yesterday the Government of India was advised not to embark on political point scoring. Regrettably this advice has not been heeded. Pakistan is a victim of terrorism. This pernicious phenomenon is regionally pervasive. Pakistan has suffered more terror attacks than India. But we have not lost our equanimity. Pakistan is not a state sponsor of terrorism. Our civilian and armed forces casualties over the past year in terror attacks and in countering terrorism have been far more than that of India. The history and genesis of terrorism is well-known and need no repetition. Many South Asian states have been victims of all kinds and manifestations of terrorism. The Government of Pakistan expects the Government of India to demonstrate restraint and responsibility. The policy of casting accusations without uncovering full facts and even while the investigations are still continuing is irresponsible. Villifying Pakistan or for that matter any of its state institutions on this score is unwarranted and unacceptable. This is a sure way to close avenues of cooperation in combating this menace. Pakistan strongly rejects efforts at political and military coercion, which are counter-productive. India must refrain from hostile propaganda, and must not whip up tensions. It must also take steps to de-escalate its offensive military posture against Pakistan. We once again call upon the Government of India to engage cooperatively with us to uncover the full facts behind the Mumbai terrorist attacks. In this regard, Pakistan awaits response to its constructive proposals, including joint investigation, a joint commission under the NSAs of the two countries and high level visit from Pakistan. It is recalled that Pakistan was one of the first to condemn the Mumbai terrorist attacks and had offered full cooperation to the Government of India. Pakistan is also carrying out investigations on its own. We reiterate our call for a pragmatic and cooperative engagement between the two countries to fight terrorism, which is a region-wide phenomenon and the common enemy of our people.

"We condemn terrorist activities whether perpetrated by individuals, groups or states resulting in violence or threat of violence. Pakistan would not allow its soil to be used for acts of terrorism at home and abroad. Pakistan as a responsible state is taking all requisite steps to counter terrorism. International community undoubtedly recognizes and appreciates the sacrifices made by Pakistan to combat terrorism. Pakistan's government and state institutions remain fully committed to the fight against terrorism. We need no exhortations from India. Indian government is well advised to take careful stock of its own policies and conduct that are contributory to the problems facing South Asia."

Mr. Gilani also made the surprising revelation to journalists after speaking at a seminar in Islamabad that New Delhi had sent a 52-page dossier "through the CIA," and the ISI had already given its feedback on this to the American intelligence agency, and "this has been passed on to India." Indian High Commission in Islamabad denied any knowledge of any dossier handed to Pakistan through the CIA. They said they had received no response yet on the material given by New Delhi directly to Pakistan. At the seminar, entitled "Strengthening Democracy in Pakistan" and attended by a delegation of British parliamentarians, Mr. Gilani described as "fragile" the situation on the border with India. "In the interest of peace and progress in South Asia our democratic government has done a lot in terms of normalisation of relations between Pakistan and India," he said.

323. Interview of External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee with the daily Statesman.

New Delhi, January 10, 2009.

'Diplomacy requires patience'

Ms. Simran Sodhi (SS): The government has been saying that the Mumbai attacks were carried out by "elements in Pakistan" but the PM in his speech on Tuesday talked of "official agencies" in Pakistan having links to these attacks. Do we have evidence to corroborate this claim and, if so, has it been shared with Pakistan?

External Affairs Minister (Shri Pranab Mukherjee): We have adequate information and circumstantial evidence. The magnitude, ferocity and depth of the action clearly demonstrate that if it was not well planned, it could not have been executed in that fashion. And sometimes it becomes difficult to believe that such a preparation is going on in a piece of land where there is a government, a civilian government, and it is fully unaware of it.

It is difficult to believe this. And particularly the many contradictions that have been issued by the Pakistan authorities, a mode of denial on everything. First they said non-state actors were involved, and it was pointed out that non-state actors do not come from heaven, then they said they do not belong to Pakistan and there were a series of contradictions starting from Masood Azhar and Kasab's identity. The different versions clearly demonstrate that they are shifting their position.

SS : New Delhi has undertaken a massive diplomatic offensive now more than a month after the Mumbai attacks. Many consider it to be a case of too little, too late. Do you think it will finally work?

EAM: Pakistan is in a mode of denial every time, whenever some attacks take place or something happens. At least in this case, they have accepted that Kasab is a Pakistani citizen. But I am not quite confident that after another 24 hours, they might not go into denial again. It is so difficult to deal with a country that is constantly denying. It is not a question of a diplomatic offensive; it is a question of projecting the proper thing in the proper perspective. An attack has taken place in Mumbai, it is a part of global terrorism. It is not linked to the Indo-Pak relationship. It is not about creating some kind of war hysteria that has been stated in that country, nor is it related, as in their language, to the so-called unresolved issue of Kashmir. This is a part of global terror acts and we are expecting Pakistan to fight against terrorism for which as a state they are party to various international conventions, and also as they are party to the SAARC convention and protocol to strengthen the anti-terrorism mechanism. This is simple. If they don't do it, I don't know what will follow.

SS: How long will we wait for Pakistan to act?

EAM: It is not a question of a time frame. It is a question of to what extent they respond to it. It is not merely a bilateral matter. Yes, we are the victims and the perpetrators of this attack have come from the land under Pakistan's jurisdiction. The commitment from the highest in Pakistan is that the land of Pakistan will not be allowed to be used by terrorists.

SS: Who do you deal with in Pakistan? Is it the President, Prime Minister or General Kayani?

EAM: We can deal only with the government of the day. Whether they have the real authority or not is for the people of Pakistan to decide. And this question, at one point of time, I raised but I can't decide this. I will have to deal with the Foreign Minister (of Pakistan) and I will deal with him, I will have to deal with the President, the Prime Minister. Whether they enjoy real power or not, I don't know.

SS: Do you think the US should put more pressure on Pakistan than it has?

EAM: I am not concerned whether they put pressure on a particular country or not. They are committed to fighting terrorism and if terrorists are coming from a particular land they have a legitimate right to ask them to take action. Their own citizens have been killed as a result of this terror act.

SS: Do you think the Joint Anti-Terrorism Mechanism has been a failure. Even the statement issued by your ministry on Wednesday says that "Pakistan's evasion and denial have made the Joint Anti Terror Mechanism infructuous". Looking back, don't you think that it was a strategic mistake to enter into this kind of arrangement with Pakistan, accepting that it was also a "victim of terror" and thereby blurring in one stroke the distinction between the victim and perpetrator?

EAM: No. We acted in good faith. We have to keep in mind the circumstances under which it was done. It was done after the terror acts in Delhi and then later when the Prime Minister met President Musharraf on the sidelines of the NAM summit in Havana. Then this proposal came forward and we agreed. But from our experience we have found that the JATM did not yield the desired result. That is why I am not enthusiastic about the joint investigation mechanism or receiving any delegation from Pakistan.

SS: Is the option of war still on the table? Even though on numerous occasions, you and the PM and other leaders have ruled out the military option, one does get conflicting statements from different leaders?

EAM: As the foreign minister my responsibility is to convince all concerned in the international community about the gravity of the situation. The issue is not one of war but of effective action against terrorism to prevent further outrages and to neutralise and eliminate the infrastructure of terrorism.

SS: Do you still believe that the attacks were carried out by "elements from Pakistan" or now since we have carried out further investigations, can we say that there is an involvement of official agencies of Pakistan, the ISI, for instance?

EAM: Our investigations are by no means complete and therefore I cannot foreclose leads which may come up. The attack was initiated, planned and launched in and from Pakistan. It can only be fully exposed by investigations there and these will have to be sincere and detailed no matter where they lead to. The elaborate and prolonged planning, the resources used, and the precision of the attack, all these provide leads which cannot be ignored. It is this larger picture of the scale of the entire operation which has to be kept in mind during investigations. My doubts, however, arise from the mind-set of denial about all this and when so much is made in acknowledging the self evident.

SS: If outright war is not an option, are controlled surgical strikes an option? We are viewed as a nation that is soft on terror, unlike the US that retaliated after 9/11 and hit out at states that were viewed as sponsoring terrorism in their territories?

EAM: There is a difference between the two situations. We did not approve of all the actions that the US took. We did not approve of the action on Iraq. We supported the establishment of a democratic government in Afghanistan and extended our cooperation for reconstruction in Afghanistan.

We are not soft on terror but we don't want to copy any other country's example in our foreign policy, in our defence policy or our approach to solve these issues. We have our own perception on how to deal with this.

SS: But what if our approach at the end of the day does not yield the results we desire?

EAM: I would not come to the conclusion that it would not yield results. In diplomacy we will have to give time and it requires patience. How long, how far, it depends on the situation.

SS: Pakistan has said that the evidence provided by India is not credible enough. Where do we go from here?

EAM: When we hand over evidence, there are specialised agencies to examine that. Whenever a crime takes place, the first thing the police require is a first information report. The persons concerned, their relatives, family members go to the police station and lodge an FIR. And thereafter investigating agencies start proceeding on that information. So, even if they do not consider these pieces of information to be credible, it is the responsibility of the investigating agencies to work on this information and collect evidence. You can't just simply say this is not evidence. Evidence even they will have to find out. Because there was a conspiracy planned in the land of Pakistan, and as a result an attack took place on Mumbai.

324. Joint Press Interaction of External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee and the Foreign Secretary of U. K. David Milliband.

New Delhi, January 13, 2009.

Please see Document No.686.

325. Reaction of External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee to the statement of Pakistan Prime Minister.*New Delhi, January 14, 2009.

When queried on the statement by Pakistani Prime Minister of 13.01.2009*, External Affairs Minister Shri Pranab Mukherjee said:

"There is a continuing pattern of evasiveness and denial in Pakistan's response to the terrorist attack on Mumbai. We have asked their government to undertake investigations in Pakistan and to share the results with us so as to bring the perpetrators to justice. We await a response from the Government of Pakistan. Instead, we hear of statements by Pakistani leaders at high levels to the media. These reinforce the already strong doubts which exist on Pakistan's stance on terrorism from Pakistan, and on its capacity and willingness to cooperate with other countries against terrorism. Pakistan must fully implement its international obligations under various legal instruments on terrorism."

---

* The External Affairs Minister was referring to the Statement of Pakistani Prime Minister Yusuf Raza Gilani in the National Assembly on January 13 saying the "All that has been received formally from India is some information. I say information because these are not evidence. This needs to be carefully examined." In the course of making what was described as a "policy statement" on the Mumbai incident, Mr. Gilani, however, omitted any mention of Ajmal Amir Kasab, the surviving Mumbai attacker, who was acknowledged by the Pakistan Government as a Pakistani national. Mr. Gilani said the dossier had been forwarded to the Interior Ministry for "necessary inquiry in accordance with the law," promising that the results would be shared with India in "due course of time." He repeated Pakistan's offer of joint investigation in the incident, which India had already rejected. Pakistan's repeated emphasis on more "evidence," as opposed to "information," was intended to convey the impression in the Pakistan media that the material India has provided was of little value.

326. Response of External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee to questions on statements by Pakistan Interior Adviser Rehman Malik.

New Delhi, January 15, 2009.

We have seen statements* in the media by the Interior Adviser of Pakistan assuring India of unconditional support in the Mumbai probe, urging India to use direct diplomatic channels with Pakistan, and saying that Islamabad needs more information from India in order to proceed with its own investigation. The material linking the terrorist attacks to Pakistan was handed over formally to the Pakistan High Commissioner in New Delhi on January 5, 2009. Instead of being informed through the media, I would be happy to receive a direct response from Pakistan through existing diplomatic channels, and to see Pakistan implementing her words.

* The EAM was referring to the media statement of Interior Minister of Pakistan made on January 15 that Pakistan had shut down five training camps and detained or kept under surveillance over a hundred people linked to the Lashkar-e-Taiba/Jamat-ud-Dawah in connection with the Mumbai attacks. It was also setting up a team of its Federal Investigation Agency to probe the incident. He, however said it needed more information from India to proceed with investigations, including access to the site of the terror attacks, and reiterated the offer of a joint probe.

In his statement Rehman Malik, listed 20 offices of the JuD shut down, as well as 87 schools linked to it, two libraries, seven seminaries and seven websites. Also shut down were eight disaster relief camps run by the JuD, and five "training camps," the first time Pakistan has officially acknowledged the existence of such camps. But Mr. Malik added there was no sign of any training activity at these camps. He did not specify if the JuD's Muridke headquarters had been sealed. He also left the number of individuals detained unclear. Pakistan was "fully committed" to helping India with the investigations into the Mumbai attacks, he said. He however said that in order to convert the "information" given by India into legally acceptable "evidence," the FIA team be given access to the Mumbai sites where the attacks took place.

A Pakistan Foreign Ministry spokesman separately told the media that "as for the LeT or any other group, the subject is presently under probe/inquiry by our concerned authorities." He dubbed as "most unfortunate" recent remarks by Home Minister P. Chidambaram that India could sever trade and transport links. "Pakistan continues to make every effort to defuse tensions in South Asia and has repeatedly stated that it is prepared to extend its cooperation to the Indian government concerning the Mumbai incident," he said.

Heeding the advice of EAM the Pakistan Foreign Secretary the next day January 16 called in the Indian High Commissioner and officially conveyed to him the steps taken by Pakistan against those linked to the Mumbai attacks, urging that the two countries should go back to the peace process that New Delhi says it has put on "pause" mode. Pakistan said it had conveyed to Indian High Commissioner Satyabrata Pal the "sequence and series of actions initiated by the government in pursuance of its international obligations as well as relating to the Mumbai attacks." The High Commissioner was also given a letter from Prime Minister Yusuf Raza Gilani responding to Prime Minister Manmohan Singh's New Year greetings to him. The information handed over by Pakistan to the High Commissioner was essentially the "recapitulation" of what the Interior Minister Rehman Malik, had told journalists the previous day.

327. Response of Official Spokesperson to a question on British Foreign Secretary Mr. Miliband's views.

New Delhi, January 15, 2009.

Mr. Miliband is entitled to his views, which are clearly his own and are evolving. India is a free country and, even if we do not share his views, he is free to express them. However, we do not need unsolicited advice on internal issues in India like J&K.

---

* Mr. Miliband had observed that he did not agree with the view that some Pakistani agencies appeared to be involved in the Mumbai attacks. In an article The Guardian on January 15, Mr. Miliband said that during his visit to South Asia this week, he was arguing that "the best antidote to the terrorist threat in the long term is cooperation." He further wrote: "Although I understand the current difficulties, resolution of the dispute over Kashmir would help deny extremists in the region one of their main calls to arms, and allow Pakistani authorities to focus more effectively on tackling the threat on their western borders." Indian diplomatic sources said the British Foreign Secretary's understanding of the situation was one-dimensional. The Mumbai attacks, during which members of the Jewish community and other foreigners were especially targeted, were part of the mentality of global jihad being pursued by organisations like the LeT. He also had his reservations about the evidence provided by New Delhi and the position taken by the Prime Minister regarding Pakistan handing over the culprits to India for being tried and on the question of extradition. His interview with Karan Thapar on the CNN-IBN too caused a good deal of offence to the people at large. Some of the question-answers were:

Q: You said "we believe the evidence is there." So do you see the dossier as containing evidence?

We have our own evidence, which we have shown to the Pakistani authorities and we believe that that's the right evidence on which to proceed - the Indian dossier that has been handed over is something that obviously we're looking at. But what is critical is that the words of the Pakistani government, which are commitments to follow through on the perpetrators of these terrible crimes, should be followed through into action.

Q: The Indian Prime Minister has gone on record to say that there's enough evidence to show that the attack must have had the support of some official agencies in Pakistan. Does Britain agree with that?

We don't have evidence to show that the attacks were directed by the Pakistani government. What we do know, and this is public knowledge, is that the Pakistani government has had a policy towards Lashkar-e-Taiba (LeT), under the previous regime of President Musharraf.

I think that it's very important that the so-called corral-and-engage approach is one that is changed, because it obviously doesn't work.

Q: The Indian Prime Minister also has said that Pakistan has utilised terrorism as an instrument to state policy. Would you accept that?

I have no evidence of the Pakistani state directing terrorist activities. And I would never make that claim without that evidence. What I know is that Pakistan has a very serious terrorist problem.

Q: When you spoke about the policy of corral-and-engage, the relationship with the LeT that existed during General Musharraf's time, what exactly was that relationship?

It was an approach which recognised that the LeT did pose a threat but also recognised that they had to engage with the LeT. I think the important message that comes out, especially since the Mumbai bombings, is that you have to tackle the roots of these terrorist organisations. If they want to play in politics, that's one thing. But if they're going to use terrorist tactics, that's beyond the pale and they need to be rooted out.

Q: When you say 'approach,' is that a euphemism for saying that there were links between the government of Pakistan in General Musharraf's time and the LeT?

No, an approach is a policy. It's a very clear way of describing it.

Q: A policy whereby the LeT was utilised by the state for the purposes of the state?

I have been very, very clear in every answer I have given you. We don't have evidence that the Pakistani state directs operations or directed operations by the LeT. What's important is that we recognise that terrorism is a threat to Pakistan as well as to its neighbours and to countries like Britain. Secondly, that terrorism needs to be addressed at the roots, which are economic, social, and political as well as security. Thirdly and importantly, Pakistan needs to address the fundamental and political questions if it is to turn itself around.

It's worth saying it needs the support not just of its neighbours but it needs the support of its international community. I'm proud to be in India as a friend of Pakistan as well as a friend of India. We've got to support Pakistan and those who want to see change in that country...

We're clear about the origins. We're clear that there is an immediate issue for the Pakistani authorities in terms of the prosecution and that needs to go ahead. But there's also the medium-term goal.

In the end, India cannot afford a cold war or a hot war with Pakistan and Pakistan cannot afford a cold war or a hot war with India.

Q: There are two issues that Pakistan has repeatedly raised. The first is a joint investigative mechanism. Does Britain believe a joint investigative mechanism makes sense or would it be impractical?

I think the two countries should cooperate, but I don't specify the particular way in which they should cooperate. Ministers or officials staying in contact, intensifying contact, that would be a good thing but I'm not going to sign on to one particular version of the sort of relationships between two independent [players].

Q: The second thing repeatedly said by the Pakistan Prime Minister is that he will not extradite any of the accused. Given that we are talking about people accused of the heinous crime of terrorism, will Britain support India's request or demand for extradition?

We will support their prosecution under Pakistani law.

Q: But not extradition?

Well, no, because they have broken the law in Pakistan. It is Pakistani law that they've broken as well as international decency and common sense.

Q: But if people like Khalid Sheikh Mohammed can be extradited to America - and he's only one of many such extradited without even due process of law - why can't those who have actually killed in Mumbai be extradited to India?

I'm not going to go into the ins and outs of the Pakistani government's constitutional position. What's important is that those accused of heinous crimes feel the full force of the law, whether in India or in Pakistan. Now the Pakistani authorities have detained these people. They have said that if there is evidence, they should be prosecuted. I say there is evidence. Let them be prosecuted and if they're found guilty, let them be punished.

Q: If these people are not effectively prosecuted, or if there's such a delay that people begin to feel Pakistan is simply dragging its feet, at that point of time will Britain be prepared to support either economic or military sanctions against Islamabad to force the issue?

I don't think punishing the Pakistani people with economic sanctions is going to induce the change that is necessary. In fact, it undermines precisely the kind of support that is necessary.

I think one of the things that needs to happen in Pakistan is its own people [being] engaged in a far deeper conversation about the nature of the threat that is posed to Pakistanis. The international community should make this absolutely clear to Pakistan. It should continue to do that without fear or favour. And that's what we're going to do.

Q: But what happens if Pakistan ignores the international community? Beyond trying to make it clear verbally, is there any sanction to force Pakistan to act?

We will continue to use all the appropriate mechanisms, the appropriate ways of making a difference...There's a whole range of British engagement with Pakistan that I think can help demonstrate to the Pakistani government that there is not just pressure, there is support for change in the way Pakistan operates.

Q: But at the end of the day, there is no stick you can use?

If you're saying is there a 'military stick' that I'm going to use, then there is no 'military stick' that I'm going to wield.

I think that there is a fundamental debate to be had in Pakistan - and you can see it because you are right. There are different statements that come out. What does that reveal? It reveals actually that there is a debate going on. And there's a debate between those who recognise that there is a serious need for reform in Pakistan and those who are, to use your words, 'in denial.' It's very important that the reformers win.

Q: And if they're not winning, then what?

We carry on exercising the pressure, providing the incentives in engaging...

Q: You are asking India to be patient?

No, I'm asking Indians to do the right thing for themselves and for Pakistan. Because a cold war or a hot war is not in Pakistan's interest and is not in India's interest.

I'm deliberately talking about Afghanistan and Pakistan. I think what is important is that President Obama and his new administration will be a new force on the global stage. They're going to see Pakistan as absolutely central to their investment in a decent government in Afghanistan, which is profoundly important not just for America but [also] for the rest of the western world. They're going to see Pakistan as a country that critically needs support.

They also know that the Kashmir conflict has been a source of flare-up for many years, and I think you have just held very successful elections in Jammu and Kashmir. I think the turnout of 61-62 per cent was a very significant development. I think many of us outside the region have felt that the composite dialogue and deliberations that have taken place over Kashmir are welcome. But that's not to say that they're part of the Afghan-Pakistan theatre.

328. Response of External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee to a question on bringing terrorists to justice.

New Delhi, January 16, 2009.

We have never given up the demand that perpetrators of terror acts should be extradited to India. There is no question of that or climb down.

Major terrorist acts have been committed in India. These were planned and launched from Pakistan. Only full investigations which are transparent and verifiable in Pakistan can unveil the full conspiracy. We have been requesting Pakistan to take sincere and effective steps in that direction. Pakistan is obliged to investigate and prosecute the criminals. It is Pakistan's responsibility that individuals based in Pakistan do not commit criminal acts in other countries and then have effective immunity simply because they are Pakistani nationals.

However the fact remains that dastardly terror crimes have been committed in India. Therefore the perpetrators must face Indian justice. This is not an either or situation as these things are not mutually exclusive.

Pakistan's Extradition Act of 1972, in fact, specifically provides for extradition even when there is no bilateral Extradition Treaty between the countries. The SAARC Convention on Terrorism also has the same intent and such provisions are there in other international instruments.

So I think the position is quite clear and there is no question of dilution in position.

330. Interview of External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee with Diwakar & Indrani Bagchi of the Times of India.

New Delhi, January 17, 2009.

[External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee has been a key figure in fashioning India's response to the Mumbai 26/11 attacks. He spoke to Diwakar and Indrani Bagchi on how India's post-Mumbai diplomacy was progressing in his characteristic forthright and unambiguous manner. Excerpts from the conversation.]

Q: Pakistan has announced a set of measures against Jamaat-ud-Dawa. Is India satisfied?

A: If an organization is banned or its activities considered undesirable, can it be possible to have part of its activities legal and part illegal? I read their charities will not be affected. If an organization is banned, all practices have to be banned. The problem is these organizations are changing their names...Lashkar-e-Taiba becomes Jamaat-ud Dawa, but the persons are the same, ideology same.

Q: But do these actions by Pakistan mark a step forward?

A: Let us get details. Sometimes we get these through the media. Pakistan is also not communicating with us either through our mission there or their mission here or even directly. Officially, we have had no communication from them.

Q: Pakistan continues to waffle on the evidence provided...

A: When we get some material it is handed over at the political level. It is to be examined, scrutinized by the competent authority. But as soon as they received it, they came to the conclusion this has to be 'information' and Pakistan prime minister said this in their legislature. That's why I say they are in denial.

Q: Are you disappointed that some countries are not convinced by India's argument of there being state support for the attacks?

A: Diplomacy takes time and individual countries have their own perceptions. Other countries have clearly said Pakistan has to do much more than they have done. They recognize Pakistan is the epicenter of terrorism.

Q: What about the US response?

A: US' response is positive, but we don't know what steps were taken to influence Pakistan to fight against terrorism. Pakistan must dismantle the terrorist infrastructure and abide by its international commitments, where at the highest levels two presidents have promised to us that Pakistan territory would not be used by terrorists. All the terror attacks in India coming from outside, are originating in Pakistan. What is the value of that commitment?

Q: Home minister P Chidambaram said India would cut off all contacts with Pakistan, is that true?

A: He said it in response to a question. There are various options and he illustrated one option. That is not the decision of the government.

Q: In her Senate confirmation, Hillary Clinton says the situation in Pakistan is complicated for many reasons, one of them being India.

A: Terrorism is a global phenomenon. So far as Mumbai is concerned, it's part of the battle against global terrorism. The origin of this attack is from Pakistan. There are reasons to believe, and there is evidence clearly to indicate, that this level of operation cannot happen without a well-planned conspiracy.

Q: How do you see India's post Mumbai 26/11 diplomatic effort progressing?

A: We have reached out to the entire international community. There is no doubt that the attack was planned and launched from Pakistan. It is incumbent on the government of Pakistan to firstly uncover the entire conspiracy, and secondly, to act against the perpetrators. I believe our interlocutors in the international community fully appreciate the need for transparent and effective action.

Q: Pakistan has accused India of war mongering. How do you react to this?

A: I believe the central point every government representative, and that includes myself, has made is that this is an issue of a terrorist attack launched from Pakistan and we will take all the steps that are necessary to defend our people. I do not see how this is war-mongering...those who level this charge are doing no more than resorting to diversion which we have seen from the very beginning after the Mumbai terrorist attack.

Q: What are India's options given Pakistan's non-cooperation and India's disinclination to use military strikes?

A: The way I see the issue is that there is a certain obligation on Pakistan to act against terrorist elements on its territory. The issue is how Pakistan situates itself in the global community and in particular on the issue of terrorism. I believe it is Pakistan whose options are limited since the issue is clearly of acting against terrorist groups based on its territory.

Q: There is a persistent view that resolution to terrorism in South Asia is somehow tied in with the "Kashmir problem".

A: Frankly I do not see any such relationship. I believe terrorism, as a phenomenon, needs a clear understanding rather than simply relating it to any available issue. I believe this point is well understood.

Q: India-Pakistan peace efforts have not worked. Looking back, was the joint anti-terrorism mechanism an act of misplaced faith?

A: I believe Pakistan's position since Mumbai attack has put a very large question mark over the achievements of the composite dialogue process over the past 4-1/2 years. The absence of a sincere and transparent position on terrorism has eroded the value of the dialogue process. If one takes a broader view, this is not a good development because it places a long-term question mark on the utility of dialogue as a mean to resolve bilateral issues with Pakistan. The popular support, which the dialogue process with Pakistan had, is now very significantly eroded. The joint Anti Terror Mechanism or the Home Secretaries' meetings on Terrorism both have certainly not delivered the results we anticipated because of a persistent reluctance to face up to the fundamental issue of terrorism.

Q: Do you see Pakistan resorting to nuclear blackmail?

A: Whether it is accusation of military build up, allegations of air space violation or nuclear saber rattling, the point simply is that none of this is related to issue at hand. It's simply that groups in Pakistan are carrying out terrorist attacks with impunity. This is the issue of terrorism and I do not see any scope for seeing it through any other prism.

Q: The India-US nuclear deal was seen as part of a much larger strategic partnership. After the Mumbai attacks, are you convinced US is keeping Indian interests in mind?

A: The India-US relationship has been transformed in recent years into a strategic partnership. The culmination of the civil nuclear cooperation initiative in the signing of the historic agreement by our governments on October 10, 2008 was symbolic of the transformation that we have achieved in our bilateral relationship...Terrorism is another issue we have been discussing - both our governments are committed to eliminating this scourge. Our agencies have been working together in investigation as well as on steps that can be taken to prevent the occurrence of similar attacks. We look forward to continuing current dialogues with the new US Administration - and adding new dimensions in areas of common interest.

Q: Do the US's current problems in Iraq and Afghanistan pose issues for India as well?

A: We have no reason to believe America will need encouragement to address and focus on security issues relating to our neighbourhood which, if not addressed urgently, are bound to affect the entire civilized world. As far as we have observed, the incoming US Administration has, throughout their election campaign, maintained that US attention should revert to the 'forgotten war' in Afghanistan. President-elect Obama has also been quoted to have recently stated US and India "must work together to advance our common interests and to combat the common threats of the 21st century."

Q: India has shared a deep-rooted relationship with Russia. After Mumbai, Russia has tended to equate India and Pakistan. Has India neglected our ties with Russia in pursuit of the nuclear deal and a special relationship with US?

A: Russia has unequivocally supported India in the wake of terrorist attacks in Mumbai. Foreign Minister Lavrov has expressed solidarity with India's demand that Pakistan must fulfill its commitments on elimination of terrorist bases.

Our relations are based on solid foundations and stand on their own merits. They are not subject to our relations with any other country. Russia was one of our strongest supporters at the IAEA and played a proactive role in getting the NSG waiver for India. Ongoing collaboration in nuclear energy is an important element of our strategic partnership with Russia.

Q: In the case of China, there are clear areas of differences. Has India not been successful in ensuring Beijing is sensitive to our major concerns like terrorism?

A: I have always said that India-China relations are a priority for us. We have our differences, but we have also expressed our firm commitment to resolve these through peaceful negotiations...After the Mumbai attack, I received a telephone call from my Chinese counterpart...They specifically conveyed their readiness to work with India and other countries to stamp out the scourge of terrorism. We have shared the (26/11) evidence with them when their Vice Foreign Minister visited New Delhi on 5 January 2009...As two major countries in Asia we consider that our bilateral relations must be looked at in the long term, strategic perspective.

Q: There is a new government in Bangladesh. In view of a number of militant or terrorist leaders operating out of there, is there any hope of some of these being arrested and handed over to India?

A: India welcomes the return of multi-party democratic politics in Bangladesh. Cooperation in security-related issues is extremely important for India as this directly affects the security of our country. We hope that the new government in Bangladesh would appreciate our deep concerns and take action against terrorist and insurgent groups operating in Bangladeshi territory.

331. Statement by the External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee on Pakistan High Commissioner's call on Home Minister.

New Delhi, January 31, 2009.

The Pakistani High Commissioner paid a courtesy call on the Home Minister on January 29, 2009. He did not provide any details on the results of the investigation in Pakistan into the Mumbai attacks*.

We have also seen media reports about certain statements by various Pakistani officials on their ongoing investigations, including a certain reported clarification by the Pakistani Prime Minister.

I would like to underline that we have so far not received any official Pakistani response to the Indian dossier or official information on the outcome of their investigations. These are awaited.

---

* The EAM sought to correct the false impression created by the remarks of Pakistan's Foreign Minister Shah Mahmood Qureshi who on January 30th had said "Pakistan's High Commissioner, Shahid Malik, had a good meeting yesterday [29th August] with Mr. Chidambaram, who is the Indian Interior Minister and he had updated him on the progress made so far in the investigations," the Minister said in response to questions by reporters at a university where he had a speaking engagement. Mr. Qureshi said the preliminary investigations were "almost complete." The findings would be shared with India and the international community after their approval by the Law Ministry, Mr. Qureshi said.

332. Interview of National Security Advisor M. K. Narayanan by Karan Thapar on the programme Devil's Advocate telecast on CNN-IBN.

New Delhi, February 2, 2009.

Karan Thapar: Hello and welcome to an interview with India's National Security Advisor, MK Narayanan. I will ask him about how India assesses the response of the Pakistani government in the Mumbai terror attacks. Mr. Narayanan, let us start with the dossier that the Indian Government gave Pakistan. It's now been revealed by the Pakistan Foreign Minister that their High Commissioner in Delhi has given an update to the Indian Home Minister about how their investigations are proceeding. What have they informed the government?

MK Narayanan: I haven't spoken to the Home Minister after the Pakistan Foreign Minister met him, but I am assuming it was courtesy call. It was not expected to be a call where he would submit a piece of paper because in that case, if it was a response call, then the call would have been made to the foreign office. My understanding is that the Home Minister was polite after he received a call from Pakistan Foreign Minister.

Karan Thapar: So nothing substantive said or done?

MK Narayanan: I said I have not had an opportunity to speak to the Home Minister. But I know that he saw it as a courtesy call. He had nobody with him so I don't know if anything substantial was discussed with him.

Karan Thapar: Now separately on Friday, Pakistan's High Commissioner in London has gone to say that the plot of conspiracy was not hatched in Pakistan and he has even gone to say that the evidence or material provided by India was fabricated. How do you respond to that?

MK Narayanan: I don't want to comment on the way the personalities in Pakistan are responding to the issue. What I am aware of is that after the receipt of the dossier by Pakistan, the Pakistan government have reverted to us and asked a number of questions to which answers have been provided. So as far as we are concerned, we believe that Pakistan is making an attempt to arrive at the truth. I assume that they are yet to receive reply to the second set of queries they have made. So I don't know what the Pakistan High Commissioner in London is talking about. I can only say that it is part of the dysfunctional manner in which several things are taking place in that country.

Karan Thapar: You are saying that Pakistan has asked queries. It has asked two set of queries and you have responded to them. Does this indicate that they are taking the dossier seriously and are you satisfied by the way they have responding to it?

MK Narayanan: I don't know what is the word 'satisfied' but certainly they appear to be taking things seriously and at least they are proceeding in a manner that one would expect an investigative agency to proceed. Asking queries and not taking everything that is given at the face value that has been given. Whether after all this, they would still accept the truth that will kind of hit them in the face, that I don't know.

Karan Thapar: There are reports that India has not given to Pakistan all the evidence or material it has. We've only given them a truncated dossier. It seems that the log book of Kuber or even the names of the handlers in Pakistan or even the GPS location points were not shared. Are those reports accurate?

MK Narayanan: We've given one set of dossier to the international community and there were some aspects that we were mulling over as to when and where they should be given. So if they ask, answers will be given to them.

Karan Thapar: So if Pakistan asks about things that are not in the dossier you will give it to them?

MK Narayanan: We have already asked them questions which flow from the dossier and to the extent whatever possible, we will answer the questions that are necessary for this investigation.

Karan Thapar: Given the manner in which Pakistan has responded so far, are you expecting a positive response when they come back with their full and formal response?

MK Narayanan: I think you are asking me a very difficult question. We don't know. We are giving Pakistan every opportunity to prove it is bonafide in this matter. Pakistan has been making the claim that it is the non-state actors who are involved. That means the Pakistani state is not involved. If the Pakistani state is not involved, then there is no reason why they should not be honest about it. They should be as honest as they can be about it. But we will wait and see.

Karan Thapar: But from the sound of what you are saying, it doesn't seem that you share the distrust or the skepticism of the Indian press either?

MK Narayanan: I am being careful. I am on camera, so I don't want to say anything that I may have to withdraw later on. You know my past record in this matter. I am suspicious of what Pakistan's intent is. But I am giving them an opportunity. We have provided them with the dossier, they have reverted with certain queries, we have replied to their queries and I presume that they will have more questions and we will assist them. We have taken what I call a very conscious policy of saying whether they want us to assist them in their investigation, and then we will do the utmost. What their response is going to be - from the kind of flip-flops we have seen from time to time - I cannot say.

Karan Thapar: Let's go a little back into the story and look at some of the steps they have already taken. Now that Muridke, the headquarters of the Jamaat have been taken over by the Pakistan government, five of their training camps are supposed to be shut down and their website dismantled, is that an affective implementation of United Nation's Security Council to ban the Jammata or are you not impressed?

MK Narayanan: I am not impressed with this very much. I mean training camps can be closed down and reopened at a very short notice at any time they like and taking over of the Muridke's sprawling campus of a few acres, it's only a matter of time and I am sure it will come back somewhere else. I mean these are cosmetic exercises. What we really want is that the perpetrators or the masterminds, who have perpetrated this act should be brought to justice. If Pakistan is honest about its intentions, if Pakistan believes that terrorism needs to be stamped out from their country and those elements that have been spreading terrorism elsewhere, then it's a very simple matter - handing over those who have named in the FIR. That is how every country that believes in helping each other acts. We believe that that it is the easiest manner and we have as far as possible tried to avoid naming elements in the Pakistani government so that is the way we expect them to respond.

Karan Thapar: Secondly, people like Lakhvi and Zarar Shah have been detained. In fact Pakistan's effective Interior Minister has claimed that as many as 71 members in different militant groups have been detained and a further 124 have been put under surveillance. Is that a meaningful step or is that a shard?

MK Narayanan: They are house guests. At least Lakhvi and Zarar Shah are house guests. And I don't know if it amounts to detention.

Karan Thapar: And what about Hafeez Mohammed Sayeed. His detention has been extended for a further period of two years, so is he a house guest? There are reports that he can visit the mosque locally whenever he wants?

MK Narayanan: I would say that he is an honoured guest.

Karan Thapar: So in both these instances, the treatment is not anywhere India would have expected or wanted?

MK Narayanan: It is not about India. It is a question of are they accused persons, are they people whom we wish to keep out of communication with the rest of the world or the sort that should be treated as common criminals. That's a simple matter.

Karan Thapar: What about the position Pakistan has taken over Masood Azhar. They claim that they not only don't know where he is, that he may not be even there in Pakistan. Does that government in India buy that line?

MK Narayanan: I mean, they once claimed that they had arrested Masood Azhar and then they said it was not correct. I mean I don't think anyone in Pakistan could make a mistake about the identity of Masood Azhar. I think that speaks volumes. Now as to where Masood Azhar could be, he could always be stashed away in a safe place. He may be in southern Afghanistan or he could be in Pakistan. I mean we don't know at the moment.

Karan Thapar: Stashed away by the authorities in Pakistan to protect him?

MK Narayanan: I would think that Pakistan would be in the best position to know where Masood Azhar is more than any one else.

Karan Thapar: So given that in Indian eyes how Pakistan responds is a critical test. It seems that despite the fact that they have asked a few intelligent questions about the dossier or they have asked for further information, in every other respect they are not living up to the test. Are they doing a lot less than they should, or a lot less than they are needed to do?

MK Narayanan: We are trying to look as far as in the matter as terrorism is a crime and it is internationally recognised as a crime and there are United Nations directives and sanctions. All that we are asking is, those who fall into this category should be treated as common criminals and that is not happening.

Karan Thapar: Now in January, the Indian Prime Minister publicly said that there is enough evidence to show that the attack must have had the support of some official agency in Pakistan. As you know, the British, the French or the Americans - to one degree or the other - have not supported that position. Does the Prime Minister stand by what he said?

MK Narayanan: Of course the PM will stand by what he says. The PM doesn't say words that he doesn't mean. He says things after a lot of deliberation and when he makes a statement, he makes it based on the reports that he has received from people like me and from our security structure. We have gone into this carefully. Governments find it very difficult for the other governments to make a public pronouncement that state of Pakistan is involved or some other state is involved. We are going by the methodology by which all kind of terrorist incidents are analysed, assessed and estimated. Not only that, I think in this case we also have the benefit of a great deal of exchanges with counter-terror agencies or investigative agencies across five or six countries of the world. I mean it is not a big secret to say that most of them will agree with it, but none of them will make a public announcement that 'yes' that this is so. This is not made lightly; this is made after a careful deliberation. We only wish that Pakistan will also recognise the truth that there is something wrong and they have to deal with the problem before it becomes even more grave than it is.

Karan Thapar: You are saying that this has not been said lightly, that this has been said after careful deliberation. Do you have the material that directly links what happened in Mumbai with agencies in Pakistan?

MK Narayanan: You know this question has been asked several times, directly or indirectly. But I have to say that when any statement is made, then it is made with conscious deliberation. I do not wish to go beyond that. We have no interest in blaming Pakistan. Why should we blame Pakistan? We do not wish to blame any country, unless we have reasons to believe there is something. What is the evidence, how is the evidence etc is not the point. This is based on very a careful calibration of information or intelligence that is not with regard to merely this incident but the totality of terrorist incidents that have taken place. You look at the total incident. You don't look at the single incident. And in this case we have members of Pakistani elements in the whole case.

Karan Thapar: You are talking of Kasab?

MK Narayanan: Yes.

Karan Thapar: Are you therefore dismayed with the responses of people like David Miliband or the American ambassador or even senior officials from France, all of whom didn't support the Indian Prime Minister to one extent or the other?

MK Narayanan: No, I don't want to tread into the area of what others have said. What I am saying is, it is not for others to substantiate our cases. We have substantiated the case and as I said, I personally and the members of counter-terrorism and other establishments of the country have been in touch with the status. I think if their views are taken re-consideration than it would be obvious to many of these countries who exactly were party, to the over all guilty party or the guilty group.

Karan Thapar: And that party, guilty group would include official agencies?

MK Narayanan: Of course it would.

Karan Thapar: Let's turn to the position that Pakistan has repeatedly taken over India's request for extradition of the accused. At various levels they have said that the extradition will not happen, and to one extent or the other this has been supported by the British Foreign Minister or the American ambassador. So let me ask you, is an extradition a non-negotiable demand? Is it something that you insist on?

MK Narayanan: I think we have made this point time and time again. As I said, terrorism is a crime and a crime has been committed in India, it's been committed in Mumbai. I think those who did it, one of them is alive and those who are responsible or planned it, who have been named in the FIR and other documents, they have to be tried in the country. That is why we have been asking for their extradition. That is the way any crime is and this incident should be treated.

Karan Thapar: So just to clarify, it is not just the extradition of Indian citizens who are fugitives in Pakistan. You also want the extradition of Pakistani citizens who are accused of committing crimes in India?

MK Narayanan: Yes. Indian citizens who are in Pakistan, who are accused in various cases, we think there is no reason as to why should they not be extradited and sent to India. If they have been accused in a crime of this magnitude and this gravity, and in the interest of Indo-Pak relations, quite clearly we would not like Pakistan not to give us an opportunity for trial. We are only asking for a trial, we are not saying that they would be put in front of a firing squad or something of that kind. This is reasonable. There may be legal processes that are required before this happens and we concede that. But to not allow extradition before the pros and cons are considered is something that does Pakistan a little credit.

Karan Thapar: What do you make of the fact that on one hand Pakistan repeatedly rules out extradition and on the other hand it emerges that Pakistan's own laws don't regard as a crime, offences committed outside their country. So doesn't that suggest that if there is no extradition, the accused just cannot be brought to justice in Pakistan?

MK Narayanan: This is part of my point. My point is that it is very difficult to try somebody for a crime committed in another country. If you want to follow the legal process, then what about the witnesses? Who are to testify to what happened? For all that has happened in Mumbai, what is any court in Lahore or any court in Faridkot going to say about this?

Karan Thapar: But even more than that, Prime Minister Gilani has admitted and accepted in the Financial Times - to whom he gave an interview - that the crime committed outside Pakistan are not in Pakistan's laws, which only consider crime inside Pakistan. So people can't be tried for them in Pakistan?

MK Narayanan: Possibly. I mean I am not familiar with that part of the thing, so I would find it difficult for a crime that has been committed in Pakistan for an Indian court to try them just of here.

Karan Thapar: David Miliband in an interview to Devil's Advocate - and also publicly - said that he doesn't support India's request for extradition and supported his argument by saying that the time had come for India to give the Pakistani judicial system a chance to prove itself. And then it emerged that Pakistan's own law doesn't permit the country to try Pakistani citizens for crimes committed outside their territory. What do you say to David Miliband after this?

MK Narayanan: I don't know. You should ask David Miliband yourself. I don't know what he meant or what he wanted to say.

Karan Thapar: Were you disappointed with the position he took?

MK Narayanan: David Miliband is the Foreign Secretary of the United Kingdom with which we have close relations. I think relationship between the UK and India is excellent, as is between Prime Minister Gordon Brown and our Prime Minister. So if we take the totality, I would only like to say that we did not expect this from the British Foreign Secretary. We thought he would be more understanding and sympathetic.

Karan Thapar: Were you upset with his manner and his general abrasiveness?

MK Narayanan: I don't wish to comment on it. I would rather discuss it in private with you.

Karan Thapar: Alright let's end this interview.

333. Interview of External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee with the Chief Editor of the Indian Express Shekhar Gupta in the NDTV-TV programme Walk-the-Talk.

[The interview was telecast in two parts and excerpts from it were published in the Indian Express on February 2 and February 9, 2009.]

Please see Document No.7.

334. Response by Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs to Pakistan-related queries from journalists.

New Delhi, February 5, 2009.

To a question on a reported public meeting of banned organizations in POK, the Official Spokesperson said:

"We have seen reports that representatives of terrorist groups Jaish-e-Muhammad, Harkat-ul-Mujahideen, Jamat-ud-Dawa participated in a public meeting yesterday at Muzaffarabad in Pakistan occupied Kashmir. No effort was made by the authorities to curb the activities of these groups. We strongly condemn the license that banned terrorist organizations continue to enjoy in territory under Pakistan's control."

To a question whether it is at all safe for Indians to travel to Pakistan, the Official Spokesperson said:

"The concerns which led to the travel advisory of 26th December, 2008 still very much exist. Indian Nationals are advised that it would be unsafe for them to travel or be in Pakistan."

To a question about Indian journalists being roughed up in Pakistan and reaction of the Government, the Official Spokesperson said:

"It is unfortunate that such an incident has taken place with two journalists from News X channel and that journalists are being treated in this manner. We are awaiting full details from our High Commission in Islamabad which has brought this to the attention of the concerned Pakistani authorities."

335. Media Report of the Reaction of the Ministry of External Affairs to the reports of Pakistan deciding to file a case against perpetrators of Mumbai terror attack.

New Delhi, February 9, 2009.

The Hindu Daily quoting sources in the Ministry of External Affairs reported that India on February 9 said it would wait for a formal response from Pakistan before reacting to the steps taken by Islamabad to book the perpetrators of the Mumbai terror attacks. "We await a formal response. The picture is not clear," said sources in the Ministry of External Affairs on reports that the Pakistan Cabinet's Defence Committee chaired by Prime Minister Yousuf Raza Gilani considered the material provided by India on the involvement of its nationals in the attacks and the course of its own investigations so far*.

* Media reported that the Pakistan Cabinet's Defence Committee after four-hour marathon meeting chaired by Prime Minister Gilani took stock of a report prepared by the Federal Investigation Agency on the material provided by India on the Mumbai attack and decided to register a case to bring the perpetrators to justice under its own laws but suggested that it needed more information from India to complete the investigations or else "will find it exceedingly difficult" to proceed with the case.

"The meeting decided that on the basis of the inquiry conducted by FIA, the case should be registered and further investigation be carried out so that the perpetrators, wherever they may be, of the heinous crime are brought to justice in accordance with the law of the land," a statement from the Prime Minister's Office said. Pakistan had last month announced it had detained 71 people in connection with the attacks most of whom were linked to the Lashkar-e-Taiba front Jamat-ud-Dawah. Pakistani authorities are also said to have detained two top LeT operatives, Zakiur Rehman Lakhvi and Zarar Shah, and perhaps a third named Muzzamil. (The FIA report has not been made officially public.) According to the statement, however, the meeting observed that "without substantial evidence from India it will be exceedingly difficult to complete the investigation and proceed with the case." (The meeting was attended by the Ministers of Defence, Information, Foreign Affairs, and Law. The Prime Minister's Advisers on Interior and Finance ministries were also present, as were the three services chiefs, the ISI head, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff committee, the Intelligence Bureau chief and the secretaries to the Ministries of Interior and Foreign Affairs.) Reacting to reports that the evidence provided by New Delhi was insufficient the Home Minister P. Chidambaram rubbished the report. "We have given them the dossier. Let them respond to it," he said.

336. Statement of the Ministry of External Affairs on Pakistan's response to the Indian dossier on Mumbai attack.

New Delhi, February 12, 2009.

Our High Commissioner in Pakistan was informed officially by the Pakistan Foreign Secretary this afternoon of Pakistan's response to the dossier of material that we had made available to Pakistan on January 5 linking the terrorist attacks on Mumbai to perpetrators in Pakistan. In their official response, the Pakistan authorities have admitted that elements in Pakistan were involved in the terrorist attacks on Mumbai. They are still in the process of investigating the attacks, and have taken certain actions including the arrest of some of those who were involved and filing a first information report. This is a positive development*.

Pakistan has also sought further information and material relating to the investigation. The Government of India will now examine the issues raised in the response by Pakistan. After that examination we will share whatever we can with Pakistan.

It remains India's goal to bring the perpetrators of the terrorist attacks on Mumbai to book, and to follow this process through to the end. We would also expect that the Government of Pakistan take credible steps to dismantle the infrastructure of terrorism in Pakistan.

* In Islamabad on February 12 Pakistan's Interior Minister in order to deliver a big part of its promise of cooperation with India on the Mumbai attacks registered a case of terrorism against eight Pakistani suspects, and formally acknowledged that part of the planning for the attacks was done in that country. Rehman Malik, Adviser to the Prime Minister on Interior, who also heads the Interior Ministry, told journalists that the case was registered under sections of the 1997 Anti-Terrorism Act that enable prosecution of Pakistanis for directing, abetting, conspiring or facilitating a terrorist act in another country. "The incidents have happened in India, and some part of the conspiracy has taken place in Pakistan," he said. The Prevention of Electronic Crimes Ordinance 2008 and sections of the Pakistan Penal Code have also been invoked in the case, registered by the Federal Investigation Agency on the basis of its investigations into the material provided by India on the Mumbai attacks, he added. Six of the eight suspects were reported to be in custody, and "some of them," Mr. Malik said, belong to the banned militant group Lashkar-e-Taiba.

Among the six were the LeT's Zaki-ur-Rehman Lakhvi, who masterminded the entire operation and LeT communication expert Zarar Shah, who was a main "handler" of the 10 men who carried out the attacks. Another person in custody was identified as Hamad Amin Sadiq, who Mr. Malik also described as a "mastermind." A fourth was Javed Iqbal, who was said to have made the payments for the SIM cards purchased from Callphonex, an Internet phone company through which the Mumbai attackers and their handlers communicated. Mr. Malik, however refused to divulge the identities of two of the eight men as they were not in custody yet and revealing their names could jeopardise the investigation. Nevertheless Mr. Malik repeatedly made the point that Pakistan needed "more information" from India to build a water-tight case in court. "When I say this, it does not mean that we are passing on the responsibility. India and Pakistan have a joint responsibility, and we are just asking for help," he said, stressing that it was important that "we should not allow the weakening of the FIR." He said he wanted "to assure the people of India, the Indian leadership that we are with you, and we have proved that we are with you." Mr. Malik briefed Indian High Commissioner Satyabrata Pal on the FIA findings, before the Foreign Ministry handed over the investigation report to him. Media said included in the report was a list of 30 questions on which Pakistan wanted additional information.

337. Suo Motu statement by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee in Parliament on 'Follow Up to Mumbai Terrorist Attack'.

New Delhi, February 13, 2009.

I rise to inform the House of developments since this House last considered the aftermath of the dastardly terrorist attack on Mumbai. On December 12, 2008 this House resolved, in a solemn Resolution that: "India shall not cease in her efforts until the terrorists and those who have trained, funded and abetted them are exposed and brought to justice".

2. Through the months of December, January and February, we have continued to use all means available and heightened our diplomatic activity to achieve the goals set for us, namely, to bring the perpetrators of the terrorist attacks on Mumbai to book, and to seek credible steps by Pakistan to ensure that there would be no recurrence of such attacks.

3. The Mumbai attacks were a crime committed on India, the conspiracy for which was hatched, planned and organized in Pakistan. In our diplomatic effort, we made it clear to Pakistan and the international community:

- Firstly, that the terrorist attack on Mumbai again underlines the grave threat that terrorism poses to peace and stability and therefore has to be seen in the context of the global challenge of terrorism. Terrorism emanating from Pakistan is of course a direct threat to India, but it is equally a regional and a global threat.
- Secondly, from our investigations the evidence was conclusive that the attack was planned, executed and launched from Pakistan territory, by Pakistanis and by elements based in Pakistan. The primary onus of responsibility lies on Pakistan to fully unveil the conspiracy, identify those guilty and act in a transparent and verifiable manner.
- Thirdly, Mumbai was by no means the first or only terrorist attack on India linked to the infrastructure of terrorism in Pakistan. Nonetheless, with Mumbai a threshold was crossed and it was imperative that Pakistan act credibly against that infrastructure to prevent further attacks.

4. By early January our investigations had progressed to the point where the details could be shared with the international community and specific information, material and leads could be provided to the Government of Pakistan. On the 5th of January we conveyed to the Government of Pakistan material linking the Mumbai attack of 26-29 November, 2008 to elements in Pakistan. This included:

- Material from the interrogation of Mohammed Ajmal Kasab, the Pakistani national who is in police custody.
- Details of the terrorists' communication links with elements in Pakistan during the Mumbai attack.
- Details of recovered weapons, equipment and other articles.
- Data retrieved from recovered GPS and satellite phones used by the terrorists.

5. A full dossier of the Mumbai attack was also prepared and forwarded to all my counterpart Foreign Ministers. At the same time detailed briefings for all resident Heads of Missions in New Delhi were organised in the Ministry of External Affairs.

6. In our diplomatic exchanges, we conveyed our expectation that the Government of Pakistan promptly undertake further investigations in Pakistan and share the results with us so as to bring the perpetrators to justice, and that Pakistan would implement her bilateral, multilateral and international obligations to prevent terrorism in any manner from territory under her control.

7. It may be useful to recapitulate that this was the fourth formal and official communication that we had addressed to the Government of Pakistan on this issue. I had spoken on the telephone to the Foreign Minister of Pakistan on 28 November, 2008, when he was still in India. That conversation was followed up and formalized in writing on the 29th (the next day) morning in the form of a speaking note. Secondly, on 1st December 2008 a formal demarche was made to the Government of Pakistan. Thirdly, on the 22nd December 2008, a letter from the Pakistani terrorist in our custody was officially forwarded to the Pakistan Government. And fourthly, on 5th January 2009 the dossier, with details I mentioned earlier, was given to the Government of Pakistan.

8. Pakistan's Response: Hon. Members are aware of the prevarication, denial, diversionary tactics and misplaced sense of victimhood which characterized Pakistan's reaction from early days after the Mumbai attack. Pakistan's political leadership did condemn the terrorist attack and promised us full cooperation in investigating the conspiracy in Pakistan. I do not discount in any way either their intent or their sincerity, but the fact remains that the overwhelming response of official Pakistan to the Mumbai attack was not appropriate to a terrorist attack where innocents were massacred in cold blood. Throughout the attempt was to divert attention from the terrorist attack and Pakistan's responsibilities to other issues.

9. On 16 January, the Government of Pakistan informed us that some action had been taken against the Jamat-ud-Dawa in pursuance to its being listed by the UN as a terrorist organisation. Some of its members were placed on the Exit Control List, some arms licenses were cancelled, instructions issued to freeze the accounts of JuD, some activists of JuD were arrested and certain JuD publications were banned. We were also informed that with effect from 15th January, 2009, the Government of Pakistan had launched a formal enquiry into the Mumbai terrorist attack and that the Federal Investigation Agency had been given the responsibility of conducting the enquiry in accordance with the laws of Pakistan. Some details of the enquiry team were intimated to us.

10. In the afternoon of February 12, our High Commissioner in Pakistan was informed by the Pakistan Foreign Secretary of Pakistan's response to the dossier of material that we had made available to Pakistan on January 5 linking the terrorist attacks on Mumbai to perpetrators in Pakistan. This is a positive development. In their official response, the Pakistan authorities have admitted that elements in Pakistan were involved in the terrorist attacks on Mumbai. They are still in the process of investigating the attacks, and have taken certain actions including the arrest of some of those who were involved, and have filed a first information report in Pakistan.

11. Pakistan has also sought further information and material relating to the investigation. The Government of India will now examine the issues raised in Pakistan's response. After our examination, we will share whatever we can with Pakistan.

12. Hon'ble Members will appreciate that Government has constantly been guided by the two objective of ensuring that the perpetrators who planned, organised and trained the terrorists in Pakistan are brought to justice, and that the infrastructure of terrorism which exists in Pakistan is dismantled so that we prevent a recurrence of such attacks. The international community has also worked with us, using its influence on Pakistan to ensure that the terrorist infrastructure and the support provided to such elements is put to an end, since terrorism emanating out of Pakistan is a threat not only to us, but to the world. We will continue to review the situation including Pakistan's responses and will take further steps that we deem necessary in order to protect our people.

13. The threat of terrorism from Pakistan has emerged as a global menace and cancer. The major onus of responsibility to eliminate this threat rests on the Government of Pakistan. It is imperative that it act with sincerity and act effectively against the licence that terrorist groups enjoy in its territory. It is essential that the assurances given to us repeatedly at the highest level by Pakistan leaders are implemented as solemn commitments.

14. Since the 1st of December, 2008, the Composite Dialogue process with Pakistan has been at a pause. No meeting has taken place and neither are any scheduled. It is also the case that the substantial gains in the process of normalization which were achieved in the last four or five years are at grave risk. As Members are aware, the dialogue and normalization process was premised on commitments given by Pakistan that territory under its control would not be used for terrorism in any manner.

15. We are at a point in our relationship where the authorities in Pakistan itself have to choose the kind of relationship that they want with India in the future. Much depends on actions in the Mumbai case reaching their logical conclusion. I must underline that we have no quarrel with the people of Pakistan. We wish them well and we do not think that they should be held responsible or face the consequences of this situation. We have, therefore, consciously, and after due deliberation, not thought it necessary or fit to curtail people to people contacts, trains and road links.

New Delhi, February 15, 2009.

Please See Document No.17.

- 339. Statement made by the External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee in the Rajya Sabha in response to a question regarding "Pakistan State actors' role in Mumbai attacks".
New Delhi, February 18, 2009.

Government has shared the results of its investigation in the Mumbai terror attacks case with the international community. Government expects that the Government of the United States of America along with the international community would extend all necessary help in bringing the perpetrators of the terrorist act to justice.

India and the US have a strong cooperation in the area of counter-terrorism. The two countries have identified international terrorism to be a common enemy and a threat to the civilized world.

There is no US terror package for India. The question of its approval does not arise.

Government of Nepal had denied reports, that the terrorist in our custody was arrested in Nepal, following allegations to this effect in the Pakistan media.

The Government of Iran had strongly condemned the terrorist attack on Mumbai.

On 12th February 2009, Pakistan conveyed its response to the dossier of material that we had made available to it linking the terrorist attacks on Mumbai to perpetrators in Pakistan. In the response, Pakistan authorities have confirmed that elements in Pakistan were involved in the terrorist attack on Mumbai. Pakistan has also sought further information and material relating to the investigation.

340. Response of Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs on the verdict of Supreme Court of Pakistan in the case of Sherif Brothers.

New Delhi, February 26, 2009.

In response to a question on the Pakistan Supreme Court decision* on former Prime Minister Mr. Nawaz Sherif and Chief Minister Mr. Shahbaz Sherif, the Official Spokesman said that the matter was entirely internal to Pakistan and that we have no comments to offer.

---

* The Spokesperson was reacting to report of the Pakistan Supreme Court February 25 disqualifying Pakistan Muslim League (N) leader Nawaz Sharif and his brother Shahbaz Sharif from elected office. Mr. Sharif squarely blamed President Asif Ali Zardari for the verdict. Describing it as an "attack" on Pakistan, he asked the nation to rise in protest against it. The PML(N) announced nationwide protest. Following the verdict, younger brother Mr. Shahbaz Sharif stepped down as the Chief Minister of Punjab province, where Governor's rule was immediately imposed.

341. Extract from the Television interview of External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee with Karan Thapar on the CNN-IBN channel.

New Delhi, March 1, 2009.

* * * *

Karan Thapar: I want to talk to you as a Foreign Minister*. Suddenly it seems India is surrounded by neighbours in turmoil. There is crisis in Pakistan and Bangladesh, effective civil war in Sri Lanka, political paralysis in Nepal. It looks as if India is surrounded by a sea of insecurity and uncertainty. How concerned are you?

Pranab Mukherjee: I would not look at it totally negatively. There are certain positive developments also. You are talking of Nepal but at the same time sometime back, elections to the constituent assembly took place, one organisation which believed in violence, they gave up violence and joined the team of national multi-party political system.

Of course, there would be divergence of views in a democratic system, differences of opinion. In Pakistan also, election took place, elected government came to power after a long spell of army rule. In Sri Lanka, there is a fight against LTTE and the Sri Lankan armed forces. We are deeply concerned for the plight of civilian Tamil population which has been caught in the crossfire. But in other areas, there has been some democratic changes also. For instance, in Maldives. Therefore, it happens and our approach is to help our friends whenever they want it and to the extent possible for us. And to see peace, stability and development take place in our neighbours.

* The EAM was also holding charge of Finance Ministry.

Karan Thapar: Let's talk of these countries individually one by one. First, Pakistan. You have said that Pakistan's response to India's terror dossier is a positive development, the foreign secretary in Colombo said, it was a welcome step. Has this therefore, lessened the tension and reduced the temperature between the two countries or does the sense of crisis remain unchanged?

Pranab Mukherjee: We have never raised the temperature. This is the phrase, I think British Foreign secretary used, and I told him that 'no, I have not raised the temperature'. We have not stopped the communication line. But what we want is that the perpetrators of 26/11 have to be brought to justice, infrastructure available to the terrorist should be dismantled. And Pakistan authorities must fulfill their bilateral and internal commitments. And we are insisting on that.

Karan Thapar: In the meantime, every time President Zardari speaks in interviews or makes comments etc, he speaks things that are reassuring. As you judge him, do you see him as sincere or is this just rhetoric of words?

Pranab Mukherjee: He is a nice man. He is a gentleman, Gilani is a gentleman, Qureshi is a gentleman. But this is not the question of personalities; the question is that the incumbent government has responsibility. When we talk of, we talk of the incumbent government.

Karan Thapar: So you see Zardari as a nice man, a gentle man whom you can do business with. Therefore the onus is on him to prove that he will take the steps?

Pranab Mukherjee: Onus is on the Pakistani authorities to dismantle the infrastructural facilities available to the terrorists, to bring to justice the perpetrators of terrorism and to co-operate with India in achieving this objective.

The relationship between India and Pakistan is not the point of issue at this point of time. Point of issue is how to fight terrorism. It is not the question of improving our bilateral relations. Our bilateral relations are there, people to people contact is there.

Karan Thapar: Do you think Zardari is genuinely committed to fight against terrorism or do you think he is telling different things to different people, because he is trying to buy time and that the system in Pakistan won't respond.

Pranab Mukherjee: I would not like to comment on the system of Pakistan because it is for them to comment on this issue. But what I would like to say is that I believe in his sincerity because he himself is the victim of terror attacks. His wife, Benazir Bhutto fell as the victim of the senseless brutal terror attack.

Karan Thapar: So you mean that you believe in his sincerity?

Pranab Mukherjee: I believe in his desire to fight against terrorism but at the same time my belief is not adequate and it must be backed by the action taken by the government and the authorities of Pakistan.

Karan Thapar: Let me come to a different subject. Last week, as perhaps you know the former Pakistani Prime Minister Khurshid Kasuri gave me an interview where he revealed that during the time when general Musharraf was President, extensive progress had been made between India and Pakistan on the back channel, in fact he said that more progress was made than most people believed. Can you confirm on that?

Pranab Mukherjee: You know, what takes place in the back channel is never discussed in public. Otherwise there is no need of having a back channel at all. I cannot comment on what Quereshi told, but it is not our practice to make any comment, any observation on back channel.

Karan Thapar: Let me come to America. We have a new government, a new administration in America, recently Richard Holbrooke has repeated something that President Obama has said quite frequently that America would like to see some reduction in tension between India and Pakistan so that Pakistan can concentrate on its western border. How do you respond to such thinking?

Pranab Mukherjee: We have made it quite clear. When we had interactions with Mr Holbrooke or any other official coming from USA, we made it clear that the issue is not the relationship between India and Pakistan.

The issue is how to fight against terrorism. How to dismantle the infrastructural facilities that is available on Pakistan's territory used by Pakistani elements to attack on India. How to bring the terrorists to justice. These are the issues and not the India and Pakistan relationship.

Karan Thapar: Did he understand that point?

Pranab Mukherjee: We conveyed it quite clearly and I don't see why is there any reason to not understand it.

342. Response of Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs to a question on the attack on Sri Lankan Cricketers at Lahore.

New Delhi, March 3, 2009.

We are shocked at the audacious attack* on the Sri Lankan cricketers at Lahore this morning. We offer our sympathies and good wishes for their speedy recovery as well as, of those other individuals who have been caught up in the attack.

Terrorism based in Pakistan is a grave threat to the entire world. It is in Pakistan's own interest to take prompt, meaningful and decisive steps to dismantle the terrorist infrastructure once and for all.

---

* The question related to a terrorist attack on the visiting Sri Lankan cricket team in the heart of Lahore, carried out by a dozen men armed with guns, grenades and rockets. The team was fortunate to escape with injuries to five players. But the attack, on a moving convoy of vehicles taking the cricketers from their hotel to the Gaddafi Stadium, left eight persons dead, including six policemen in the escort team. None of the attackers was killed in what the police described as "a 25-minute exchange of fire" between them and the convoy's police escort.

343. Response of Official Spokesperson to a Question on Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus service.

New Delhi, March 5, 2009.

The Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus was unable to cross the Line of Control (LOC) today as intimation was received from the other side that on account of certain administrative issues, the bus could not be allowed to cross over.

We are ascertaining further details and are fixing up an alternative date and time so that the inconvenience to the passengers is reduced to the extent possible.

344. Response by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee to a question on internal situation in Pakistan.

New Delhi, March 12, 2009.

The recent developments in Pakistan* are an internal matter of the country. We never comment on internal matters of any sovereign nation.

Pakistan is an important neighbour. I hope that all internal matters will be resolved by its leadership amicably and peacefully, in its best interests. We have always been interested to see strong and stable regimes, more so in our neighbourhood, so that the entire region can grow and develop together, for the common good of its people.

This is even more relevant to Pakistan, to enable her to fight against elements in the country that are utilizing the terror infrastructure there and engaging in terrorism within Pakistan and outside.

* Mr. Mukherjee was referring to the explosive internal situation created after the Supreme Court of Pakistan declared both the Sharif brother disqualified to hold any public office resulting in the Punjab Chief Minister's resignation and imposition of the Governor's rule in the Province. In another move the Pakistan Muslim League (Nawaz) renewed its earlier demand of restoration of the earlier deposed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court Iftikhar Choudury followed by plan to hold marches on Islamabad from various cities of Pakistan on the Capital, arrest of many lawyers and other political leaders.

On March 12 the Cabinet Committee on Security (CCS) under the chairmanship of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh reviewed the situation in Pakistan in the wake of political instability prevailing there and assessed the implications of the situation in Pakistan. The meeting was attended by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee, Defence Minister A.K. Antony and Home Minister P. Chidambaram. After the meeting Mr. Mukherjee while describing the developments in Pakistan as its "internal matter," added that India wanted to see the government in the neighbouring country stable so that it could tackle terrorism emanating from there. "We do hope these issues will be resolved by their own system and by their own mechanism," the External Affairs Minister told journalists. "Pakistan is an important neighbour. I hope that all [its] internal matters will be resolved by its leadership amicably and peacefully, in its best interests," he said.

With the President Zardari agreeing to reinstate the former Chief Justice Iftikhar Chaudhry as Pakistan's Chief Justice, the crisis appeared blown over. The External Affairs Minister on March 16 welcomed the development and hoped that the government there would be stable to act as a "bulwark" against extremism and devote its attention to fighting terrorism.

345. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs responding to Pakistan's request for further details regarding Mumbai attacks.

New Delhi, March 13, 2009.

The Government of India has today formally responded to the request from Pakistan for further details relating to the Mumbai terror attacks. Detailed responses and material have been provided by the Foreign Secretary to the Pakistan High Commissioner in New Delhi earlier this evening to all thirty questions raised by Pakistan on February 12, 2009.

It is our hope and expectation that this step will lead to bringing the perpetrators of the Mumbai attacks to justice and to credible action by Government of Pakistan against the infrastructure of terrorism in that country*.

* Speaking about the new evidence now provided the Home Minister P. Chidambaram said the answers were "very comprehensive" and should be sufficient for Pakistan to act decisively against the perpetrators of the terror strikes. "We have put together answers to 30 questions submitted by Pakistan. It is a very comprehensive document, answering each of the 30 questions," he told newsmen, after handing over the replies, along with the evidence to External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee. It also expected Islamabad to ensure "credible justice and credible action against the infrastructure of terrorism in the country." Mr. Chidambaram said the replies were backed by documentary proof, CDs and forensic evidence. "If Pakistan is serious about investigating the origins of the horrific crime in Mumbai, these answers provide solid basis. We expect Pakistan to take the investigation forward quickly," he said. According to media reports India's response runs into about 500 pages and has nearly 16 annexures.

On March 14, the External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee said he expected Islamabad to follow up on its commitment with "tangible action." "Words and commitments should be followed by tangible action," Mr. Mukherjee told journalists here to a question whether he was satisfied with Pakistan's handling of the investigation. India had been demanding that Pakistan dismantle terror infrastructure on its soil, hand over fugitives under the Indian law and bring the perpetrators of the Mumbai terror strikes to justice, Mr. Mukherjee pointed out. "It is not a question about objective satisfaction or dissatisfaction. It is a question of certain hard facts." Right from the beginning, during his conversation with his Pakistani counterpart Shah Mahmood Qureshi, Mr. Mukherjee had said India wanted the infrastructure available to terrorists in Pakistan dismantled. "The evidence of dismantling of terror facilities should be shared not only with India but also with the international community."

346. Extract from the Press Conference of Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon on the visit of Prime Minister to London for the G-20 Financial Summit.

New Delhi, March 30, 2009.

Question: I would like you to take you back to Pakistan, Mr. Menon. Since 26/11 India has had a consistent position. I know the investigations into today's attack in Lahore* and the operations there are not yet over. But India has had a consistent position that there are elements in the Pakistan State that believe in using terror as an instrument of state policy. Would you continue to say that that is the Indian stand today also because will that wash on the world stage today when attacks in Pakistan are mounting at such a pace?

Foreign Secretary: We have an attack today, which is clearly a terrorist attack, which is now what seven hours old? I do not think anybody should jump to conclusions about who did it, how it is done, why; or should, therefore, then go to even bigger conclusions about describing the nature of the relationship between terrorist elements in Pakistan and parts of the Pakistan establishment. I mean those are huge conclusions to draw on an absolute absence of information. So, I will be very careful before jumping to all the conclusions that you have mentioned on the basis of what happened today. Our basic judgment and assessment is based on our experience over several years, in fact over decades, and over what we have seen. So, it is not going to waver from day to day. This is not something that changes with the weather or with one event or the other. We will have to see. And let us see. Before we jump to conclusions about what happened in Lahore today and how it affects our assessment, let it play itself out and let us see who actually did it and how it was done and why it was done as well.

* In a terrorist attack on the Police training school near Lahore eight trainees were killed, 95 injured and number of them were taken hostage. The Pakistani security forces succeeded in taking control of the training school after a grim eight-hour gun battle. The training school at Manawan is a mere 10 km from the Wagah border with India.

In a separate statement the same day, Mr. Menon expressing his shock at the incident said: we are deeply saddened and shocked by the events in Lahore. We hope that the Pakistan authorities will be able to resolve the situation soon with minimum loss of life. Our sympathies and condolences go out to the families of those who have been killed. Terrorism is a menace to the entire region.

347. Reaction of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on resumption of talks with Pakistan.

New Delhi, March 31, 2009.

"Pakistan should show visible results with regard to investigation in the 26/11 event and show that the Government of Pakistan is doing everything possible to bring the culprits to book," Dr. Singh said, while responding to a query on Pakistan President Asif Ali Zardari's suggestion for an early resumption of the dialogue. He was talking to journalists on the sidelines of the civil investiture ceremony at the Rashtrapati Bhavan.

Dr. Singh said Islamabad should convince New Delhi about its "sincerity and determination" to deal with the menace of terrorism.

On the Lahore police training centre terror attack, he said India and Pakistan would have to jointly face the scourge of terrorism. "I sincerely wish the [Pakistani] government and people will have the courage and resources to defeat the forces of terrorism," he said.

(The Prime Minister, who later left for London to attend the G-20 summit on the international financial crisis, said terrorism would be a "major issue" during his talks with U.S. President Barack Obama, whom he will meet for the first time on April 2. He said all bilateral and regional issues and India's relations with its neighbours, besides the menace of terrorism, would figure in the talks.)

348. Extract relevant to Pakistan from the press conference of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on the conclusion of the G-20 Summit.

London, April 2, 2009.

Question (Iftekhhar Qaiser, Geo TV): Are you willing to start dialogue on Kashmir with Pakistan? And are you satisfied on the investigations which are taking place in Pakistan regarding Mumbai attacks?

Prime Minister: Let me say that we expect Pakistan to do all that is required to bring the culprits of Mumbai terror attack to book. We have supplied Pakistan answers all the questions that they raised. Now the ball is in the court of Pakistan. It has to convince us that it is absolutely sincere in bringing to book the culprits of the attack on Mumbai. As far as Kashmir is concerned, we have always said that we are willing to discuss bilaterally all outstanding issues which have bedeviled the relationship of our two countries. But let me say that these relations or these discussions cannot proceed if hundreds of people, as happened in Mumbai, are being killed. Therefore, Pakistan has the opportunity to assure the world that it is absolutely sincere in its statements that the territory of Pakistan will not be used to promote acts of terror directed against India. This is a minimum precondition for any discussions between India and Pakistan*.

* Reacting to the Prime Minister's observations, Pakistan on June 3 responding by saying that it would not accept any pre-condition for resumption of the stalled peace process with India. "We should move forward and not backward. By putting conditions, we would be going backward," Pakistan presidential spokesman Farhatullah Babar told Press Trust of India. "When we have a dialogue we cannot have pre-conditions." Mr. Babar insisted that Pakistan had "fully cooperated and is still cooperating" with India in investigating the Mumbai attacks to bring the perpetrators to justice.

In a conciliatory move, on June 4 the Pakistani Foreign Secretary requested the Indian High Commissioner Mr. Sharad Sabharwal for a meeting in his office to discuss the ongoing investigations into the Mumbai terror attack. The Foreign Secretary conveyed to the High Commissioner that "terrorism is a regional issue that required pragmatic cooperation. Pakistan's determination to eliminate terrorism in all forms and manifestations was unequivocal and beyond question. The way forward was to adopt a cooperative mode. It was our expectation that the Government of India will adopt an objective and positive approach to deal with this and other issues." He went on to assure Mr. Sabharwal that on Mumbai terrorist attacks, "Pakistan had taken concrete steps including the arrest of a number of suspects. To carry the judicial process forward, Pakistan was awaiting information from India. New Delhi had responded to our queries on 20 May. Bulk of the information provided was in language other than English. India has agreed to provide the English translation."

349. Media reports on the Response of India to Pakistan asking for more information on Mumbai terror attacks than already provided to it on 5th January and 13th March, 2009.

New Delhi, April 13, 2009.

India on April 13 rubbished Pakistan's demand for more information* on the 26/11 Mumbai attacks, saying Islamabad was indulging in "delaying" and "diversionary" tactics which put a "question mark" on its sincerity and intent. "We have given sufficient evidence to Pakistan to act against identified masterminds. By delaying action and raising technicalities, Pakistan would be undermining the credibility of its own commitments to take tangible action," Minister of State for External Affairs Anand Sharma told the Press Trust of India.

"Delaying tactics and invoking purely technical issues puts a question mark on the sincerity and intent of Pakistan," Mr. Sharma said. "We are waiting for tangible actions by Pakistan and not excuses ... What is required is that Pakistan should take action and prove sincerity by bringing the perpetrators of the heinous crime to justice," he said. He ridiculed Pakistan for seeking the statement of the former Mumbai ATS chief, Hemant Karkare, who was killed during the 26/11 attacks, regarding the role of Col. S.K. Purohit in the Samjhauta Express blasts.

* The Indian response was to the queries raised by the Pakistan's Interior Minister Rehman Malik with the Indian Deputy High Commissioner in Islamabad. Contending that the information provided by India on the Mumbai attacks was not sufficient, Pakistan sought further details, including the statement of the lone captured terrorist, Ajmal Amir 'Kasab,' for the "successful prosecution" of suspects arrested by it. Islamabad also sought the statement of the former Mumbai ATS chief, Hemant Karkare, who was killed during the November 26 attack, regarding the role of Colonel S.K. Purohit in the Samjhauta Express blasts. Mr. Malik also insisted on information about local help provided to the terrorists, which India denied there was any.

The additional information sought by Pakistan also included details of mobile SIM cards and coordinates of GPS used by the 10 terrorists who carried out the attacks. "This information is very important for the successful prosecution [of suspects arrested by Pakistan]," Mr. Malik said. India should provide the information sought by Pakistan "as quickly as possible" as Islamabad wanted to bring the terrorists responsible for the attacks to justice. Mr. Malik said Pakistan's probe into the Mumbai incident was continuing and another suspect, Shahid Jamil Riaz, had been arrested for facilitating monetary transactions in Karachi and planning the attacks. He did not give further details about Riaz. Mr. Malik asked India to provide more information on Prime Minister Manmohan Singh's statement that Pakistani Taliban could interrupt elections in the country. He said Pakistan was asking for more information on the issue as it valued Dr. Singh's statement.

"It is unconnected. It has nothing to do with 26/11. It is diversionary tactic," Mr. Sharma said, while noting that the matter before India and Pakistan right now was how to bring perpetrators of Mumbai attacks to justice. He pointed out that in the case of Col. Purohit, who was an accused in Malegaon blasts, India itself took action even on mere suspicion against the serving Army officer.

Prime Minister Manmohan Singh on April 14 speaking to journalists on the sidelines of the Civil Investiture at Rashtrapathi Bahavan slammed Pakistan for claiming that the evidence provided on the Mumbai terror attack was not sufficient. He said Islamabad should act as "enough" information had already been given to Pakistan. "We have given enough information for them to act and it is for them to act," he said. Asked to comment on Pakistan's contention that the information provided by India was insufficient and it should be given more details to enable it to take the probe forward, Home Minister P. Chidambaram said that if Pakistan's agencies could not carry out the investigations, they should allow the American agency FBI to do so. "What is the use of a government which keeps on saying that the evidence is not sufficient? The evidence remains in Pakistan. The persons to be investigated are in Pakistan," he said. "If Pakistani investigating agencies cannot do anything, why don't they let the FBI," Mr. Chidambaram said. The Press Trust of India reporting from West Bengal, where the External Affairs Minister was busy electioneering, "Mr. Mukherjee to say while India could provide more specific information, but that should not delay investigations on the pretext of clarifications. "I have just had a discussion with our Foreign Secretary. We have received the papers [from Pakistan]. We are examining them and if further information is necessary, then we will give them the further information," he told journalists. The important issue, however, was for Pakistan to have the intention to resolve the matter and penalise the perpetrators of the Mumbai terror attacks, he said

350. Response of Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs on alleged 'Indian support' for Balochistan Liberation Army.

New Delhi, April 23, 2009.

In response to a question* on allegations made by a senior Pakistan official about Indian support for Balochistan Liberation Army, the Official Spokesman said, "These are entirely baseless allegations and we see no reason to dignify them with a response."

* The question arose out of reported remarks made on April 23 by the Interior Advisor of Pakistan Rehman Malik, in the closed-door Senate session in response to the observations of US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton on the deteriorating security scenario in Pakistan. She accused Pakistan of "abdicating" power to the militia and extremists by agreeing to Islamic law in parts of the country thereby exposing Pakistan to an "existential threat". (The clear reference was to the advance of the Taliban, who had moved within 100 km of Islamabad by taking control of Buner district just outside the capital region). Deteriorating security in nuclear-armed Pakistan "poses a mortal threat to the security and safety of our country and the world," Ms. Clinton had told the US House Foreign Affairs Committee. She also asked the Pakistani government and Pakistanis at home and abroad, including in the U.S., to "speak out forcefully against a policy [Swat peace accord] that is ceding more and more territory to the insurgents". The matter did not end there. Following Hillary Clinton's indictment of Pakistan, US Special AFRPAK Envoy Richard Holbrooke telephoned President Asif Ali Zardari the same day and conveyed a similar message. In defence of Pakistan Mr. Malik attributed the deteriorating situation to the involvement of India, Afghanistan and Russia in terrorist activities. He said that all major incidents of terrorism and suicide attacks were linked to India and Afghanistan, adding that terrorists were being trained by them in those countries and in North Waziristan and being sent to the settled areas.

A Dawn report on April 24 quoted Mr. Malik to say: 'Conspiracies are being hatched to destabilise and isolate Pakistan. A militant organisation, the Balochistan Liberation Army, was formed which is being funded by Russia and backed by India. The organisation is headed by Brahmdagh Bugti who is stationed in the Afghan capital. About 1,000 students were trained in Russia and now they are back in Balochistan.' Interestingly during the visit of US Secretary of State Ms. Hillary Clinton to Pakistan at the end of October, Pakistan once again raised the bogey of alleged Indian interference in Balochistan but was rebuffed by her when she said bluntly that she had seen no evidence nor was shown any evidence by Pakistan of Indian interference in Balochistan and that Pakistan should learn to live peacefully with India through other routes like trade etc.

On October 29, the Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh addressing a press conference in Srinagar at the end of his two-day visit, while rejecting the Pakistani charge of Indian help to the Taliban, referred to Baluchistan and said: "What was said about the Indian role in Baluchistan has no basis. Those who are leveling these false charges know it jolly well."

351. Response of the Official Spokesman to a question on imposition of Jaziya on Sikhs in Pakistan.*New Delhi, May 1, 2009.

'On seeing reports about Sikh families in Pakistan being driven out of their homes and being subject to Jaziya and other such impositions, the Government of India has taken up the question of treatment of minorities in Pakistan with the Government of Pakistan*.

* The spokesperson was referring to reports that the Sikhs living in Swat valley were being subjected to the payment of Jazziya, a religious tax and other forms of discriminations at the hands of the Taliban militants. When the community could not pay up the asked for amount of Rs. 50 million, their houses were demolished. According to media reports Sikh families had started moving out of the area to other parts of Pakistan. Media reports said the External Affairs Ministry summoned an official of the Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi to convey its concern to the Pakistan Government.

But Pakistan reacted sharply to the Indian demarche. The Spokesman of the Pakistan Foreign Ministry said on May 2 that India was told that the Sikhs living in Orakzai agency were Pakistani citizens and hence of no concern to India. The Government of Pakistan was fully cognizant of the situation and looked after the welfare of all its citizens particularly the minority community.

352. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on handing over of additional information relating to Mumbai terror attacks to the Pakistan High Commission in India.*New Delhi, May 20, 2009.

MEA have today handed over to the Pakistani High Commission additional information and details relating to the Mumbai terror attack sought by Pakistan.

353. Statement by Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs on OIC Foreign Ministers meeting.

New Delhi, May 29, 2009.

We note with regret that the OIC has chosen to comment on India's internal affairs during the 36th Session of the Council of Foreign Ministers held in Syria on 23rd - 25th May 2009. The OIC has no locus standi on India's internal affairs.

We also note with dismay that in the Resolution adopted, the terrorist attack on Mumbai in November, 2008, has been referred to as a mere "incident".

It is most unfortunate that the specter of terrorism confronting the international community, of which the attack on Mumbai by elements from Pakistan was an extreme manifestation, is not being unambiguously addressed by the OIC. We strongly reject such resolutions.

354. Statement issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the release by the Lahore High Court of Hafeez Sayeed, accused as mastermind in the Mumbai terrorist attacks.

New Delhi, June 2, 2009.

We are disappointed at the release of Hafeez Sayeed. He is the head of the Jamat-ud-Dawa and the Lashkar-e-Taiba, organizations listed by the United Nations under UNSC Resolution 1267, as being affiliates of the Al-Qaeda and the Taliban. Hafeez Sayeed is specifically listed as linked to these terrorist groups. It is regrettable that notwithstanding this background and the international obligations it entails on Pakistan, he has been released. Hafeez Sayeed, the Lashkar-e-Taiba and the Jamat-ud-Dawa have a long and well established background of planning and launching terrorist acts against India. His professed ideology and public statements leave no doubt as to his terrorist inclinations. His release raises serious doubts over Pakistan's sincerity in acting with determination against terrorist groups and individuals operating from its territory. These actions by Pakistan raise questions about sincerity of Pakistan's investigations into the conspiracy that planned, launched and executed the terrorist attack on Mumbai in which hundreds of innocent Indian and foreign nationals lost their lives. Pakistan has yet to report the progress of the investigations that she had committed to undertake into that conspiracy.

* The statement came in the wake of disappointment on the release by the Full Bench of the Lahore High Court on June 2 of Hafiz Saeed, the chief of the Jamaat-ud-Dawa, known as a front organisation of the Lashkar-e-Taiba. The LeT has been blamed for the November 2008 Mumbai attacks, among other strikes.

“We conveyed our disappointment at the release of Hafiz Saeed. We made clear what we thought about it,” Foreign Secretary Shiv Shankar Menon told newsmen in New Delhi. “After the Mumbai attacks, we did not hold the people of Pakistan responsible. Travel, trade and other interactions are continuing. Action against the terrorists has to be taken by the Pakistani authorities,” said Mr. Menon.

When the Pakistan High Commissioner Shahid Malik, called on the Ministry of External Affairs in some other connection he was left in no doubt what New Delhi thought of the latest development. It was pointed out to him that there were no visible signs of Pakistan dismantling the terrorist training infrastructure directed against India. Mr. Malik however did hold out the possibility of Islamabad appealing against the order, but there was no confirmation of its opting for that course. Pakistan was studying the legal options before it, the Ministry was just told unconvincingly.

Responding to the above statement the Spokesman of the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs on the same day said: “the views expressed therein are misplaced. It is best not to comment on a Court decision. The Government of Pakistan is well aware of its obligations under national and international laws. Pakistan has demonstrated full sincerity and commitment vis-à-vis inquiry and ongoing investigations concerning the Mumbai attacks. Indian authorities have undertaken to provide English translation of the information material they handed over to Pakistan on 20 May. Polemics and unfounded insinuations cannot advance the cause of justice in civilized societies. Legal processes cannot and must not be interfered with.”

355. Interview of External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna with Karan Thapar in the programme Devil's Advocate for the 'CNN-IBN' T. V channel.

New Delhi, June 14, 2009.

[How does the new Foreign Minister S M Krishna view the two key relationships he has to manage: with Pakistan and the United States? That is the key issue Karan Thapar explored with S M Krishna on Devil's Advocate.]

Karan Thapar: Foreign Minister, let's start with Pakistan. It is 10 days since Hafiz Mohammad Saeed was released and even now the government in Pakistan hasn't made up its mind whether they want to appeal against the release or not. What do you make of that?

SM Krishna: We haven't heard anything from Pakistan about the appeal that they are supposed to make in a higher court of law.

The very release of a known terrorist who was instrumental and masterminded the terrorist attack on India on 26/11 has certainly created doubts in us about the sincerity of Pakistan in dismantling the terror instrumentalities that have come up on the soil of Pakistan.

Karan Thapar: And now the delay in appealing, is that underlining the doubts?

SM Krishna: It is. It is.

Karan Thapar: As you view what happened, do you think Hafiz Mohammad Saeed was released because Pakistan today has a strong and assertive judiciary or because the authorities deliberately presented a weak case?

SM Krishna: Well, we know how cases are fought in a court of law and Pakistan could not be an exception. We know that Pakistan could have made more serious attempts in fighting the case and I believe that not enough was done in pursuing the case.

Karan Thapar: Do you have reason to believe that elements of the military or the ISI undermined a strong case? Did they do it on purpose?

SM Krishna: The whole approach of Pakistan has become debatable in as far as terror and attacking terror is concerned.

Karan Thapar: So in a sense handling Hafiz Saeed was a credibility test for Pakistan and in your eyes they haven't necessarily passed that test?

SM Krishna: I think that was one of the important landmarks. He was a terrorist who was wanted in the 26/11 attack and the way he was released and the way Pakistan government took that release and have not followed it up by preferring an appeal shows that they are not serious about pursuing the perpetrators of that attack on India.

Karan Thapar: So Pakistan has actually failed an important credibility test?

SM Krishna: I think over a period of time it is our experience that Pakistan says something for outward consumption but it doesn't really mean what it conveys to the rest of the world.

Karan Thapar: The release of Hafiz Saeed is one setback that has happened, the other is that the United Kingdom has held back consent for declaring Masood Azhar and Azam Cheema terrorists under UN resolution 1267. Do you feel let down by Gordon Brown and David Miliband?

SM Krishna: Well, we have the best of relationship with the United Kingdom and they say they are one with us in fighting terror because terror is a universal phenomenon today.

Karan Thapar: But suddenly on this critical issue they held back consent.

SM Krishna: I think the United Kingdom ought to have been more circumspect in dealing with this particular aspect.

Karan Thapar: So you are disappointed with the United Kingdom?

SM Krishna: Well, I expected something much better from the UK.

Karan Thapar: Have you communicated this to the UK?

SM Krishna: We have our own ways of communicating whatever we feel like through our diplomatic channels.

Karan Thapar: Side by side India is also being nudged by the Obama administration to resume the political dialogue with Pakistan. The President said it in his Af-Pak speech. Then he said it again in April when he met the Prime Minister in London. How intense is the pressure to resume the dialogue?

SM Krishna: I do not know from where one gets this idea that India is a country which can be pressurised to take a particular posture. We are a sovereign country and we take decisions in what is best for our national interest.

We have got to safeguard our territory; we have got to safeguard our polity, so we will be guided by the developments in our own country rather than being pressurised by 'A' power or 'B' power.

Karan Thapar: William Burns, the American Undersecretary of State, met you on Wednesday and it is also well known that he has brought a letter from President Obama for Prime Minister Manmohan Singh.

You have received a letter from Hillary Clinton directly as well. Is this part of a concerted attempt by America to persuade or push India into resuming the political dialogue with Pakistan?

SM Krishna: We have taken up our relationship with the US to a higher level than what it was especially after the civil nuclear treaty. We have moved closer to the US.

In view of the fact that there are a number of other concerns where we are acting closely with the US, so they might have friendly advice, suggestions, just as we can give them friendly advice and suggestions. But that doesn't mean to say that they are going to pressurise us or we are going to pressurise them.

Karan Thapar: So you do accept that you are receiving friendly advice, suggestions to start talks with Pakistan?

SM Krishna: We have friendly exchange of views about not only the bilateral relationship between the US and India but about the border situation, the neighbourhood.

Karan Thapar: Of course, analysts say it is not just friendly advice as you call it or pressure as analysts call it, that you are receiving from the Obama administration.

They also say that despite numerous denials from the Obama administration it is becoming increasingly clear that in fact part of Richard Holbrook's agenda, although hidden and secret, is India. Does that worry you?

SM Krishna: What the US does with other countries is their own concern. But where India is concerned we are free to take decisions depending upon the circumstances prevailing in our country and keeping the national interest of India in mind.

Karan Thapar: Let me put it to you like this, given that suspending the political dialogue with Pakistan hasn't pushed the country to either bring the accused in the Mumbai terror strike to justice or even to dismantle the infrastructure of terror, how long do you think it is useful for India to keep the political dialogue suspended?

SM Krishna: We have said—the Prime Minister on the floor of the House did make a mention about this. He said that if Pakistan shows the sincerity that is necessary to convey to us that they are rearing to go the whole hog in trying to destroy the instrumentalities of terrorism which is directed against India, perhaps India will be too willing to resume the dialogue with Pakistan.

Karan Thapar: Let me quote something to you. Listening to the Prime Minister's reply to the President's address, the 'Hindu' commented that what earlier looked and sounded like rigid pre-conditions had now transformed into reasonable expectations. Is that a correct characterisation of the Indian position today?

SM Krishna: We are hoping that Pakistan sees the path of reason and they would live up to what we expect them to do. Then perhaps it becomes smoother for any dialogue to be meaningful. There should be a very conducive atmosphere and that is what we are trying to create.

Karan Thapar: You are trying to create a conducive atmosphere...

SM Krishna: ...for a dialogue with Pakistan which should take note of this.

Karan Thapar: Now in his reply to the President's address the Prime Minister said that "if the leadership in Pakistan has the courage, determination and statesmanship to act against terror I assure them that we will meet them more than halfway." What in your eyes would be proof of courage, determination and statesmanship?

SM Krishna: Whatever they have been saying after that attack on India on 26/11 whatever that has happened, so many innocent lives were lost, property damaged and as a result of that the relationship between India and Pakistan has suffered and taken a nosedive.

Karan Thapar: So you are saying show some reasonable movement, give us and help us resume the dialogue by being reasonable with your reactions and responses.

SM Krishna: That is what we expect from Pakistan. They should take some credible steps to convey to India that they are willing to fight terror both within and without.

Karan Thapar: Am I right in reading into your words and tone a somewhat more accommodating attitude? You still want them to do things but you are more accommodating and understanding today.

SM Krishna: It all depends upon Pakistan's attitude.

Karan Thapar: If they respond well then you will accommodate?

SM Krishna: If they respond well, we have said repeatedly, I repeat whatever the Prime Minister has said or we have said earlier.

Karan Thapar: I understand. If Pakistan responds well India will be accommodating but if Pakistan is obstinate then India can't be accommodating.

SM Krishna: I think you have summed it up very well.

Karan Thapar: So accommodation is the key note here in the relationship with Pakistan?

SM Krishna: Yes.

Karan Thapar: Now let's come to America. After eight years of an excellent relationship under George Bush, many people believe that under US President Barack Obama the relationship could be problematical. To what extent do you share that concern?

SM Krishna: I do not share that perception that under President Obama the relationship between the US and India is going to be any different than it was when President Bush was there.

Karan Thapar: You expect it to continue in the same trajectory?

SM Krishna: I believe and am looking forward that the same relationship will continue and perhaps we might improve our relationship further as we go along the road.

Karan Thapar: Let me tell you why people are concerned that this relationship could become problematical. To begin with, it is said that the new US government has an overwhelming pre-occupation with Pakistan as a result of which India is largely seen through the lens of disturbing events in Pakistan. Has Obama's vision re-hyphenated India and Pakistan?

SM Krishna: From whatever I have read and heard about President Obama, he is a great democrat, not in the sense that he belongs to the Democrat's party but he believes in democracy.

He will be dealing with the biggest democracy in the world which is India. So India and the US have so much in common in terms of our values that we attach and the democratic values. So I think we should be working very closely with the United States.

Karan Thapar: So if I understand you correctly, you are saying that even if at the moment he has an overwhelming pre-occupation with Pakistan that won't stand in the way or it won't hinder a good close relationship with India.

SM Krishna: The US' relationship with other countries is certainly something that they will have to evaluate themselves. But as far as we are concerned, whether it is President Obama or the Secretary of State, Mrs. Hillary Clinton, I believe that they understand India's position globally speaking and India's strength in the neighbourhood and India's relevance in keeping peace and tranquility in this stable region.

Karan Thapar: Let me point out the second concern and it links in directly with your belief that both Obama and Clinton understand India's strength and its role in the region.

The former American ambassador Robert Blackwill recently in a major speech to CII said that India does not figure in an important way in US calculations regarding Afghanistan.

And you know that America is slowly but surely looking for good or moderate Taliban to incorporate into the Afghan government, something which Pakistan endorses but India has strong reservations about.

SM Krishna: I do not know how to distinguish between a good and a bad Taliban. Talibanism is certainly evil personified.

Karan Thapar: All Taliban?

SM Krishna: Yes, all Taliban are evil personified.

Karan Thapar: Precisely my point. So if President Obama believes that there is an element of the Taliban that can be won over and brought into government that would cause you great concern and disquiet?

SM Krishna: That is something which the US will have to work out with Pakistan. And we certainly will have no role in shaping that.

Karan Thapar: In fact you will keep your distance from it.

SM Krishna: But we evaluate what Talibanism is all about and we certainly will communicate to the US in our own way what we feel about it.

Karan Thapar: You will express your thinking to the US? You will not leave them in any doubt.

SM Krishna: We will communicate to them through the normal diplomatic channels and others.

Karan Thapar: A third area of concern is that America has made it clear that they would like India to sign NPT and if America itself ratifies CTBT then you will be under pressure to sign that as well. Do you think President Obama understands India's special nuclear status in the same way as George Bush understood it?

SM Krishna: Well, we presume that President Obama understands India's special status. Without reason President Bush would not have given us that kind of a status so I am sure the new administration in the US will understand the compulsions of India to not sign.

Karan Thapar: You used a very interesting phrase. You said we presume he understands India's special nuclear status. There is a certain element of doubt in that presumption, isn't there?

SM Krishna: Well, we will have to wait and see.

Karan Thapar: In the meantime have you sought an assurance from Washington that the $2.8-billion military aid that they are about to give Islamabad won't end up being used against India?

You know it has happened in the past. Obama himself, when he was a candidate, has said that it has happened. So what is the guarantee that it won't happen again?

SM Krishna: The very fact that President Obama himself has said something to that account when he was campaigning for the presidency of the US... we proceed on the basis that he understands the implications that any aid given to any country, and more particularly to Pakistan, should not be directed against India and it should not be misappropriated for anything other than for which the aid has been earmarked.

Karan Thapar: Let me end by saying there are many areas where you have presumptions about the Obama administration.

Clearly, then the meeting that you are going to have in July with Hillary Clinton is essential because this will clear everything, remove the doubts and establish a proper, firm relationship. That is a critical meeting for you.

SM Krishna: It is going to be a very important meeting and I am looking forward to it. And in the meanwhile there would be occasions when in the international gatherings there are possibilities that the Prime Minister and President Obama would be talking to each other whenever an occasion arises.

So we believe that we will be able to convey to the US our concerns, anxieties and I am sure that they would understand.

Karan Thapar: Foreign Minister, a pleasure talking to you.

SM Krishna: Thank you very much. Thank you.

357. Media Report on the Meeting between Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and Pakistan President Asif Ali Zardari. Yekaterinburg, June 16, 2009.

Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and Pakistan President Asif Ali Zardari had a formal meeting in Yekaterinburg where the two leaders had assembled to attend the Summit meeting of Shanghai Cooperation Organization. (Prime Minister was also there to attend another Summit of the BRIC countries) Terrorism was the "primary issue" which they discussed as it was evident from the remarks of the Prime Minister in the presence of the media. He said "I am very happy to meet you, but I must tell you quite frankly that I have come with the limited mandate of discussing how Pakistan can deliver on its assurances that its territory would not be used for terrorist attacks on India*."

At the meeting it was agreed that the two Foreign Secretaries should discuss this issue so that the two leaders can decide how to take the bilateral relationship forward when they meet again mid-July at the Non-Aligned summit in Egypt.

Dr. Singh's remarks at the start of the meeting in the full glare of journalists who had gathered to capture the photo-op., were significant since it was meant to be a one-on-one meeting with Mr. Zardari,

(The message delivered and duly noted by the media, officials from both sides rushed to clear the room, leaving the two principals alone for their private interaction without note takers.) Asked by reporters whether he felt Dr. Singh's remarks were acerbic, Pakistan's Foreign Minister said that he did not think so. "We all agree that we should condemn terrorism and fight against it, no matter where it comes from," he said, adding, "Be it from India, Pakistan, Britain or Africa."

Briefing the media about the 40-minute-long meeting, Foreign Secretary Shiv Shankar Menon said the two leaders reviewed the bilateral relationship * Reacting to Prime Minister Manmohan Singh's blunt message to President Asif Ali Zardari in front of the media, Islamabad on June 16 said his remarks were "unacceptable." Making a statement in the Senate or Upper House of Pakistani Parliament, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Malik Amad Khan said Dr. Singh's comments made in Russia were unacceptable. Mr. Khan said Pakistan had asked the Indian government not to resort to "aggressive media statements" and clear the air by talking directly with Pakistan instead of using the media. "I would still ask India to come to talks as engagements would be fruitful rather than estrangements," he said. "Pakistan will never allow any force to use its soil for terrorist activities directed against any country." However, Mr. Khan told journalists that Pakistan was hopeful of follow-up ministerial-level meetings in the wake of the meeting between Mr. Zardari and Dr. Singh.

"which as you know remains under considerable stress, the primary cause of which is the terrorist attacks on India from Pakistani territory."

He said the Prime Minister reiterated "the full extent of [India's] expectation" that Pakistan would take "strong and effective action" to prevent terrorists from using its soil to stage attacks, that it act against the perpetrators of past attacks and dismantle the infrastructure of terrorism on its territory.

Mr. Menon said Mr. Zardari described his government's efforts to deal with this menace "and also explained the problems that Pakistan faces in this regard."

He said the two leaders also spoke about the potential of the relations, only a small portion of which had been tapped by the dialogue process. "But since we can't wish away the factors that have disrupted the dialogue, they decided on this discussion between the two Foreign Secretaries."

New Delhi, June 24, 2009.

We have seen reports that the Pakistan Supreme Court has turned down a review petition regarding the death sentence awarded to Sarabjit Singh. We are not, however, aware of details of this judgment.

Sarabjit Singh's case has touched the sentiments of many people in India who have been following this case. We have consistently urged the Government of Pakistan to take a sympathetic and humanitarian view in this case. It is our hope that they will find it possible to do so*.

New Delhi, June 26, 2009.

EAM is having a series of bilateral meetings on the margins of the G8 Outreach meeting. He met with the Foreign Ministers of Afghanistan and Pakistan this morning and will be meeting his counterparts of the UK, Canada and Italy, among others later today and tomorrow.

Addressing the media after his meeting with H.E. Mr. Shah Mahmood Quereshi, EAM said, 'I am glad that this international conference has provided an opportunity for bilateral meeting with my counterpart from Pakistan.

As you are aware, our Prime Minister had recently met with the President of Pakistan at the margins of the SCO Summit in Russia.

Meanwhile Human Rights Activist Ansar Burney announced: "Now, I am going to file a fresh Mercy petition before the President of Pakistan tomorrow, June 25, and from my side I am confident that I will not allow Pakistan Government to hang an innocent person only on the basis that he is Non-Muslim or Indian national." Burney was earlier Pakistani federal minister for human rights, and had condemned the decision of the Supreme Court on the review petition.

The reason for the Supreme Court to dismiss the review petitions was a technical one because his lawyer, Rana Abdul Hamid, failed to appear in the case. At the last hearing Justice Rana Fayyaz Ahmed issued notice to the lawyer to appear in the case. Mr. Hamid said he could not appear in court to argue the petition because he had been appointed as the Additional Advocate-General of Punjab province, a term which now ended, and he was now free to pursue the case. "It is my information that the petitions were dismissed by default, for non-prosecution. I will file a restoration petition in the court. I have already applied for a certified copy of today's decision, and when I get that I will be filing the petition," he said. Mr. Hamid had filed four review petitions against the 2005 Supreme Court decision upholding the Lahore High Court death sentence to Sarabjit in four separate cases of terrorism. Sarabjit's other hope was pinned on the government's plan to commute all death sentences to life imprisonment to benefit an estimated 7,000 death row prisoners. But final decision on this was still pending.

In my meeting today, we have reviewed the current status of India-Pakistan relations. These have remained under considerable stress and the primary cause of this is the terrorist attacks on India, by elements based in Pakistan.

FM Qureshi and I however also agreed in our discussions today of the vast potential that exist in India-Pakistan relations. I conveyed the sentiments of our Prime Minister that we stand ready to meet Pakistan more than half way to utilize and harness that potential for our mutual benefit. At the same time, we have to address centrally why our relations come under stress recurrently.

I also conveyed therefore that the forthcoming meeting of Foreign Secretaries, as was decided by our leaders in Russia, is important as it will enable us to take stock of where we stand on the issue of terrorism and the fulfillment by Pakistan of its assurance that its territory would not be used for terrorist attacks on India."

361. Interview by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna with the Press Trust of India on Board the Special Aircraft.

July 5, 2009.

India is "very cautiously" and "responsibly" evaluating the conflicting signals emanating from Pakistan on punishing the perpetrators of the Mumbai terror attacks and is waiting for its "visible and credible" steps against them, External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna said.

Disapproving of the release of Jamaat-ud-Dawa leader Hafiz Saeed in Pakistan, he said India had not received any official communication about the Pakistan government's appeal in a higher court against his release.

"The brain behind the terror attack has been released. We have not heard about the Pakistan government going on appeal. So, in the light of that, conflicting signals are emanating from Pakistan," he told PTI on his way back from his four-day trip to Japan. India had to "very cautiously and responsibly" evaluate these signals, he said.

Asked about the "credible action" India expected from Pakistan, he said: "Well, It is very simple. We want the perpetrators of the Mumbai attacks to be brought to justice. That is the only thing India is asking for and we are waiting."

"I have repeatedly said it has to be visible and it has to be credible. There must be some commitment on the part of Pakistan that it is going after the Mumbai attackers," he said.

Mr. Krishna said that if need be, he would meet his Pakistani counterpart Shah Mehmood Qureshi on the sidelines of the Non-Aligned Movement Summit in Egypt later this month. India had never hesitated to hold talks with Pakistan at any level, he said.

On suggestions from the international community that India should talk to Pakistan, he said New Delhi had never said 'no' to talks with Islamabad.

"India has taken a very consistent position that we will talk. But we will talk about terror. We will discuss about terror. India is ever willing to talk about terror."

On U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton's visit to New Delhi later this month, Mr. Krishna said he had spoken to the American leader and was looking forward to it. He would raise the issue of terrorism emanating from Pakistan with her.

The safety of Indian students in Australia, who have been the target of frequent attacks, will figure prominently during Mr. Krishna's upcoming visit to Canberra. "Certainly, the safety and well being of our students in Australia will figure at my talks with the Australian leadership," Mr. Krishna said.

This will be the first high-level visit from New Delhi to Canberra since the attacks on Indian students sparked public outrage in India.

New Delhi, July 6, 2009.

Question: My question is related to the meeting you will hopefully have next week with your Pakistani counterpart. How exactly will the meeting be structured? I know you said only about terrorism but are you expecting the Pakistanis to give you something in writing about what exactly they are doing with regard to the Mumbai investigations?

Foreign Secretary: I think as far as my meeting with my Pakistani counterpart is concerned, it is likely to take place at Sharm-al-sheikh because I think this will be the first location where we will be get a chance to meet. We will do what we have been asked to do by our leaders which is quite clear, Pakistan will tell us what they have done, we will tell them about our concerns and we will then report to our leaders about where we stand on the issues, which for us are quite clear which is bringing the perpetrators of terrorism against India to justice and dismantling the infrastructure of terrorism in Pakistan which supports these activities. So we will report to our leaders, they will take stock of it. As they have told us they would act at Yekaterinburg and we will see where it goes from there.

* * * *

Question: Sir, petitions against the release of Hafeez Saeed were dismissed by the Pakistan Supreme Court. Your reactions to that.

Foreign Secretary: I think there are different stories as you can see. I have heard all kinds of stories. I was told petitions were filed at 12 o' clock, that it was rejected at 2:06. I was told two petitions were filed, one is being rejected, I do not want to comment, frankly, on something that is so unclear. On Friday itself, we heard four different stories of what was actually happening. Once we know, we will let you know.

* * * *

Question: Just in addition to earlier question, the discussion with your Pakistani counterpart, is it going to discuss terror in general? Taking stock is it specifically about Kabul and Mumbai?

Foreign Secretary: I think it is clear. For us it is not one incident or the other. It is the fact there is terrorism coming out of Pakistan which affects us. And that is the fact*. And that is exactly how we have defined it consistently. You must have seen at Yekaterinburg when we spoke about and thereafter and that is really the issue. This is the issue which has bothered us for many years. That is why we raised it before, that is why there are assurances on record from Pakistan about not permitting the use of its territory for terrorism against Indian in any manner and that is really we will discuss.

---

The next day on July 7, President Zardari speaking to senior bureaucrats at the President Palace said : "Let us be truthful and make a candid admission of the reality" that the militants and extremists had been deliberately created and nurtured as a policy to achieve some short term objectives. He added that "the terrorists of today were the heroes of the yester years until 9/11 occurred and they began to haunt us as well". They did not emerge because the civil bureaucracy was weak or demoralized, he said.

363. Extract relating to Pakistan from the Suo Motu Statement by External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna in Parliament (Lok Sabha & Rajya Sabha) on "Significant developments in our neighbourhood."

New Delhi, July 9, 2009.

I rise to inform the House of significant developments in our relations with three important neighbours - Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Nepal.

2. Hon'ble Members will recall the Prime Minister's remarks in this House on June 9, 2009. He had said then that it is in our vital interest to make peace with Pakistan. In our vision of a cooperative and harmonious sub-continent, the relationship between India and Pakistan can be a critical building block. The Prime Minister had also referred to our intention of meeting Pakistan more than half way, if its leaders have the courage, determination and statesmanship to take the high road to peace. These sentiments encapsulate our approach. We also recognize the importance and salience of a continued dialogue with Pakistan. However, dialogue addressing mutual concerns is premised on an atmosphere free of the threat of violence. It was with this explicit premise that the Composite Dialogue Process was restarted in 2004. Despite achievements, the dialogue and our very relationship with Pakistan have come under stress recurrently because of the license which terrorist groups have had in Pakistan to carry out attacks on India.

3. Hon'ble Members are aware of the Government of Pakistan's assurances to us at the very highest level that it would not let territories under its control to be used for attacks against India. Notwithstanding these assurances, we have been repeatedly and severely hit by a series of terrorist attacks emanating from Pakistan. It is the responsibility of the Government of Pakistan to take all such steps as are necessary to address this issue and expose and take action against the conspiracies and conspirators responsible for such attacks. Unfortunately, terrorists in Pakistan continue attacks against India.

4. When the Prime Minister met President Asif Ali Zardari of Pakistan at the margins of the SCO Summit in Russia last month, the President of Pakistan told us of Pakistan's efforts to deal with the menace of terrorism and the difficulties that they face. It was agreed that the Foreign Secretaries of India and Pakistan will discuss what Pakistan is doing and can do to prevent terrorism from Pakistan against India and to bring to justice those responsible for these attacks, including the horrendous crime of the attacks in Mumbai. After the Foreign Secretaries report, we will be able to take stock of the situation at Sharm-el-Sheikh where, at the margins of the Non-Aligned Summit, Prime Minister will be meeting the Pakistani leadership.

Q-5 - There apparently is an impasse with Pakistan, is there anything that India can do to break that impasse?

PM- I have often said India and Pakistan are close neighbours, we can choose our friends but we have no choice with regard to our neighbours. I have always believed that for India to realize its development ambitions, to realize its place in the comity of nations, requires to work with its neighbours to bring about peace and amity in South Asia. And we will do all that is necessary to resolve all outstanding issues that have bedeviled India's relations with Pakistan. But it requires credible action on the part of Pakistan to deal with terrorist elements directing their energy to disrupt and destabilize our economy and polity.

So I look forward to the meeting with Prime Minister Gilani for an exchange of views and I do hope that out of that meeting we will have a renewed reaffirmation on the part of Pakistan that they will bring the perpetrators of the Mumbai massacre to justice, that they will not allow Pakistani territory to be used for terrorist acts directed against our country. If they do that we are willing to walk more than half the distance to normalize our relations.

365. Extract from Media briefing relevant to Pakistan by Foreign Secretary on the conclusion of the NAM Summit.

Sharm el Sheikh, July 15, 2009.

Question: Mr. Menon, Did you have a meeting with the Pakistani Foreign Secretary today? It is being said that a roadmap, an agenda will be prepared for the meeting between the prime ministers of the two countries. Secondly, did you meet MR. Gilani? Was there a proposal to issue a joint statement on behalf of the two countries or their prime ministers?(Free translation from Hindi)

Foreign Secretary: Yesterday evening after I reached here I had a meeting with the Pakistan Foreign Secretary. It was for an hour and a half last evening when we met. Even today during the meeting I met him two three times outside of the meeting; and I met MR. Gilani too. It was just like shaking hands while standing in the corridor. We talked for 10-20 minute while standing; what happened, what will happen, what results will come out, this you ask me tomorrow after the meeting between the prime ministers; I will tell you all tomorrow-we are still working, the dialogue is still on, and will go on. (free translation from Hindi)

Question: Mr. Menon, if you are not going to give us details about your meeting, I want to ask you one question. A number of foreign dispatches from Correspondents talk about a level of arrogance in the Indian Delegation talking to Pakistan. If you cannot really talk with a democratically elected Government which is battling internal demons of its own, and you cannot talk with military dictators, then who can you really talk to in Pakistan? Bilawal?

Foreign Secretary: That is a 'when did you stop beating your wife?' kind of question. We have been talking to Pakistan to whoever is ruling in Pakistan steadily since 2003. So, quite frankly I do not understand the question. We have been talking to Pakistan even after the Mumbai attacks. After the Mumbai train blasts we talked to them. So, the basis on which that question is phrased I think is completely wrong. It is just false. We kept our High Commissioners in place after the Mumbai blasts. We are in communication with them. I do not think that is the issue. The question is what we discuss and what it results in. And we do have difficult issues to address. We have had in the past; we still have difficult issues to address. And that is what we are talking to them about. As far as we are concerned, it has been consistently our approach, our policy, that there is no way but dialogue to deal with these issues, either to take the relationship forward or to address the issues that might divide us.

Question: Mr. Foreign Secretary, there have been some reports that the Prime Ministers will issue a joint statement. I think that is the best case scenario of these talks. But even there were to be a joint statement, from ... (Unclear)... for example, analysts, observers have said that there are so many unresolved issues and both sides do not seem to agree on how to resolve them. For example, the handling of the Mumbai attackers. I think there are perhaps different points of view on the strength of the evidence that India has provided and the dossier that is provided. What do you think can be done to and how are these issues going to be resolved?

Foreign Secretary: There must be a question in there somewhere! Frankly, whether there is a joint statement or not, we will know tomorrow. So, it is not going to take that long. You do not have to wait that long. We will let you know tomorrow morning. But I do not think that is the issue here. The question is not the form of how we come out and brief you on what happened in the meeting. I think the issue is really how do we deal with what has brought us to this condition of a stressed relationship; and how do we see the way forward. I think all that will be answered tomorrow.

Question: Sir, you met your counterpart for 90 minutes yesterday. Is India satisfied with the progress that Pakistan has made as far as investigations are concerned?

Foreign Secretary: We had a good, detailed discussion. He told us what they have done; what they feel they can do; where they think it is going. He described the situation as he saw it. I told him of our concerns. But it was not our job at that stage to either decide - yes, this is good; this is bad; this is satisfactory. Our job was to tell each other what we thought and then to go back and report to our leaders. And we are still in the process of talking to each other. So, I do not want to say conclusively, yes, this is it, and we start drawing conclusions from it yet. This is why I am saying, you will know tomorrow. Our job is really to talk to each other, do what we were told by our leaders to do in Yekaterinburg in Russia on the 16th of June which is for them to tell us what they have done about terrorist attacks on India from Pakistan; for us to express our concerns and so on to them; and then to see the way forward and report to our leaders, which is what we are in the process of doing.

Question: Sir, how non-negotiable is the Indian decision to make the next round of dialogue, as and when it should evolve with Pakistan, limited and focused specifically on terrorism? I ask this because some sections of the Pakistan media are reporting a deadlock in Foreign Secretary talks over the issue of what the forthcoming framework of dialogue should be, Composite Dialogue on Terrorism?

Foreign Secretary: I think the less you speculate the less likely you are to go wrong. All these stories about what we are supposed to have done! We have seen a lot of stories which bear no relationship to reality. The point we have made is a more general point which is that it cannot be that the dialogue does not take into account what has happened. We have had a series of events which have happened. Now you cannot just keep doing exactly the same dialogue over and over again unless it deals with reality as we find it; and with the sources of trouble in our relationship. That is part of it. So, what we are saying here is that, let us see how we deal with this situation. We have a situation where India-Pakistan relations are stressed and they are stressed for certain reasons - because of terrorist attacks on India from Pakistan. So, we need to take that into account to see how we move forward, how we deal with that first. What I am trying to say is there is no such decision saying we will not do this, we will not do that. No. We are saying, we have a situation here; we have to see how we deal with it. All will be revealed tomorrow. You can try in various ways but you will know tomorrow anyway.

Question: Just to clarify, you said we are still in the process of talking. Are you going to meet your Pakistani counterpart?

Foreign Secretary: We have been meeting right through the day, outside, inside; and we will keep doing this. We know each other quite well. We have been in touch for a long time. So, it is not as though we need to set up a formal meeting. We can talk to each other in various ways or forms.

Question: Since the Mumbai attack there had been series of statement from the MEA and other senior ministers that until the culprits were punished, further talks were not possible. Now you are talking "how to deal with it?" Are you prepared to go a step ahead from this situation? (free translation from Hindi)

Foreign Secretary: Let me be absolutely precise. What we have always said is 'credible action to bring the perpetrators of the Mumbai attacks to justice'. That is what we have said from day two. Secondly, 'credible action to dismantle the infrastructure of terrorism in Pakistan from which attacks on India take place'. Just to be clear, because that is slightly different from what you are saying.

Question: You have said that you are going to meet today.

Foreign Secretary: No I did not say that. I said that we are in touch. We have been meeting through the day. We will stay in touch. We will keep talking.

Question : Is Pakistan willing to admit quite overtly and quite clearly that they have been sponsoring terrorism after ...

Foreign Secretary: Please ask Pakistan. I do not speak for Pakistan.

Question: Sir, does the dossier provided by Pakistan speak about ...(Unclear)... by Pakistan. Do you think it amounts to ...(Unclear)...

Foreign Secretary: As I said, I am not in a position today to say yes or no or to draw conclusions to described it As credible or not. They have given us a dossier describing what they have done. My job as Foreign Secretary is, having listened to them and got their dossier, to report to my leadership. Then we will tell you.

Question: A supplementary to this question. Does the dossier contain the identity of eight suspects identified by Pakistan as a demonstration of their commitment to investigating the Mumbai terror attacks?

Foreign Secretary: I think what it contains is the identity of five people who are under arrest, nine people who are proclaimed offenders whom they are looking for, and the names and identities of some other people who they say they are looking for who might be connected to the Mumbai attacks.

Question: Mr Menon, you have been telling them that you want credible action to dismantle terror structure. What is it that the Pakistan has been telling you in the last two days?

Foreign Secretary: Pakistan has told me, and they were quite clear about this, that they listed the actions that they have taken. They also spoke of their determination to fight terrorism. For the rest, I am sure, if you ask them they will tell you.

Question: In the past two days there have been a lot of reports on Hafiz Sayeed and that the Punjab Government there is working for the ...(Unclear)... Did it come up in the conversation? And what did the leaders say?

Foreign Secretary: It did. We are still looking for clarity, quite frankly. I believe the Punjab Government has withdrawn their appeal, but were also told that there is some other action which may be likely. So, quite frankly, we are waiting for clarity.

Question: Beyond 'good and detailed discussions' how will you characterize your meetings with your counterpart over the last 24 hours?

Foreign Secretary: Good and detailed.

Question: Beyond that.

Foreign Secretary: What else is there beyond that? Quite frankly, there is no point. I am having a discussion with my counterpart. For me that is my primary job. I am not going to negotiate through the media. I have said this to you before; I will end up, I am sure, saying it to you again. But it does not make sense. When we spoke to each other last night just before we parted, we both agreed we would not negotiate through the media.

Question: Sir, you have mentioned nine offenders in the dossier; India had always been talking of Dawood Ibrahim. Is there something about him in this dossier. (free translation from Hindi)

Foreign Secretary: We raised the issue of Indian fugitives from Indian justice who are in Pakistan. We did raise the issue.

Question: Is there a mention of this in the dossier.....(free translation from Hindi)

Foreign Secretary: There is not mention of them in the dossier. The dossier relates to Mumbai directly.

Question: I want to know what in your reckoning is a credible action against terror. How would you understand the Pakistani attempts to clean up Swat or Waziristan? Do you think it is actually dismantling of terror infrastructure? Or do you differentiate between what you are asking and what Pakistan is doing?

Foreign Secretary: I think we have been through this before. We are not in the business of laying out markers saying, "This would be credible; up to this is not credible; beyond this would be credible". We have always avoided that. When we see credible action we will know it. It speaks for itself. We would be very happy if they took the same kind of decisive action against terrorists and terrorist groups in Pakistan which operate against India as they are taking against some of the groups in Western Pakistan.

Question: Sir, once again on the dossier. Does the dossier also an ...(Unclear)... organization or any link towards to ISI?

Foreign Secretary: It does. It does include some terrorist organizations.

Question: Sir, you said that you had good and detailed discussions. What does this 'good' mean? Can you explain it a little bit? How do you describe this 'good'.

Foreign Secretary: You have to look up the dictionary I think. Quite frankly, there is no point going on asking the same question in twenty-five ways. I have made it quite clear why I will not negotiate through the media, and also why you cannot expect some great characterization of what is likely to happen tomorrow from us.

Question: Because it has not been decided yet?

Foreign Secretary: Because we are still in the middle of a conversation, and it is an ongoing conversation.

Question: Sir, beyond the Prime Minister's interaction tomorrow, have you had discussions on how the talks will go on beyond that? Do you have a way forward beyond tomorrow?

Foreign Secretary: We will let you know tomorrow.

Question: Sir, the Pakistani Foreign Secretary yesterday said that it is quite a pity that you and he had to meet in different countries - in Yekaterinburg and now here. And he said ...

Foreign Secretary: No, we did not meet there.

Question: No, you did not. That is true. He said that he would like to come to India and also said that he had extended an invitation to you. Is anything like that coming?

Foreign Secretary: We will tell you tomorrow. You know, we are just going around. You are just asking the same question in different forms. And this becomes a test of ingenuity on both sides.

Question: Just very briefly, why do you think Pakistan is not able to take credible action? Why has it not been able to take credible action for the past period? What would you like to see changed really? I ... (Unclear)... markers but in terms of willingness and ability what do you think ... (Unclear)... can achieve? Is there inability or is there a lack of willingness? What is the problem?

Foreign Secretary: I am not in the mind-reading business. I do not want to go that route that - do they want to, could they, if they would, etc. I do not want to go down that route. For me what is important is that we both know we have a problem here that we have to deal with. For us the problem is quite clear - it is terrorist attacks out of Pakistan on India - and we need to deal with that. And the Indian public opinion needs to see a clear, credible action against that. So, that is what we are discussing.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you, very much.

Foreign Secretary: Thank you.

366. Joint Statement issued at the end of the meeting between Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and the Prime Minister of Pakistan Syed Yusuf Raza Gilani.

Sharm El-Sheikh (Egypt), July 16, 2009.

The Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh and the Prime Minister of Pakistan Syed Yusuf Raza Gilani met in Sharm El Sheikh on July 16, 2009.

The two Prime Ministers had a cordial and constructive meeting. They considered the entire gamut of bilateral relations with a view to charting the way forward in India - Pakistan relations.

Both leaders agreed that terrorism is the main threat to both countries. Both leaders affirmed their resolve to fight terrorism and to cooperate with each other to this end.

Prime Minister Singh reiterated the need to bring the perpetrators of the Mumbai attacks to justice. Prime Minister Gilani assured that Pakistan will do everything in its power in this regard. He said that Pakistan has provided an updated status dossier on the investigations of the Mumbai attacks and had sought additional information/evidence. Prime Minister Singh said that the dossier is being reviewed.

Both leaders agreed that the two countries will share real time, credible and actionable information on any future terrorist threats.

Prime Minister Gilani mentioned that Pakistan has some information on threats in Balochistan and other areas.

Both Prime Ministers recognized that dialogue is the only way forward. Action on terrorism should not be linked to the Composite Dialogue process and these should not be bracketed. Prime Minister Singh said that India was ready to discuss all issues with Pakistan, including all outstanding issues.

Prime Minister Singh reiterated India's interest in a stable, democratic, Islamic Republic of Pakistan.

Both leaders agreed that the real challenge is development and the elimination of poverty. Both leaders are resolved to eliminate those factors which prevent our countries from realizing their full potential. Both agreed to work to create an atmosphere of mutual trust and confidence.

Both leaders reaffirmed their intention to promote regional cooperation.

Both Foreign Secretaries should meet as often as necessary and report to the two Foreign Ministers who will be meeting on the sidelines of the forthcoming UN General Assembly.

* Clarifying the phrase "Action on terrorism should not be linked to the Composite Dialogue process and these should not be bracketed," which caused a considerable amount of confusion, Indian officials immediately after the meeting at Sharm El Sheikh said this meant Pakistan should not wait for the resumption of the composite dialogue to take action against terrorism. Whichever way one interpreted the phrase, however, it was clear that India had been the one to link the composite dialogue with action on terrorism by suspending talks after the terrorist incidents in Mumbai and earlier in 2006. And notwithstanding the joint statement, it was evident the link remained a factor in India's eventual willingness to resume the dialogue as and when this occurred.

Indian position was buttressed by what Prime Minister told the reporters after the meeting. He had said Mr. Gilani had been keen to resume the composite dialogue "here and now." "But I said that the dialogue cannot begin unless and until the terrorist acts of Mumbai are fully accounted for and the perpetrators are brought to book." Unless this happened, he stressed, "I cannot agree and our public opinion will not agree." There was no road map for resumption yet, he said, but added: "We have an obligation to engage Pakistan."

Media reports said that Prime Minister told journalists that "I had a very good discussion with Prime Minister Gilani for more than an hour, ... At the end, we called in the two Foreign Secretaries. I asked the [Pakistani] Prime Minister to sum up what we had agreed. I then added some things and we asked them to draft a statement." Indian and Pakistani officials said the Manmohan-Gilani meeting went very well with the two principals striking a rapport with each other. But at the end of the day it was terrorism which dominated the encounter.

Regarding the mention of Balochistan, the Prime Minister denied this represented a climb down by India or a concession to Pakistan. "Mr. Gilani raised the issue of Balochistan and said people say India is active [there]. I said our conduct is an open book and that we are willing to discuss anything... If you have any evidence, we are willing to look at it. We are an open society." Dr. Singh said

Stressing that there was no change in India's stand on keeping the composite dialogue suspended, Dr. Singh said the statement asked the Foreign Secretaries to discuss the relationship and report back to their Foreign Ministers. "Apart from this, we have not made any commitment." He said he told Mr. Gilani the composite dialogue could not begin until there had been an accounting of what had happened in Mumbai and the perpetrators were in the dock. "We felt the two issues should not be and cannot be linked and this has been accepted by Pakistan," he added. "We were clear that if acts of terrorism continue [from Pakistani soil], then dialogue cannot continue, let alone the composite dialogue... And even if it starts, it cannot move forward." The reference to real-time information sharing, Dr. Singh said, resulted from India's apprehension that there might be more Mumbai-type attacks. Prime Minister Gilani told him his government was committed to acting against terrorism and that there was a political consensus in Pakistan in support of firm action. "So we agreed to share information with each other on these threats."

Dr. Singh said he raised the issue of Lashkar-e-Taiba chief Hafiz Saeed's recent release from house arrest and received an assurance from his Pakistani colleague that action would be taken against him.

Asked whether he believed the terrorists in Pakistan were "non-state actors" or had connections with the establishment, Prime Minister Singh said, "I am not accusing the present Pakistani government of involvement but as far as past history is concerned, I did say there were elements [from the establishment] that were involved. But I did not accuse the present, democratic government of Pakistan of this," he stressed.

369. Media Report of External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna's media interaction on Board the Special Flight from Phuket to New Delhi while returning from the ASEAN Regional Forum meeting.

July 23, 2009.

Speaking to journalists on board his flight from Phuket to New Delhi External Affairs Minister asked Pakistan to "go after" terrorists directing their activities against India with the "same force", as it has against the Taliban on its border with Afghanistan. External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna made this observation when asked about the perceived dichotomy in Pakistan's approach in battling terrorists on its eastern and western borders.

Mr. Krishna said India also expected Pakistan to take action against Hafiz Saeed, chief of the Jamaat-ud-Dawa, whom India believed was behind the Mumbai attacks. He pointed out that Pakistan had indicated its intention to appeal against his release, and said India would prefer to wait and see what action was actually taken against him. However, he felt that Pakistan should take action against "any terrorist" heading an organisation that "takes a position aimed against India."

India had its own method of functioning on the exchange of intelligence, and did so when it was in the "greater interest of the nation," but revealing any more details was not possible because the subject was "highly confidential," Mr. Krishna said. U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton's observation that Pakistan was showing a renewed commitment to fight against terrorism, he said, was the "U.S. perception."

Mr. Krishna disclosed that Pakistan Foreign Minister Shah Mehmood Qureshi had joined other countries at the closed-door ASEAN Regional Forum meeting, held in Phuket, in condemning terrorism, and "claimed" that his country was also a victim. "Therefore, it was willing to join hands to fight terrorism," he said.

370. Excerpts relevant to Pakistan from the speech of Prime Minister Manmohan Singh in Lok Sabha on the debate on his recent visits abroad.

New Delhi, July 29, 2009.

On India-Pakistan relations

Madam Speaker,

As I have said many times before, we cannot wish away the fact that Pakistan is our neighbour. We should be good neighbours. If we live in peace, as good neighbours do, both of us can focus our energies on the many problems - our abject poverty that confront millions and millions of people in South Asia. If there is cooperation between us, and not conflict, vast opportunities will open up for trade, travel and development that will create prosperity in both countries.

It is, therefore, in our vital interest to make sincere efforts to live in peace with Pakistan. But despite the best of intentions, we cannot move forward if terrorist attacks launched from Pakistani soil continue to kill and injure our citizens, here and abroad. That is the national position. I stand by it.

I have said time and again and I repeat it right now again: it is impossible for any government in India to work towards full normalization of relations with Pakistan unless the Government of Pakistan fulfills, in letter and spirit, its commitment not to allow its territory to be used in any manner for terrorist activities against India.

This was a commitment made as my friend Shri Yashwant Sinha has mentioned to my distinguished predecessor Shri Atal Bihari Vajpayee, and it has been repeated to me in every meeting I have had with the Pakistani leadership. The people of India expect these assurances to be honoured and this government recognizes that as the national consensus.

Madam Speaker,

The attack on Mumbai last November outraged our nation and cast a deep shadow over our relations with Pakistan. The reality and the horror of it were brought into Indian homes over three traumatic days that still haunt us. The people of India demand that this must never happen again.

Over the past seven months, we followed a policy, using all effective bilateral and multilateral instruments at our command, to ensure that Pakistan acts, with credibility and sincerity, as we would expect of any civilized nation.

Soon after the attacks, the United Nations Security Council imposed sanctions on the Lakshar-e-Tayeba and its front organizations, including the Jamaat-ud-Dawa. It also imposed sanctions on four individuals connected with the organization, including one of the masterminds behind the Mumbai attacks, Zaki-ur-Rehman Lakhvi.

We exercised great restraint under very difficult circumstances but made it clear that Pakistan must act. On 5th January 2009, we handed over to Pakistan the details of the links to Pakistan that were revealed by our investigators. Some action followed and Pakistan formally responded to us on two occasions regarding the progress of their own investigations - in February 2009 and then just two days before my departure for Paris and Sharm El Sheikh.

The latest dossier is a 34 page document that gives details of the planning and sequence of events, details of the investigations carried out by the special Federal Investigation Agency team of Pakistan, a copy of the FIR lodged and the details and photographs of the accused in custody and those declared as proclaimed offenders. It provides details of the communication networks used, financing of the operation and seizures made in Pakistan including maps, lifeboats, literature on navigational training, intelligence manuals, back packs etc.

The Pakistan dossier states that the investigation has established beyond doubt that LeT activists conspired, financed and executed the attacks. Five of the accused have been arrested, including Zaki-ur-Rehman Lakhvi and Zarar Shah, and thirteen others have been declared proclaimed offenders. A charge sheet has since been filed against them under Pakistan's Anti Terrorism Act and other relevant laws. We have been told that the investigations are nearly complete and that the trial will now proceed. We have also been asked for some further information. We will provide this shortly.

This is the first time that Pakistan has ever formally briefed us on the results of an investigation into a terrorist attack in India. It has never happened before and I repeat this is the first time. It is also the first time that they have admitted that their nationals and a terrorist organisation based in Pakistan carried out a ghastly terrorist act in India.

Madam Speaker,

The reality is that this is far more than the NDA Government was ever able to extract from Pakistan during its entire tenure despite all their tall talk. They were never able to get Pakistan to admit what they have admitted now. So the UPA government needs no lessons from the opposition on how to conduct foreign affairs or secure our nation against terrorist threats.

But while noting the steps Pakistan has taken, I have to say that they do not go far enough. We hope that the trial will make quick progress and that exemplary punishment will be meted out to those who committed this horrific crime against humanity. We need evidence that action is being taken to outlaw, disarm and shut down the terrorist groups and their front organizations that still operate on Pakistani soil and which continue to pose a grave threat to our country.

Madam Speaker,

In the final analysis, the reality is that, despite all the friends we have, and we should have as many friends as Shri Mulayam Singh ji has said, when it comes to matters relating to our national security and defence, we will have to depend on ourselves. Self-help is the best help. There is no substitute to strengthening our defence capabilities, our internal security structures and our emergency response mechanisms. I wish to assure the House that the government is giving these matters the highest priority and attention.

Several important steps have been taken to modernize, rationalize and strengthen our defence, security and intelligence apparatus. A detailed plan to address internal security challenges is being implemented in a time-bound manner. The Government is maintaining utmost vigil in the area of internal security. Measures have been taken to ensure enhanced information and intelligence sharing on a real time basis. A policy of zero-tolerance towards terrorism, from whatever source it originates, has been put in place.

In the area of defence, steps are underway to substantially improve our coastal and maritime security. Large acquisitions of major weapon systems and platforms have been approved for the modernization of our Army, Navy and Air Force. There has been a special focus to improve the welfare of the Armed Forces personnel.

We will spare no effort and no expense to defend our nation against any threat to our sovereignty, unity and integrity. This is the sacred and bounden duty of any Government of this great country.

Madam Speaker,

We do not dilute our positions or our resolve to defeat terrorism by talking to any country. Other major powers affected by Pakistan based terrorism are also engaging with Pakistan. Unless we talk directly to Pakistan, we will have to rely on third parties to do so. That route, I submit to this August House, has very severe limitations as to its effectiveness, and for the longer term the involvement of foreign powers in South Asia is not something to our liking.

I say with strength and conviction that dialogue and engagement is the best way forward.

This has been the history of our relations with Pakistan over the last decade. Shri Atal Bihari Vajpayee took a decision of political courage to visit Lahore in 1999. Then came Kargil and the hijacking of an Indian Airlines plane to Kandahar. Yet, he invited General Musharraf to Agra and again tried to make peace. The nation witnessed the terrible attack on Parliament in 2001. There followed an extremely difficult phase in our relationship. The armed forces of the two countries stood fully mobilized.

But, to his great credit, Shri Vajpayee was not deterred, as a statesman should not be. In 2004, he went to Islamabad, where a Joint Statement was issued that set out a vision for a cooperative relationship. I must remind the House that opposition parties supported these bold steps. I, for one, share Shri Vajpayee's vision, and I have also felt his frustration in dealing with Pakistan.

In my meetings with President Zardari in Yekaterinburg and with Prime Minister Gilani in Sharm El Sheikh, I conveyed, in the strongest possible terms, our concerns and expectations. I conveyed to them the deep anger and hurt of the people of India due to the persistence of terrorist attacks in India.

I told them that the operations of all terrorist groups that threaten India must end permanently. I urged them to make no distinctions between different terrorist organizations. I said that it was not enough to say that Pakistan is itself a victim of terrorism. They must show the same political will and take the same strong and sustained action against terrorist groups operating on their eastern border as they now seem to be taking against groups on their western border.

Both President Zardari and Prime Minister Gilani assured me that the Pakistan government was serious and that effective action would be taken against the perpetrators of the Mumbai carnage.

Shri Yashwant Sinha asked me what had changed between my meeting with President Zardari and the meeting with Prime Minister Gilani. In between came the dossier which showed progress though not adequate progress. Shri Sinha also asked me do we trust Pakistan. Let me say that in the affairs of two neighbours we should recall what President Reagan once said - trust but verify. There is no other way unless we go to war.

I was told that Mumbai was the work of non-state actors. I said that this gave little satisfaction and that it was the duty of their Government to ensure that such acts were not perpetrated from their territory. I told them that another attack of this kind will put an intolerable strain on our relationship and that they must take all possible measures to prevent a recurrence.

Madam Speaker,

After I returned from Sharm El Sheikh, I made a statement in Parliament, which clarified and elaborated not just the Joint Statement issued following my meeting with Prime Minister Gilani, but also what we discussed.

I wish to reiterate that the President and the Prime Minister of Pakistan know, after our recent meetings, that we can have a meaningful dialogue with Pakistan only if they fulfill their commitment, in letter and spirit, not to allow their territory to be used in any manner for terrorist activities against India. This message was repeated when the Foreign Ministers and Foreign Secretaries met.

I stand by what I have said in Parliament - that there has been no dilution of our position in this regard.

An interpretation has been sought to be given to the Joint Statement that we will continue to engage in a composite dialogue whether Pakistan takes action against terrorism or not. This is not correct. The Joint Statement emphasized that action on terrorism cannot be linked to dialogue. Pakistan knows very well that with terrorism being such a mortal and global threat, no civilized country can set terms and conditions for rooting it out. It is an absolute and compelling imperative that cannot be dependent on resumption of the composite dialogue. In the Joint Statement itself, the two sides have agreed to share real time, credible and actionable information on any future terrorist threats.

Madam Speaker,

When I spoke to Prime Minister Gilani about terrorism from Pakistan, he mentioned to me that many Pakistanis thought that India meddled in Balochistan. I told him that we have no interest in destabilizing Pakistan nor do we harbour any ill intent towards Pakistan. We believe that a stable, peaceful and prosperous Pakistan living in peace with its neighbours is in our own interest.

I told him then, and I say it here again, that we are not afraid of discussing any issue of concern between the two countries. If there are any misgivings, we are willing to discuss them and remove them.

I said to him that I had been told by the leadership of Pakistan several times that Indian Consulates in Afghanistan were involved in activities against Pakistan. This is totally false. We have had Consulates in Kandahar and Jalalabad for 60 years. Our Consulates perform normal diplomatic functions and are assisting in the reconstruction of Afghanistan, where we have a large aid programme that is benefiting the common people of Afghanistan.

But we are willing to discuss all these issues because we know that we are doing nothing wrong. I told Prime Minister Gilani that our conduct is an open book. If Pakistan has any evidence, and they have not given me any and no dossier has been given, we are willing to look at it because we have nothing to hide.

Madam Speaker,

I believe that it is as much in Pakistan's vital interest as it is in ours to make peace. Pakistan must defeat terrorism, before being consumed by it. I believe the current leadership there understands the need for action.

I was told by the parliamentarians who accompanied Prime Minister Gilani that there is now a political consensus in Pakistan against terrorism. That should strengthen the hands of its leaders in taking the hard decisions that will be needed to destroy terrorism and its sponsors in their country.

Madam Speaker,

Our objective, as I said at the outset, must be a permanent peace with Pakistan, where we are bound together by a shared future and a common prosperity.

I believe that there is a large constituency for peace in both countries. The majority of people in both countries want an honourable settlement of the problems between us that have festered far too long and want to set aside the animosities of the past. We know this, but in the past there have been hurdles in a consistent pursuit of this path. As a result, the enemies of peace have flourished. They want to make our alienation permanent, the distance between our two countries an unbridgeable divide. In the interests of our people, and in the interest of peace and prosperity of South Asia, we must not let this happen.

That is why I hope and pray that the leadership in Pakistan will have the strength and the courage to defeat those who want to destroy, not just peace between India and Pakistan, but the future of South Asia. As I have said before, if they show that strength and that courage, we will meet them more than half way.

There are uncertainties on the horizon, and I cannot predict the future in dealing with neighbours, two nuclear powers. We have to begin to trust each other, but not blindly, but trust and verify. People say that we have broken the national consensus. I refuse to believe that we have broken the national consensus.

For the present we have agreed that the Foreign Secretaries will meet as often as necessary and report to the two Foreign Ministers who will meet on the sidelines of the United Nations General Assembly. The two Foreign Ministers have met even before the Joint Statement in Trieste. I met President Zardari in Russia. So in operational terms the effect of the Statement that the two Foreign Secretaries will meet as often as necessary followed by the Foreign Ministers is no more than what we are doing at present. Does it involve surrender or a sign of weakness?

As neighbours it is our obligation to keep our channels open. Look at what is happening in the world. The US and Iran have been sworn enemies for thirty years, and yet they feel compelled to enter into a dialogue. Unless we want to go to war with Pakistan, dialogue is the only way out. But we should do so on the basis of trust but verify*.

* The same day Pakistan Prime Minister Yusuf Raza Gilani reacting to the PM's statement said that he reciprocated the sentiments for peace expressed by Prime Minister Manmohan Singh in his address to the Lok Sabha. He said: "At Sharm-el-Sheikh, we had useful talks and a good meeting of minds. We had agreed that terrorism was a common threat. We also agreed that dialogue is the only way forward. The Indian Prime Minister has rightly emphasised the importance of honourable settlement of the outstanding issues between India and Pakistan. I commend Dr. Manmohan Singh for his bold vision of peace and prosperity in South Asia and the statesmanship that he has demonstrated."

371. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs confirming handing over of Additional Evidence to Pakistan on Mumbai terror attack.

New Delhi, August 1, 2009.

On the 11th of July 2009, Pakistan had provided to us, a dossier providing an update on investigations in Pakistan into the terrorist attack on Mumbai.

A request had been made in it for further evidence. A detailed dossier of evidence has been provided today to the Pakistan High Commission*.

---

* Media report said that the evidence now provided was a seven-page dossier and underlined that it had given Islamabad enough proof to prosecute Jamaat-ud Dawa (JuD) chief Hafiz Saeed, the alleged mastermind of the carnage. The report quoted Intelligence sources to say the dossier also contained transcripts of wireless intercepts during the Mumbai attacks in which Saeed's name kept figuring. In Islamabad the Foreign Office spokesman Abdul Basit had said on July 30 that New Delhi's replies to Pakistan's latest questions were "not really enough" to proceed legally against the Jamat-ud-Dawa leader. Media reports said that the questions that Pakistan asked did not specifically relate to Mr. Saeed but to the nitty-gritty of the Mumbai investigation. It sought certified statements from officials involved in various aspects of the investigation, plus the interrogation statements of two Indians accused in the attacks, Sabhauddin and Fahim Ansari. At the weekly Foreign Office briefing, Mr. Basit persisted in response to a question that in the Hafeez Saeed case, Pakistan was proceeding in accordance with its own laws but "the material [contained in the dossier handed over by India last week] apropos Hafiz Saeed is not really enough and it does not strengthen our hands to proceed legally against him." In view of Pakistan's persistence that India had not provided sufficient evidence about the involvement of Hafiz Saeed, India denying this allegation maintained that five dossiers submitted since November last year to Pakistan provided "comprehensive" and "detailed" information to justify his prosecution.

372. Special Mention in the Lok Sabha regarding talks with Pakistan.

New Delhi, August 4, 2009.

Note: The transcript in italics is free translation of the Hindi text.

Shri Lal Krishna Advani (Bharatiya Janata Party): Madam Chairperson, a little while back, our colleague Shri Mulayam Singh Yadav had raised a very serious topic. And the subject while being discussed, one important point that came across was that in the last few days many joint statements came and they were debated as well. One joint statement caused a lot of anguish to the members of the house. But yesterday a statement was given by the foreign minister. That statement was given not in the House but outside the House. A lot of people can confirm what was said. Today in the House, this issue was brought up Shri Mulayam Singh Yadav with reference to Hafiz Saeed. Today we all have read in the Times of India's morning paper the statement given by the Foreign Minister to that paper in an exclusive interview. In the interview given to the Times of India, he has said,

"We know for a fact that Hafiz Saeed is the mastermind of Mumbai attacks."

He has said this. We all remember very well the three ghastly days of last November, the Mumbai attacks which was seen by the whole country and the whole world. It almost felt as if India was being attacked. The whole attack had been masterminded by Hafiz Saeed who is the chief of the Lashkar-E-Toiba and who has been pronounced as a terrorist by the UN Security Council. Despite this, the Pakistani government put an end to the action that was being taken against him, even in the court. On this S.M.Krishna said,

"Regardless of how many times the PMs or the Foreign Ministers meet or the Foreign Secretaries meet, it will have no impact."

And that is why he has said that,

"All talks are futile till Islamabad gives positive indication of tackling terror."

Now this House would like to know that as per the statement given by our Prime Minister with Mr. Gilani that terrorism will be delinked from dialogue, will our secretaries keep meeting and keep going forward. The Foreign Minister made the statement not in the House but outside, exclusively to the Times of India that 'Talks' have no meaning. Till Pakistan does not take action against terror, this delinking that the Prime Minister has said, it contradicts it in a way. And I am happy it contradicts. If he has given the statement after thinking about it properly, it would be nice if the Prime Minister also confirms it. Madam chairperson, you stopped the proceedings of the House for ½ an hour and so I thought that after that the Prime Minister himself will come to the House or atleast the foreign Minister will come and repeat the statement that he has given outside the House to the House as well because the parliament session is on and it is necessary to state the same in parliament. The last time there was a lot of discussion on this issue. I request that either the Prime Minister or the Foreign Minister come to the House immediately and confirm this.

We think that it is useless for the Secretaries to talk to each other till further information is received on Hafiz Saeed who has become a kind of touchstone, Saeed's trial has become the acid test for Pakistan. Because of what the Foreign Minister has now said All talks are futile until action is taken. We would welcome it if either the Prime Minister or the Foreign Minister came to the House and gave this statement again to the House.

Shri Sanjay Nirupam (Mumbai North): Honourable Madam Chairperson, the terrorist attack that took place in Mumbai on 26 November, that definitely is unforgettable. After that the Indian government took a decision that till Pakistan takes some action against these kind of terrorists, till then we will not have any dialogue. Ill the time Pakistan does not remove all the terrorist training camps on its soil and destroys them completely, there is no meaning for dialogue. I think it is the first time that the Indian government has nailed Pakistan on the international forum and Pakistan is left standing alone and in this pressure it has really taken some concrete action against terrorism. In the last few months Pakistan has taken the same kind of action that we have been taking over the past few years and Pakistan is troubled. ....(Interruption)

Madam Chairperson: Please settle down.

Shri Sanjay Nirupam (Congress): We listened to your leader patiently.....(Interruption)

MADAM SPEAKER: Nothing will go on record except what Shri Sanjay Nirupam is saying.

(Interruptions) ... (Not recorded)

Shri Sanjay Nirupam: Madam Speaker, the whole world knows that Pakistan is fighting with terrorists such as Betulla Masud. Benazir Bhutto their former Prime minister lost her life to terrorism.

Shri Rakesh Singh : Why are you advocating Pakistan's story?

Shri Sanjay Nirupam: I am not advocating Pakistan.....(Interruption) please don't worry. I am a more patriotic Indian than you. ....(Interruption) We also have patriotism, I am also nationalist. When Mumbai was attacked, the first person to reach Taj Hotel was Sanjay Nirupam, nobody came from either Shiv Sena or the BJP.....(Interruption) Madam, it cannot be denied that Hafiz Saeed is the mastermind of the Mumbai attacks and Pakistan has to book Hafiz Saeed, this is a demand that I also make on behalf of my country, my party and my government. In the last few days I read in the newspapers that our Home Minister has said a fourth dossier has been sent in respect of Hafiz Saeed. If possible please send more dossiers. Let Pakistan do whatever is required but it should not leave Hafiz Saeed, we have to keep continuous pressure on them so that the people responsible for the Mumbai attacks are punished and handed over to the law. For the exchange of all that information, dialogue is necessary. This dialogue will be at the level of foreign secretary, foreign minister but information sharing is important as we are neighbouring states. This used to be said by Panditji that we can change our friends but we cannot change our neighbours. When the neighbourhood is in trouble, there are terrorist activities happening, then we have to exchange information and for that purpose dialogue is important. But on other issues, dialogue cannot become normal till the time Pakistan does not take strict action and remove all trace of all the terrorist organizations which have been targeting India over the years. And that is why I would like to on behalf of the government, on behalf of the people of Mumbai demand that Hafiz Saeed be arrested and measures should be taken by the Pakistan government for punishing him. This I would like to request the Indian government also. Thank you.

Shri Sharad Yadav (Janata Dal - United): Madam chairperson, I will not repeat all that has been said by Mulayam Singh Yadav, Advani ji and Shri Yashwant Sinha. The ink has not yet dried on the joint statement between Indian Prime Minister and Pakistani Prime Minister and it is being talked about, the reason being that Pakistan had well and truly been put in the dock and a world environment had been created where it was fully proved that India had been facing repeated and continuous inhuman terrorist attacks from Pakistan and the world had started believing in it finally. The whole world had criticized Pakistan and had it cornered. Sharm-el-sheikh and the mention of Baluchistan is totally against the national consensus. Today it has been proved in the case of Hafiz Saeed. The Indian government has handed over a dossier to Pakistan. And the ink has not dried on the statement when the Indian government, the foreign minister has come out with a statement that there is no meaning for dialogue because Hafiz Saeed, the acid test, who has to be captured and punished has been declared the most honoured person by the Pakistan government. I would only like to present to the house our view that the world opinion and the environment that had been created in the world against Pakistan has got a severe jolt with the Sharm-el-sheikh statement and the foreign minister calls it the acid test. We reiterate that the Sharm-el-sheikh statement is against the national interest.

Madam, the parliament is in session and the foreign minister gives statement outside, we don't have problems with that because he had to give a reply at that time but the government should by itself give clarification regarding sequence of events and that we do not think our statement of delinking dialogue and terrorist activities, is right. They should say here that now dialogue will not happen. As the leader of the opposition has demanded, I support and endorse the view that the foreign minister or the Prime Minister should clarify the issue. With these words I conclude.

Shri Lalu Prasad (Rashtriya Janata Dal): Madam Chairperson, Shri Mulayam Singh Yadav has raised his party's concerns and not just his own. These are concerns of national interest. The person who created havoc in our country, each and every child of our country knows that the mastermind of the Mumbai attack was Hafiz Saeed. I don't oppose dialogue between two countries, in fact, there has to be dialogues between governments, there are no two ways about it. But the Indian government is going on saying, repeatedly saying that we have given a dossier with all the proof to Pakistan that he is the mastermind, he should be captured and he should be handed over to the authorities for punishment. But will they take action? I have been seeing that the Indian government has been by its statements and actions entangled itself more and more and not learned from its mistakes. There is a saying that a person who burns his mouth with boiling milk, dreads even the buttermilk. But we are not being careful. The statement of the foreign minister as given to Times of India has come. Now it could happen that the Times of India goes back on its words and says this was not said, we did not say this but the whole country has read and the message has gone out loud and clear that the Pakistan government has shown the Indian government the mirror. The government over there has clearly dent out the message that they hold Hafiz Saeed in esteem. This should make us think that and analyse what has happened. It is clear to everybody about what has happened. We are not against the Pakistani people nor friendship with our neighbours, we should have dialogue but we are repeatedly getting hit, battered and still putting up with this behaviour and on this the honourable prime Minister or Foreign minister should clarify their stand. This is the opinion of Mulayam ji, Sharad ji and Mr. Advani has brought up this issue and it is not only his issue. If he had talked about Jai Shri Ram, we would have kept sitting. I repeat that the government should clarify their stand on this issue. What is the truth behind it? Please tell the truth. What action are you going to take? .....(Interruption)

Shri Anant Kumar (Bharatiya Janata Party: Lalu ji, the minister of state for foreign affairs has come but foreign minister has not come.....(Interruption)

Madam Chairperson: Please don't talk amongst yourself.

.....(Interruption)

Shri Lalu Prasad (Rashtriya Janata Dal): He will inform the foreign minister. ... (Interruption) What is the plan of action that the Indian government propose to take. It is a question of India's self-respect. How can India be satisfied till the person who has done a crime, he is not punished and brought to book. The wrong message is going. A lot of important leaders have requested and I also add my voice to the request since it is a question of the country. The country is getting demoralized. Hence the request to the Prime minister or the foreign minister to clarify the issue as it is affecting the country's confidence.

Madam Speaker: This matter is over. I will now take up other matters under 'Zero Hour'. ... ..(Interruptions)

Smt. Sushma Swaraj: He has asked for reply. How can the matter get over like that. ....(Interruption)

Shri Lal Krishna Advani (Bharatiya Janata Party: We knew it officially that you will yourself call them.....(Interruption) At the time the leader of the House is also not present.....(Interruption) There is no issue left for the government. ....(Interruption)

Smt. Sushma Swaraj: The Parliamentary affairs minister is sitting here, he will know. ....(Interruption)

Shri Ananth Kumar: We want a reply from the government... ..(Interruption)

Shri Jagdamba Pal : All you leaders have been given an opportunity, please give the same to us.....(Interruption)

Madam Speaker: I cannot compel the Government to give the reply.

... (Interruptions)

Shri Lal Krishna Advani: The foreign minister should reply....(Interruption)

Smt. Sushma Swaraj: This way the matter is getting more confusing. We would like to know if the Prime Minister agrees with the foreign minister's statement. Or has the Foreign minister overruled the Prime Minister? .....(Interruption)

Shri Ananth Kumar: Does this government have collective responsibility or not? .....(Interruption)

Smt. Sushma Swaraj: Has the Foreign minister overruled the Prime Minister? .....(Interruption)

Madam Speaker: It is a matter of 'Zero Hour'. I cannot compel the Government to respond.

.....(Interruption)

Shri Mulayam Singh Yadav: The government has not clarified on this issue and hence we are walking out in protest.

(Following which Sri Mulayam Singh Yadav and some other honourable members went out of the House)

Shri Lalu Prasad Yadav: The government is not answering the questions raised on this issue and hence we walkout in protest.

(Following which Shri Lalu Prasad Yadav and some other honourable members went out of the House)

Smt. Sushma Swaraj: Is the prime minister in agreement with the foreign minister's statement or has the foreign minister overruled the Prime Minister? The government should tell us. The House has become literally like a house.....(Interruption)

Shri L.K.Advani: This cannot end here. Today they don't want to accept that....(interruption) but I am basically saying that either you announce when the Prime Minister or foreign Minister will be issuing clarifications. If they don't give then for the time being they can give a statement outside the house .....(Interruption) The Prime Minister says one thing and the foreign minister says another thing. I consider this wrong. They should come to the House and say the same thing. ....(Interruption) But I am against this.....(Interruption)

Smt. Sushma Swaraj: *This is an insult to the parliament.....(Interruption)
They talk to the newspapers but don't talk here.....(Interruption) If they say here, it will get recorded into the minutes and proceedings.....(Interruption) Please call the foreign minister.*

Shri Ananth Kumar (Bangalore South) This is not right .....(Interruption)

Madam Speaker: Nothing will go on record.

(Interruptions) ... (Not recorded)

Madam Speaker: I cannot compel the Government to respond. Let me take up other matters of the 'Zero Hour'. Shri M.I. Shanavas.

Shri Lal Krishna Advani: We walkout in protest of this.

(Following which Shri L.K.Advani and some other members walked out of the House)

373. Interview of National Security Advisor with Siddharth Varadarajan of the daily The Hindu.*New Delhi, August 29, 2009.

Seeking to draw a line under the controversy surrounding last month's meeting between Manmohan Singh and Yusuf Raza Gilani, National Security Adviser M.K. Narayanan replied in the negative when asked whether the Sharm el-Sheikh summit between the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan had been a step forward. "But," he hastened to add, "it certainly wasn't a step backward."

The inclusion of Balochistan in the joint statement had made many critics see red but Mr. Narayanan was categorical that it made no difference to India's position. Asked whether there were any scenarios where he felt India might regret the B-word, the NSA said no. "Frankly, we don't see the reference to Balochistan as something culpatory, that there is something we are doing." Mr. Gilani brought up the subject and this was mentioned in the statement. "Now whether we should have put out a complete rebuttal in the joint statement - well, it is a joint statement and it becomes difficult sometimes to put all these things down."

Asked whether he would rather see the reference wasn't there, the NSA replied: "I don't think it makes much of a difference. Well, if it was not there, probably somebody could not even mention it ... But they mention it all the time anyway." Pakistani leaders keep telling all the foreign dignitaries they meet that India is involved in Balochistan, he said. "They've made it a point to say our consulates in Afghanistan are involved in Balochistan and Waziristan. So it's not as if they haven't been saying these things." India, he said, is very clear. "We are not involved in Balochistan. Not because of anything else, but because it just doesn't make sense ... to do the kind of thing that the Pakistanis accuse us of - putting a few bombs here, bursting something else. So somebody can always use it, to say, 'Oh, there is some reference to Balochistan.' But so what"? Mr. Narayanan added that "most of the western intelligence agencies who have the capabilities know we are not involved there."

The NSA attributed the progress Pakistan had made so far in investigating the Mumbai case to American pressure. Asked if he'd expected Islamabad to do as much as it had, he said, "We didn't. But we knew that if the Americans leaned on them, they would. And, therefore, most of our effort at the high level, at least from my side ... was primarily to get them to lean on the Pakistanis." India knew that whatever it said or did, the Pakistanis would do little. "I think the Americans certainly helped a lot... Since their nationals were also killed, [we told them] this was as much an attack on you as it is on us." Thanks to the FBI and CIA, he said, "the Pakistanis were more forthcoming in accepting some of the basics." But he said he did not expect them to go any further on the investigative front. "They've done just enough to take the heat off them from the West. I think that's where we are."

Acknowledging that sections of the Pakistani establishment had begun recognising the threat terrorism posed to Pakistan itself, Mr. Narayanan expressed concern about the fact that only the Tehreek-e-Taliban Pakistan and its allied groups were being seen as a problem across the border and not the Lashkar-e-Taiba and Jaish-e-Mohammed. "Of course, we don't want Pakistan to become a fundamentalist state - but what is our primary interest? That we do not want another group to come out of Pakistan and attack us. And that will come from the Lashkar, Jaish and so on. And nothing has happened. We've seen no evidence of any of that. And if the information that is coming our way is any index, there's been little let up on this. Of course, some sections [of the Pakistani establishment] will be concerned about the growth of fundamentalism and extremism, but this is not translating into taking action against what I would call the 'Punjab group' which is basically attacking us."

Pakistan was approaching the threat posed by terrorist groups from a "purely military standpoint," the NSA said. "And the military takes them item by item. 'Which is the group that is our main enemy now? The main enemy is the TTP and those groups involved in Swat, Waziristan, FATA etc. This other group is not causing us trouble. There is no evidence of any LeT attack [against us]'. Of course, umbilical connections between all these groups are emerging. In a more orderly society, I think they would say, let's nip it in the bud before it becomes a problem in the Punjab, which is the real heartland of Pakistan. But we've seen no evidence of this. I can't say whether they are thinking about this. We can only go by actions."

The NSA was dismissive of Pakistan's latest request for India to provide information about the terrorist threats the Prime Minister spoke about recently. Laughing, he said, "It's kind of like telling the robber where the jewels are, literally, I mean, if you tell them how we come by this information, what the source is!"

He said that at this time "it is very difficult to engage in this." India's principal aim was "not to assuage Pakistan's concerns" but to ensure something does not take place on its soil. The joint anti-terror mechanism had been a

"leap of faith" on the part of the Prime Minister but it collapsed soon after it was set up. Mr. Narayanan said not all intelligence came from "deep penetration sources." A lot of information about terror threats came from electronic intercepts by India, the U.S., Britain and others. "Now, to say the Pakistanis alone have never been able to intercept anything of this kind and something has [to be shared], you see, it puts a big question mark on the bona fides to say, please share it with us. Now whatever we have shared in the past, nothing has happened."

Reminded about the Sharm el-Sheikh statement's reference to sharing real time, credible information about threats, Mr. Narayanan said India "will provide real time information but it is part of an intent." If relations improved and India saw Pakistan taking action against the LeT and JeM, it could pass on information. But in any case, the expectation from the joint statement is that each country would inform the other about threats emanating from its territory, the NSA clarified. "If something is happening on their soil, who should be having that information? It's that country's intelligence agencies who should be monitoring this and passing on the information to us. And if we have information about something going to take place in Pakistan, we should be sharing it with them. That is what is real time [sharing]. For India to tell Pakistan, 'We believe someone is going to attack us,' is really not the intention. They are supposed to pass on to us real time intelligence, that 'We understand something of this kind is going to happen, please take precautions, please take necessary care'."

374. Interview of Home Minister P. Chidambaram with Barkha Dutt for the NDTV programme 'The Buck Stops Here'.

New Delhi, September 6, 2009.

[India cannot rule out the involvement of Pakistan's state actors in the 26/11 attack, says Home Minister P Chidambaram. Mr Chidambaram, who was in the NDTV studios and speaking exclusively on the show The Buck Stops Here, said that for Pakistan to not act against Hafiz Saeed is atrocious. Sharing, for the first time, details of the exact role that the Lashkar-e-Toiba chief played in the attacks. He said there was evidence that Saeed was involved in training Ajmal Kasab and others to fire on targets. These details and Islamabad's failure to act against Saeed will be raised by the Home Minister in his talks with senior American officials later this week. Chidambaram said Pakistan was simply inventing new questions and it would be a charade for them to keep asking for more dossiers.]

Some excerpts from the interview with Home Minister P Chidambaram:

On Pakistan, Hafiz Saeed, and US visit:

Barkha Dutt: When Hillary Clinton was here and when we asked her about Hafiz Saeed, at that point the Pakistan government had actually appealed against the court order which said that he need not be arrested. But since then, as you have said yourself several times nothing has moved on the arrest of Hafiz Saeed. Now is that some thing you will raise with Washington that Washington need to weigh upon Islamabad that it has to act against hafiz Saeed?

Mr. Chidambaram: Well if there is an opportunity I will take them through the dossier. It has already been shared with many countries.

Barkha Dutt: 16 countries I think.

Mr. Chidambaram: Yes, including US so they know what we have. If there is an opportunity I will take them through the dossier to point out that there is enough evidence to continue the case against Hafiz Saeed. In the face of this evidence to let him off, I think is atrocious.

Barkha Dutt: And that is something you will communicate to Washington.

Mr. Chidambaram: Well it has been communicated but I am sure there will be an opportunity to discuss that.

Barkha Dutt: You say there is enough evidence in the sixth dossier. What is the nature of the evidence against Hafiz Saeed?

Mr. Chidmabaram: Well I am not going to read out the dossier to you. But I will highlight some things. Firstly we know when Kasab first met Hafiz and where. We know what Hafiz Saeed told the trainees. We know at least a couple of places where the training took place. And that Hafeez Saeed visited these camps. We know that it was Hafiz Saeed who gave names to buddy pairs. The final farewell call was made by Hafiz and Hafiz Saeed even tested Kasab and others on their training achievements.

Barkha Dutt: When you say he tested them you mean he ran them through some kind of drill?

Mr. Chidmabaram: Well he asked them to fire some targets. We know that the final instructions were given by Hafiz Saeed. So all these things are known - places, approximate dates, names, visits made by Hafiz Saeed. Now in the face of these evidence how does the prosecutor say that I have no leads to continue the investigation?

Barkha Dutt: And when Islamabad say that even this evidence is inadequate. They have more questions they say?

Mr. Chidmabaram: Well if they want to invent questions they are welcome to do so. But I think that they have come to the end of the road. They cannot invent more questions. We have answered all their questions in the successive dossiers. It's now time to take these leads and do a proper traditional investigation. Arrest the person, take him to these places and ask the person questions. I mean just the ground work of investigation which any inspector will know how to do.

Barkha Dutt: Can you share some more details? When you say that actually Hafiz Saeed asked Kasab to fire at the targets and that he was part of the last training? Can you share some more details?

Mr. Chidmabaram: Well we know that he was accompanied by a person who was described as "major gen saab". Hafiz Saeed told a person to set up 10 targets and he asked each of the selected terrorist to fire at the targets. We know that Kasab fired target number four. Now is this not enough detail to take up the investigations?

Barkha Dutt: You say Hafiz Saeed was accompanied by a "major general sahab". Is it the assessment of the Home Ministry that it this is a serving or retired Pakistani army officer?

Mr. Chidmabaram: We don't know.

Barkha Dutt: But it's possible?

Mr. Chidmabaram: He could be serving; he could be retired.

Barkha Dutt: But definitely an army officer? Or is it just a name, a nick name?

Mr. Chidmabaram: Well very unlikely. He should have been a Major General at some time.

Barkha Dutt: So does it concern you that at some point this could link to someone in the Pakistan army?

Mr. Chidmabaram: Well that can only be revealed by the investigation. We have never ruled out state actors although Pakistan has always maintained that there are only non-state actors involved. We have never ruled out state actors and we have never accepted this distinction between state actors and non state actors as both operate from Pakistan soil.

Barkha Dutt: If you are not ruling out the involvement of state actors and you have gone on record saying that Pakistani government is deliberately stifling the probe, is it your assessment that the state of Pakistan is somewhere involved in covering up for 26/11?

Mr. Chidmabaram: No, no. Covering up is a strong word but there is for some strange reasons an unwillingness to take the investigations forward. What they told the common friendly countries; what they have told the Prime Minister is that they will spare no effort to prosecute and punish the perpetrators. In the light of that, letting off Hafiz is unacceptable. And I don't know who else is involved. There is a major general sahab for example. So unless there is a proper investigation I am not in a position to say that Pakistan intends to keep its promise. Why they are unwilling to take the investigation forward I cannot say.

Barkha Dutt: Is there any information available with your intelligence agencies that there could be any involvement of state actors in 26/11 and thereafter?

Mr. Chidmabaram: Investigations will establish whether the state actors were involved or not but I am not ruling out the possibility.

Barkha Dutt: Now when you say that at this stage Pakistan is merely inventing new question can we take it to mean that there will not be more dossiers? Was the sixth dossier the last dossier?

Mr. Chidmabaram: How can I say that. If they do invent more questions...

Barkha Dutt: You will continue to answer them?

Mr. Chidmabaram: I will answer them with a growing sense of frustration. I still have to answer them. Shouldn't I?

Barkha Dutt: Well some would say that if the Home Minister has decided that there are no more questions to answer them then why continue with the whole process of multiple dossiers?

Mr. Chidmabaram: I know its a charade.

Barkha Dutt: You acknowledge its a charade?

Mr. Chidmabaram: After a point it's a charade. But I don't want to give them any quarter to say that answers are not forthcoming therefore we are not investigating.

375. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on Indian protest to Pakistan against the "Gilgit-Baltistan Empowerment and Self Governance Order -2009".

New Delhi, September 11, 2009.

The Government of India protested through diplomatic channels today against the Government of Pakistan's so called "Gilgit-Baltistan Empowerment and Self Governance Order -2009".

Pakistan has for the past six decades denied the basic democratic rights to the people in those parts of the state of Jammu and Kashmir under its illegal occupation. The entire state of Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of India by virtue of its accession in 1947. The so called "Gilgit-Baltistan Empowerment and Self Governance Order -2009" is yet another cosmetic exercise intended to camouflage Pakistan's illegal occupation.

* Indian protest was directed against a package of measures announced by Pakistan ostensibly aimed at giving the Northern Areas of Gilgit-Baltistan a measure of administrative and political autonomy. The Pakistan Cabinet approved the measures, known as the Gilgit-Baltistan Empowerment and Self-Governance Order 2009, at a special meeting on August 29. The new order appeared to give the status of a province to the areas without any constitutional propriety. The region is to be renamed Gilgit-Baltistan, and will vote for a legislative assembly. A Chief Minister will govern the region, replacing direct rule by Islamabad. It is to have a "supreme appellate court" to be headed by a chief judge, a public service commission, a chief election commissioner, and an auditor-general. The Northern Areas were part of the erstwhile princely State of Jammu and Kashmir and on its joining India on Indian independence legally became part of India and were being illegally held by Pakistan like the POK.

However, the Indian protest was rejected by Pakistan. A statement from the Foreign Ministry said the Deputy High Commissioner of India, Rahul Kulshreshth, was called in "to emphasise that Pakistan rejects the Indian protest, as the Government of India has no locus standi in the matter.

377. Questions Relevant to Pakistan replied at the media briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on the Prime Minister's visit to Pittsburg for the G-20 Summit.
New Delhi, September 19, 2009.

Question: Madam, I just wanted to ask you if you have been able to fix a date for the meeting with the Pakistani Foreign Secretary, and if there is a date fixed for the meeting between the two Foreign Ministers in New York.

Foreign Secretary: We are working to fix the dates for the meetings of the Foreign Secretaries and the Foreign Ministers in New York, that is the meetings with Pakistan, and we are in the process of finalising these dates.

Question: Madam, I am going to back to Pakistan. We have heard from Mr. Qureshi recently. He says he does not have any expectations from the meeting in New York. What are the expectations Mr. Krishna and the Ministry have of that meeting?

Foreign Secretary: Our expectations are that Pakistan should focus seriously, in a concentrated and meaningful manner, on our concerns regarding the issue of terrorism that is directed against India from within Pakistani territory. And this has been consistently stated to the Pakistani side with sincerity, in all detail, by the Government of India and all the officials concerned. It is our expectation, it is our hope that Pakistan will address these concerns in full seriousness and full commitment so that the desired outcome can be reached.

* The 7,000 MW project, estimated to cost $6 billion to $7 billion is expected to be financed by China. It may be recalled that when President Asif Ali Zardai visited Beijing in August he had signed a memorandum of understanding with Beijing for this Project.

Question: Pakistan has repeatedly said that continued stalled Composite Dialogue between the two countries would help those elements who are opposed to peace in South Asia. Secondly, Pakistan has said that any precondition to talks would not help any side and not acceptable to Pakistan. What are your comments?

Foreign Secretary: First of all let me say that engagement between India and Pakistan obviously works in the long-term interest of both countries, and there is obviously a potential that exists for that. But, let me also add that we cannot shut our eyes to the threat that exists in terms of terrorism directed against India from Pakistan and the Composite Dialogue is contingent, that process is contingent on an atmosphere free of terrorism and violence. Realising the potential is really not the issue here because the first step we need to take is to squarely address the issue of terrorism.

Question: ...My second question is that there have been repeated ceasefire violations at the borders by Pakistan. I am asking this question because yesterday DG BSF said that we are approaching Ministry of External Affairs to lodge a strong protest with Pakistan. Are we doing it?

Foreign Secretary: .....As far as the question on cross-border firing is concerned, in fact there are certain objective circumstances which you have just referred to. There have been incidents of ceasefire violations apart from infiltration also from the Pakistani side of the Line of Control, which has been at a very high level in the last few weeks. There were cases of rockets being fired across the Punjab border and thereafter there was sniper firing at Border Security Force posts yesterday. There are, of course, mechanisms to deal with this and the DGMOs of the two countries have been in touch, as also flag meetings have been held. But the general issue is that it is the responsibility of Pakistan to see that whoever may be responsible for this from their side should not have the licence to carry out such acts which destabilise the situation.

378. Extract Relevant to Pakistan from the Interview of National Security Advisor M. K. Narayanan with Karan Thapar for the TV Channel CNN-IBN.

New Delhi, September 20, 2009.

Karan Thapar: Let us come to Pakistan*; at Sharm-el-Sheikh the Prime Minister agreed that dialogue was the only way forward and that the two foreign secretaries should meet as often as necessary. But six week later he said relations with Pakistan are currently not conducive for the two sides to have talks at any level.

To many people that sounds as if he has done a complete U-turn?

M K Narayanan: I think what the Prime Minister at Sharm-el-Sheikh said is clearly the policy that is laid down; that dialogue is the way forward. We are not talking in terms of a conflict with Pakistan. Now it depends on what context this particular statement is made.

The whole problem is that you can take a statement out of context. I think even with regard to Sharm-el-Sheikh people took certain words or lines out of context and it can give a different meaning.

I think quite clearly dialogue is the way forward. At the moment, the issue is the dialogue should be essentially confined to discussing terrorism. We need comfort on this issue. Apart from Mumbai there are other issues and therefore we will not expand the range or the scope of the dialogue till there is a fair amount of comfort. That is more or less the context in which the statements have been made by the prime minister or others.

Karan Thapar: So you are saying to me that media reports or suggestions that the Prime Minister, because of the criticism he faced over the Sharm-el-Sheikh statement, has perhaps lost his nerve or changed his mind--that is not the case?

M K Narayanan: Many people know the Prime Minister better than I do. But I think there is steel in the Prime Minister.

Karan Thapar: And he is committed to dialogue?

M K Narayanan: When he says something he stands by it. He is committed to the dialogue; he also understands the limits of the dialogue at different stages or phases. And therefore I do not think there is any contradiction in what he says in place A or at place B or elsewhere.

---

But in the overall context of a particular conference or meeting or whatever the same views gets expressed in different terms.

Karan Thapar: If then the Prime Minister's thinking or attitude has not changed presumably the problem lies in the response and the attitude of the Pakistanis. I want to explore that with you and let's first start with Hafiz Saeed.

The Home Minister, in his interview to Al Jazeera, has made perfectly clear the extent of detailed evidence that India has connecting Hafiz Saeed to the Mumbai terror attack. What is Pakistan's response to that specific detail?

M K Narayanan: Pakistan's point is that whatever information or evidence that has been provided by India is inadequate to nail Hafiz Saeed and they say that if we did go up and try to get a conviction it will be thrown out, the Supreme Court will sort of condemn us. It's really a question of how you are willing to marshal the evidence that has been given and put it in court.

I think in one of our earlier interviews, if I remember right, sometime in 2006, when you asked me about the evidence that we had with regard to the Mumbai serial blast which took place in the suburban trains, I made a statement for which I suffered because you took it out of context perhaps. I said that we have evidence which is as good as you can get in a terrorist case and beyond that it's difficult to say.

Now in this case if you take the Hafiz Saeed dossier that has been provided--I think maybe I have probably the longest association with terrorism in one form or the other, actually counter-terrorism not so much terrorism--I think we have marshalled almost grade one evidence.

You have the evidence from three people, three human beings, three terrorists, admitted terrorists (Ajmal) Kasab, Fahim Ansari, Sohrabuddin, who talk of how Hafiz Saeed had come, talked to them, what he had said etc apart from other connecting evidence. I agree, one can never be sure what a court would do with that kind of evidence.

But if you are not willing--in the context of saying what you said in Sharm-el-Sheikh to ensure that terrorism is stamped out--you are not even willing to test that, it certainly leaves in our mind a big question mark as to where Pakistan stands on terrorism.

Karan Thapar: And that's the real question mark that hangs over Pakistan today. Despite the rhetoric when they repeatedly say that they will leave no stone unturned to bring the Mumbai accused to justice, they don't act?

M K Narayanan: They don't act and there are also other issues which we have. I think Mr Chindambaram was on record on this fact saying that there are several other credible threats. I think the Prime Minister has made the same statement. This evidence is coming from not only our agencies but from friendly intelligence agencies.

Unless Pakistan is willing to take action against the two main terrorist groups which are targeting India: the (Lashkar-e-Toiba) LeT and Jaish. The rest is all rhetoric from our point of view.

Karan Thapar: I want very much to find out a bit about these additional threats that face India. The Prime Minister spoke about them in Barmer on the 30th of August. But first on Thursday Pakistan has filed two FIRs under the Anti-Terrorist Act against Hafiz Saeed. But they are not in anyway connected with the accusations that he faces for the Mumbai terror attack of 2008.

Do you see that as a first positive step or from India's point of view is it irrelevant?

M K Narayanan: I think the latest one doesn't add to their credibility, in my opinion.

Karan Thapar: It does nothing to add to Pakistan's credibility at all?

M K Narayanan: At least as far as the Mumbai terror....

Karan Thapar: So the question mark remains as strongly?

M K Narayanan: Yes.

Karan Thapar: Let us then come to these other additional terrorist threats that you've talked about. In fact the Prime Minister on August 30 spoke of forces working to destabilize India-Pakistan relations. He said, "I could say a lot more." What was he referring to?

M K Narayanan: He was referring to the threats that we-- what is the sort of thought behind these threats? Primarily the intelligence that we have is they wish to strike at targets which is bound to create widespread mayhem.

There is no other particular significance of some of the targets that are being targeted. Sometimes it is a religious place, sometimes it is a building which houses a large (number of people) or a institution that houses a large number of people of different kinds etc and several others. But the basic point is that if you take the totality, the totality of what is taking place, it is to create as much destruction for the sake of destruction.

Our concern is that if you really have a problem of this kind and even in Mumbai, for instance, you could very well have had a situation where because the attack came from Pakistan, people would see it as some Muslims are responsible. That could have been but the greatness of the Indian people is that they did not accept this neither the Hindus nor the Muslims or other communities.

So that is our concern, we are worried that something might sometimes trigger off a reaction which we are not able to control.

Karan Thapar: How seriously scared are you that there could be a second major Mumbai-like strike on India?

M K Narayanan: Here you're asking me a question that I live with in almost daily dread that something that I am looking at over in the Home Ministry, because we attend a daily meeting, the Home Minister takes a daily meeting at which I am present, we get so many pieces of intelligence which pass across our table--many can be sort of weeded out--but as I said there are quite a few which if we are not able to nip in the bud and if they escape us could have (that result).

It is difficult to say whether we'll have another Mumbai because I think we are better prepared for that kind of a situation - but it could be quite serious.

Karan Thapar: So you live with this dread every single day?

M K Narayanan: I would say that this is something that not merely I, but I think all the members of the security architecture or security force, live with.

Karan Thapar: President Obama was once quoted as saying that Pakistan scares him. Does Pakistan scare you?

M K Narayanan: Pakistan may not scare me but some of Pakistan's actions scare us because I don't think they really add to anything except creating problems for us.

Karan Thapar: Given these circumstances and given the perpetual fear that we could be the victim of another terrible strike, what point or purpose is served by the two foreign secretaries or the two foreign ministers meeting at the UN or is that meeting now less than likely?

M K Narayanan: The dialogue mechanism or rather the restricted dialogue mechanism, if I might say so, will continue. We are hoping that as a civilized nation although with a civilian leadership not very much in control but hopefully anxious to do something - somewhere, sometime the forces arranged against us operating from Pakistan can be brought to book.

Karan Thapar: How realistic is that hope?

M K Narayanan: I've always been seen as a hawk, so I don't want to comment on that but I live in hope anyways.

Karan Thapar: And so the foreign secretaries and the foreign ministers will meet in the hope that may be they can get Pakistan to concentrate and deliver?

M K Narayanan: Yes. Hopefully, yes.

Karan Thapar: But it is a slim hope isn't it?

M K Narayanan: Slim hope but I think if we don't have hope you cannot achieve anything.

379. Questions relevant to Pakistan answered by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at his press conference held on the conclusion of the G-20 Summit.

Pittsburg, September 25, 2009.

* * * *

Question: The Foreign Ministers of India and Pakistan are scheduled to meet very soon in New York. How hopeful do you feel about the outcome of those talks and what will India's main message and focus be during those talks?

Prime Minister: India's message is that India seeks to normalise its relations with Pakistan. The only obstacle is that Pakistan should give up its old attitudes regarding the use of terror as an instrument of state policy. We hope that they would carry out investigations based on the material that we have supplied to Pakistan regarding the massacres that took place in Mumbai in November. Although the tragedy took place in India, the conspiracy was hatched in Pakistan, and that has been admitted by Pakistan Government. We sincerely hope that they would carry forward this process of investigation and bring to book all the culprits. If that is done, I have said it in Parliament, we will move an extra mile in order to normalise our relations. We are neighbours, and as neighbours we have an obligation to work together.

* * * *

Question: Sir, important public figures in Pakistan have very openly admitted that the aid which was being given by the American Administration to them was being openly utilised for military purposes. Again huge aid has been given to them. Do you say that it will be again used for building military assets against India?

Prime Minister: I have seen those reports and the Government of India has officially taken note of that. We have brought this to the notice of the US Government. Even in the past whenever sophisticated weaponry was made available by the United States to Pakistan, we have always known that the only country against whom these weapons can be used is India.

* * * *

Question: Sir, just to take you back to Sharm el-Sheikh, you have broken through old mindsets in dealing with Pakistan. Does the lack of action on the ground by Islamabad disappoint you? Are you at all hopeful of Pakistan taking any credible action and thereby the Composite Dialogue process being restarted?

Prime Minister: If you read my statement in Parliament soon after I came back from Sharm el-Sheikh, I think I have explained the whole position at great length. There is no change in my thinking on that subject.

380. Extract from the Statement of External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna made to the press on his meeting with the Pakistan Foreign Minister.

New York, September 27, 2009.

My meeting with His Excellency Foreign Minister Qureshi was preceded by a detailed meeting between the Foreign Secretaries of India and Pakistan. We had a useful, constructive and candid exchange of views on the present situation in our bilateral relations. We both agreed that the future direction in our bilateral relations has to be one of deeper, sustained and meaningful relations. Being a neighbor, there is an imperative to have a mutually beneficial relationship with each other in the long term interests of our own countries and to realize our national developmental priorities. I utilized this opportunity to convey to Foreign Minister Qureshi our appreciation that for a sustained and meaningful dialogue process to succeed, it is essential to ensure an environment free of violence, terrorism and the threat to use violence. As you are aware, we do have serious and continuing concerns about terrorists and extremist groups in Pakistan which are a national security risk for us and for our people. Foreign Minister Qureshi conveyed to me the seriousness of his Government in bringing to book through their legal process those responsible for the terrorist outrage in Mumbai ten months ago.

Pakistan has taken some steps within its own legal system against those directly responsible for the attack on Mumbai and the processes thus instituted must gather further momentum. We remain concerned about the threat which groups and individuals in Pakistan continue to pose to us. I, therefore, underlined and reiterated in my meeting that concrete and effective steps against these individuals and entities can instill in us the confidence that commitments given by Pakistan that it would not allow its soil to be used for terrorist attacks against India would be adhered to. The case regarding Hafiz Sayeed is also one that concerns us as evidence available with us bring out his major role in the Mumbai Terrorist Attack Conspiracy. Foreign Minister Qureshi conveyed to me that the trial against those accused for the Mumbai attack would begin shortly and that the Pakistan Government will take steps to see justice done. We will be monitoring developments on this score very carefully*.

* Media reports said the External Affairs Minister later clarified that the issue of Balochistan did not come up during the meeting. Despite mentioning that Pakistan had taken some steps against those behind 26/11 attacks, Mr. Krishna underlined that a case against Hafiz Saeed also concerns India. India, however, rejected backchannel talks proposed by Pakistan saying that "if a front channel is open, what's the need of backchannel".

Pakistan giving a little more details of the talks said issues such as J&K, Siachen, Sir Creeks, Wullar and water were raised during the meeting. "We cannot confine our discussions to just one issue. We should discuss all issues that form part of composite dialogue," Mr. Qureshi said. He further said that Pakistan would start the formal trial in the Mumbai attacks on October 3. At the meeting, Mr. Krishna turned down Pakistan's desire for going beyond the issue of terrorism and said "the least" New Delhi expected were "tangible results" from Islamabad on the basis of the dossiers containing information about the involvement of Pakistani nationals in the Mumbai attacks.

The tone for India's stand on normalisation of ties was set days earlier by Prime Minister Manmohan Singh in Pittsburg. "India's message is that it seeks to normalise its relations with Pakistan. But the only obstacle is that Pakistan should give up its old attitude regarding the use of terror as an instrument of state policy," Dr. Singh had told a news conference at the end of the G20 meet in Pittsburg on September 25. Though India did not want to set a benchmark for resuming the composite dialogue, Mr. Krishna said he told Mr. Qureshi that prosecution of the perpetrators of the attack "within the framework of the Pakistan law" would help build the appropriate atmosphere. Participating in the general debate of the 64th session of the United Nations General Assembly, Mr. Krishna on September 26, assured Pakistan of India's commitment to good neighbourly relations but felt there could not be any justification for mindless terrorist acts. Without mentioning Pakistan, he said, "It is our collective responsibility and duty to work together to ensure that terrorists, organisers, perpetrators and supporters of such crimes are brought to justice."

It may be added for record that Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on October 29, addressing a press conference in Srinagar at the end of his visit to the State referred to the OIC proposal and expressing his disappointment, regretted the OIC suggestion. He said: "We regret that the OIC has got into this business and we have lodged a protest on this account".

KS : ..... We have problems with Pakistan also. So now the two Foreign Secretaries were supposed to meet in New York last month.

FS : They did meet.

KS : Then after that what is the progress?

FS : Well, during these meetings, we have had useful meeting with the Pakistani Foreign Secretary and our External Affairs Minister with his Pakistani counterpart. They were useful meetings that were held in New York last month. And during these meetings we were able to communicate to the Pakistani side that while Pakistan is our neighbour and that we have always understood that it is only through dialogue that we can normalize relations between the two countries and build more satisfying degree of understanding between the two countries. It is very essential and we were communicating this to the Pakistani side on behalf of the Government of India and also on behalf of the people of India that the threat and the effect of terrorism which has been directed against the people of India from hydroelectric project in Pakistan-occupied Kashmir (PoK). The Chinese Foreign Ministry on October 15 reacting to Indian statement took the position that China's position was that the Kashmir issue had to be settled "between India and Pakistan" and that China's position had been "consistent." The spokesperson said: "The Kashmir issue is a matter left over from history. It should be settled properly through dialogue and consultation between India and Pakistan, and China's position has been consistent." It may be recalled that China had in 2006 agreed to upgrade the Karakoram Highway, which runs from Kashgar in China's Xinjiang region to Gilgit and on to Islamabad. Now they are seeking to strengthen the highway to increase its operational capacity in adverse weather conditions, since currently it has to be closed for around six months every year in the winter. Only a couple of months earlier in August, during Pakistani President Asif Ali Zardari's visit to Xinjiang the two countries signed an agreement to build a 7,000 MW hydro power project in Bunji, in PoK.

Pakistani soil by groups, by institutions, by individuals that operate with impunity from Pakistani soil, is the cause of utmost concern for us, because we have been victims of terrorism.

And for a meaningful dialogue to be transacted between the two countries, between the governments, between the institutions of the two countries it is essential that Pakistan addresses this threat of terrorism seriously and meaningfully and effectively. And this is particularly so in the context of the investigations into the Mumbai terror attacks. A little more than a month from now, it will be one year and in Pakistan the trial of those accused and also the investigation into Hafeez Sayed and still we have not had satisfaction on that as yet from the Pakistan side. And we continue to emphasise this to the Pakistani authorities that it is essential that they move resolutely and meaningfully and they take action against these individuals because it is only through that process that we will see an end to these problems.

KS: We have been saying this that the culprits should be brought to book, we have been insisting again and again. We have been saying that there will be no composite dialogue, but still there is not much of forward movement. They only go ahead with whatever they are saying, nothing more than this. They say no credible evidence. We have given evidence, still it is not satisfactory.

FS: Well, we should not, in my view, let down our guard on this issue and that I feel very very strongly that we must continue to emphasise our concerns to Pakistan because what we are saying is for the good of Pakistan also. You see the effect of terrorism in Pakistan also, so I think it is time that Pakistan understood the danger, the clear and present danger that exists from terrorism. We are the voice of sanity, the Indian Government and the Indian people, and I think Pakistan must come round to understanding the sincerity and the seriousness that we attach to this.

KS: Well, we talk of Pakistan, but I want to move forward to Afghanistan where our embassy has been attacked recently and it was done earlier also. So, where it is going to lead us?

FS: Again, the attacks on our embassy in Kabul last week and the attack last July 2008 have also brought home, not only to us in this region, but also to the international community, the threat and danger that exists from terrorism. The unhindered way in which terrorist groups have been allowed to operate in this region and we must understand that there is very very great urgent immediate need for the international community to be one on tackling this threat. And what has happened in Afghanistan, we are in Afghanistan to help the people of Afghanistan. Our development partnership with Afghanistan has won us hearts and minds in Afghanistan and there is no doubt about it. I went to Afghanistan myself and had the opportunity to meet President Karzai, Foreign Minister and National Security Adviser, Dr. Rasool.

All of them were unanimous in their appreciation of the role that India is playing in Afghanistan to help the Afghan people. We have no other agenda in Afghanistan, we are there to help.

KS: But Pakistan should realize this.

FS: Of course, it is essential that Pakistan realizes this and Pakistan understands that we are there for legitimate reasons, we are there to help the people of Afghanistan.

384. Extract of questions relevant to Pakistan raised at the Media Briefing by the Foreign Secretary for the President's visit to the United Kingdom.

New Delhi, October 23, 2009.

* * * * *

Question: Madam, this relates to the situation across the border. Today there was an attack by terrorists on Kamra which is an Air Force base which has nuclear components in it. Is the Government of India concerned, because this concern has been expressed in the past, about nuclear weapons of the Pakistani side falling into the hands of terrorists?

Foreign Secretary: We have seen the reports of what happened today at Kamra. What I want to say on the issue is that we hope that the Pakistan Government will continue to take steps to effectively secure their nuclear assets.

Question: Madam, ten months after the Mumbai attacks, could you give us an idea as to diplomatically what Pakistanis have told us, where the investigation is leading to? Have we heard anything from them after we handed over the last dossier which is quite some time ago?

Foreign Secretary: I will draw reference to the meetings that we had in New York last month with the Pakistani side. I met my counterpart the Pakistan Foreign Secretary, and our External Affairs Minister met the Pakistan Foreign Minister. During these meetings of course we emphasised our concerns about the very very slow and tardy pace of action being taken against the conspirators and others responsible for the Mumbai terror attacks last year. That is a concern that we have expressed with all seriousness and emphasis to the Pakistan side. We have also drawn attention and also expressed our concern about the very very slow pace of not only the action that is supposed to be taken but the whole business of the trial that they are supposed to conduct against the accused.

Question: Mrs. Rao, we listened to you in Kabul where the attack had taken place and you had declared that there will be a kind of Government of India inquiry. What is the progress of that inquiry which you declared there? You remember that the Pakistani Prime Minister also had told our Prime Minister in Colombo in the SAARC meeting that he would come back to him so far as the earlier attack was concerned. Has there been any kind of progress on that earlier attack? And what is the progress on this particular attack?

Foreign Secretary: I would again draw reference to the context that I had explained in my earlier answer, the lack of progress from the Pakistan side when it comes to investigation of all the long series of terrorist attacks that have been directed against us from their soil. That is as far as the Pakistan side is concerned. As far as the bomb attack on our Embassy in Kabul is concerned, yes I was in Kabul soon after this happened, and I was able to survey and see at first hand the extent of the damage that had been caused around the perimeter of our Embassy and indeed to parts of the building also. In my discussions with the Afghan leadership during that visit, they not only expressed their sympathy and concern to us over what had happened but also drew attention to the fact that this pointed to the involvement of forces that in all likelihood operated from across the borders. They are conducting an enquiry into what happened, and we are awaiting the full results of that enquiry. It would not be in the interest of the enquiry for me to talk further about it at this moment.

385. Media Report on the comments by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on Indian concern for the safety of Pakistani nuclear programme.

New Delhi, October 23, 2009.

Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao when asked for her comments on the terror attack near a strategic military complex near Islamabad reportedly linked to Pakistan's nuclear weapons' programme expressing India's concern on the vulnerability of Pakistani nuclear arsenal told the media on October 23 "We have seen reports of what happened today at Kamra (in Pakistan). We hope the Pakistan government will continue to take steps to effectively secure their nuclear assets*." She also expressed unhappiness over "very very slow and tardy" progress of investigation and prosecution in the 26/11 attacks case as also in the case relating to the attack on Indian embassy in Kabul last year.

Asked about the sense India was getting about the status of probe and prosecution by Pakistan in the Mumbai attacks, she referred to the meeting she had with Pakistan Foreign Secretary Salman Bashir and the discussions External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna had with his Pakistani counterpart Shah Mehmood Qureshi in New York in September on the sidelines of the UNGA session.

She said: "During these meetings, of course, we emphasised our concerns about the very very slow and tardy pace of action being taken against those responsible, conspirators and others responsible for the Mumbai terror attacks." She too expressed her disappointment on the lack of progress in the probe by Pakistan on the July, 7-terror attack at the Indian Embassy in Kabul. The international intelligence agencies had held the Taliban in collaboration with Pakistani intelligence agency ISI responsible for that tragic incident. On the latest attack on the Kabul embassy on October 8, she said the Afghan leadership had pointed to "involvement of forces that, in all likelihood, operated from across its border." She said that Afghanistan was conducting an enquiry and results were awaited.

* It may be recalled that she was not the only or the first to express concern on the safety of Pakistan's nuclear arsenal. Before her, the western countries including the U.S. had expressed such concern. But in order to win a debating point, the official spokesman of the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs said in Islamabad on October 24: "such remarks are evidently self-serving and integral to India's efforts to seek unilateral advantage at the cost of regional strategic stability by its feverish militarization and working on dangerous military doctrines....Pakistan has refrained from commenting on India's own record on nuclear safety and security and its overt and covert endeavours to build its WMD programmes. Instead of finger pointing, India should accept our proposal for promoting regional strategic restraint regime and work with Pakistan to promote strategic stability in South Asia. Suggestions to this effect were made to the Indian Foreign Secretary at the recent meeting of the two Foreign Secretaries in New York. It is also time that India stop its opportunistic propaganda against Pakistan".

386. External Affairs and Defence Ministers reject Pakistan's charge of Indian support to Taliban.

New Delhi, October 26, 2009.

Reacting to the reported statement of Pakistani Interior Minister Rehman Malik that India was backing Taliban, the External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna rejected on October 26 in Bengaluru any such charge and said that "We want Taliban and Talibanism to be totally eliminated". The Defence Minister A. K. Antony too speaking in New Delhi on the next day rubbished as "absurd" and "totally baseless" Pakistan's allegations that New Delhi was supporting the Talinbans. He said: ""It is absurd and totally baseless. India cannot support Taliban, which is the greatest threat to world peace." The Defence Minister was reacting to journalists queries on the sidelines of a defence function in New Delhi.

The suggestion that India was helping the Taliban was also rejected by the Prime Minister himself while addressing his press conference in Srinagar on October 29 at the end of his two-day visit to Jammu and Kashmir. Rejecting Pakistani allegation the Prime Minister said it was a far fetched and "far from the truth....We are victims of terrorism aided abetted from the Pakistani side. Both references to Baluchistan and what is said about Taliban are widely false."

* Pakistan's Interior Minister Rehman Malik on October 26 had accused India of backing Talibans, while claiming that he had evidence of that. He however, gave no details or proof for his allegation.

387. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Home Affairs advising Indian pilgrims to avoid visiting Pakistan in view of the deteriorating security scenario.

New Delhi, October 27, 2009.

Ministry of Home Affairs has advised Indian pilgrims to avoid visiting Pakistan in view of deteriorating security situation there. In an advisory, MHA has said that the Government of India is of the view that it is not advisable for the Indian pilgrims to visit Pakistan in the prevailing situation when frequent terrorist attacks are taking place in Punjab province of Pakistan, where all Gurudwaras are situated. Accordingly, the Government advises all Indian citizens to avoid undertaking any visit to Pakistan for this purpose, till the security situation in Pakistan improves

The advisory was issued because at this time of the year a large number of Sikhs from India visit Pakistan to observe the Birthday of the founder of the Sikh faith Guru Nanak who was born in Nankana Sahib, near Lahore in Pakistan.

388. Speech by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Inauguration of the Anantnag - Qazigund Rail Link making an offer of talks to Pakistan.

Anantnag (Kashmir), October 28, 2009.

I am delighted to be back in the valley of Kashmir in the lovely season of autumn. We will soon see the beautiful golden hues of the season and the magnificent chinar will soon be flaming red.

I have come today to inaugurate the Qazigund-Anantnag rail link. I congratulate the Indian Railways and the people of Kashmir for this achievement. The day is not far when trains will run from Jammu to Srinagar through the Banihal Pass.

The last time I came to Jammu & Kashmir, the State Assembly elections were going to be held. Later, the Lok Sabha elections were also held. I am happy that the people of Jammu & Kashmir turned out to vote in these elections in large numbers. I believe that it was a vote for a peaceful path to a better tomorrow. I applaud the wisdom and good faith of the common man of Kashmir. The elected government has a golden opportunity to consolidate the peace in the State.

In the last five years, the Government of India has taken a number of steps to bring development to Jammu & Kashmir. We have tried to revive the traditional connectivity between the people of the region. We took the bold step of reviving the movement of goods and people across the Line of Control on the Srinagar - Muzaffarabad road and on the Poonch - Rawalakot road. I am happy to announce that the Central Government has decided to fund the additional cost of Rs. 385 crore to build the heritage Mughal Road that will connect Shopian with remote areas of Poonch and Rajouri.

Unprecedented resources have been committed to the State for its comprehensive reconstruction. But I recognize that the benefits are trickling down slowly. This state of affairs should change. We have to speed up the pace of development in the state. We have to reverse the brain drain that has denuded the state of many of its teachers, doctors, engineers and intellectuals. We have to create the conditions for them to return and to be the instruments of change and development. We want to strengthen the hands of the State Govt. so that they can implement an ambitious development agenda.

I would also urge that the time has come for elections to local bodies to be held quickly. This will increase the people's participation in the processes of development.

I appeal to the youth of Kashmir to join in building a new Kashmir. I understand their frustration. But things are changing. I urge them to think constructively about how to build their futures.

The Central Government will make all efforts to involve the youth of the State in constructive work. Under the "Skill Development to Employment" Programme, the Ministry of Tourism will train 300 youths of the State. In addition, 200 youths will be trained and deployed as tourist escorts during the Amarnath and Vaishno Devi Yatras. The Ministry of Labour will train 8000 youths in the ITIs every year.

As part of a national programme the Ministry of Youth Affairs will deploy around 8,000 youth in Jammu and Kashmir on a voluntary basis. They will engage in public service such as cleaning of the Dal lake.

I believe that the IT Sector in J&K can be as developed as in other states of the country. We will fully support the efforts of the State in this area. I am happy that more than 600 youth of the State trained under a Central Government project have been employed in the IT sector recently.

I am happy to announce that the Government of India has decided to set up two Central Universities in J&K, one in Jammu and one in Kashmir.

The majesty and splendour of this beautiful valley and the culture of hospitality of the Kashmiri people are second to none. Its magnificent lakes and forests have charmed travelers for centuries. It offers the solemnity of the Buddhist monasteries of Ladakh, the treasures of the Hazratbal shrine and the piety of the Raghunath temple. Let us build Kashmir into one of the world's top tourist destinations.

The picturesque Dal Lake is the icon of the tourism industry in Kashmir. We have been funding a project for the conservation of the lake but progress has been slow. I would urge the State Government to set up a task force to expedite the project. The Centre has decided to commit additional funds of Rs. 356 cr for this project. We will also discuss with the State Government how to expedite ongoing projects for the conservation of Wullar Lake and Manser Lake.

The Government is concerned about reports of receding glaciers. I am happy to announce the launch of the National Mission on Sustaining the Himalayan Eco-system. We wish to preserve the sacred heritage of places like the Amarnath shrine.

The era of violence and terrorism is coming to an end. The public sentiment is for peace and for a peaceful resolution of all problems.

When I came to office in 2004, I had said that our Government is committed to having unconditional dialogue with whoever abjures violence. We had discussions with different groups. We had a number of round table conferences. All issues were discussed. We tried to give voice to the demands of all sections of the people. We have implemented a number of initiatives as a result of this process.

I wish to say again today that we are willing to talk to anyone who has any meaningful ideas for promoting peace and development in Kashmir. We want to carry all sections of the people with us in resolving the political and economic problems of Jammu and Kashmir.

I had also said that I was ready to discuss all issues with Pakistan. I did so not because of weakness but from a position of strength. We had the most fruitful and productive discussions ever with the Government of Pakistan during the period 2004-07 when militancy and violence began to decline. Intensive discussions were held on all issues including on a permanent resolution of the issue of Jammu & Kashmir.

For the first time in 60 years, people were able to travel by road across the LoC. Divided families were re-united at the border. Trade between the two sides of Kashmir began. In fact, our overall trade with Pakistan increased three times during 2004-07. The number of visas that we issued to Pakistanis doubled during the same period. An additional rail link was re-established.

These are not small achievements given the history of our troubled relationship with Pakistan. Inside the valley, as militancy declined, trade, business and tourism began to pick up. We were moving in the right direction. For the first time there was a feeling among the people that a durable and final peace was around the corner.

However, all the progress that we achieved has been repeatedly thwarted by acts of terrorism. The terrorists want permanent enmity to prevail between the two countries. The terrorists have misused the name of a peaceful and benevolent religion. Their philosophy of hate has no place here. It is totally contrary to our centuries old tradition of tolerance and harmony among faiths.

I strongly believe that the majority of people in Pakistan seek good neighbourly and cooperative relations between India and Pakistan. They seek a permanent peace. This is our view as well.

The cross-LoC initiatives have been well received on both sides of the border. But I am also aware that they are not as people friendly as they could be. Trade facilities at the border are inadequate. There are no banking channels. Customs facilities need to be strengthened. There are no trade fairs. The lists of tradable commodities need to be increased. Clearances for travel take time. Prisoners of India and Pakistan are languishing in each other's jails even after completing their sentences.

The fact is that these are humanitarian issues whose resolution requires the cooperation of Pakistan. We are ready to discuss these and other issues with the Government of Pakistan. I hope that as a result things will be made easier for our traders, divided families, prisoners and travelers. For a productive dialogue it is essential that terrorism must be brought under control.

We will press the Government of Pakistan to curb the activities of those elements that are engaging in terrorism in India. If they are non-state actors, it is the solemn duty of the government of Pakistan to bring them to book, to destroy their camps and to eliminate their infrastructure. The perpetrators of the acts of terror must pay the heaviest penalty for their barbaric crimes against humanity.

It is a misplaced idea that one can reach a compromise with the ideology of the terrorists or that they can be used for one's own political purpose. Eventually they turn against you and bring only death and destruction. The real face of the terrorists is clear for the people of Pakistan to see with their own eyes.

I hope that the Government of Pakistan will take the ongoing actions against the terrorist groups to their logical conclusion. They should destroy these groups wherever they are operating and for whatever misguided purpose.

I call upon the people and Government of Pakistan to show their sincerity and good faith. As I have said many times before, we will not be found wanting in our response. In the words of a poet:

'There are moments in history when wrong decisions are taken

The effects of which are felt for ages'

I appeal to the Government of Pakistan to carry forward the hand of friendship* that we have extended. This is in the interest of the people of India and Pakistan.

In conclusion, I wish to convey my good wishes to the people of Jammu & Kashmir. I hope that the future will bring a new era of peace, reconciliation and development."

* The next day on October 29th, the Prime Minister at his press conference in replies to questions from the media clarified that while there should be no preconditions on talks with Pakistan, but firmly linked his readiness to take forward the peace initiative to Islamabad's ability to prevent terror groups on its soil from attacking India. Answering a question whether his statement calling for destruction of terror camps on Pakistan's soil was a precondition, he said: "It should not be a precondition", but the domestic support to peace process in Pakistan -essential for the government's efforts to succeed - would be markedly absent if terror attacks did not cease. "India is a democracy, we can't create an atmosphere for negotiations if terrorism continues," he said. Elaborating he said that though he may not insist on immediate dismantling of terror camps in Pakistan, "...there is a practical way of looking at (things)...Negotiations can't make headway unless Pakistan brings under control terrorist elements which aid and abet terrorism in India". If "day in and day out" terror attacks continue to take precious lives, "we cannot create an atmosphere for negotiations," he emphasized. When asked if New Delhi was satisfied with Islamabad's steps on Mumbai attacks, the Prime Minister replied: "Obviously, we are not satisfied. We sincerely hope the Pakistan Government will bring all the perpetrators of 26/11 attack to justice."

He further made it clear that his offer of talks with Pakistan or for that matter with all shades of public opinion in Jammu and Kashmir was not an outcome of any international pressure but his initiative in the interest of the people of India, Pakistan and Jammu and Kashmir. Emphatically rejecting any insinuation that his offer of talks was under any pressure, he said it was in the interest of the people of India, Jammu and Kashmir as well as Pakistan that the 'relations between the two countries should be what they ought to be between two neighbours.' "The destinies of India and Pakistan are closely interlinked," he said. Dr. Singh hoped that his offer of talks will be reciprocated in the spirit in which it was made. Rejecting Pakistani allegation that India was providing funds to Taliban fighters, the Prime Minister said that it was far fetched, "far from the truth....We are victims of terrorism aided abetted from the Pakistani side. Both references to Baluchistan and what is said about Taliban are widely false."

389. Reaction of the Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs on elections in Gilgit-Baltistan.

New Delhi, November 13, 2009.

"The elections in Gilgit-Baltistan are just another cosmetic exercise intended to camouflage the fact of Pakistan's illegal occupation of areas of the state of Jammu and Kashmir*."

390. Extract relevant to Pakistan from the Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh's address to the American Council of Foreign Relations.

Washington (D.C), November 23, 2009.

Ladies and Gentlemen: My government has invested heavily over the past few years in normalizing relations with our neighbour Pakistan. We made considerable progress on the road to a durable and permanent settlement of all outstanding issues. I have said that we are ready to pick up the threads of the dialogue, including on issues related to Jammu & Kashmir. We seek a South Asia of peace, friendship and prosperity, where its borders will be energized by the flow of people, goods and ideas. For this to happen, Pakistan must make a break with the past, abjure terrorism and come to the table with good faith and sincerity. It is my solemn hope that India and Pakistan can together move forward to write a new chapter in the history of our sub-continent. We are three days away from the first anniversary of the heinous and barbaric terrorist attacks on Mumbai. The trauma of that attack continues to haunt us. Terrorism poses an existential threat to the civilized world and must be defeated. We should not harbour any illusions that a selective approach to terrorism, tackling it in one place while ignoring it in others, will work or pay dividends.

* The Spokesperson was responding to the so-called elections being held to the 33-seat Gilgit-Baltistan legislative assembly in the Pakistan occupied region of the Indian State of Jammu and Kashmir. However the Pakistani Foreign Secretary described the Indian reaction as unwarranted and said : "These remarks are unwarranted. The government of India has no locus standi in the matter."

391. Extract relevant to Pakistan from the Press Conference of Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on Prime Minister's engagements in Washington.

Washington (D. C), November 23, 2009.

Question: I have two questions, if I may. One is on Pakistan. India has often spoken about the need for Pakistan to act more swiftly in bringing suspects to justice. What is your impression of the US response to this concern? Do you think they are more willing to pressure Pakistan more openly or behind the scenes? How receptive do they seem after all on this message? Second question is: the Prime Minister mentioned today at the USIBC that he expects more cooperation in counter-terrorism cooperation between India and the US?

Foreign Secretary: As to Pakistan and whether the United States is receptive to our concerns, the short answer to that is, Yes. I will answer that in the affirmative. They are receptive; they are sensitive to India's concerns. We have an ongoing dialogue with them relating to counter-terrorism, relating to our concerns about issues that follow from the Mumbai terror attacks. We have had very good cooperation in this area between India and the United States. So, to answer your question, there is a great deal of receptivity to our concerns from the United States.

Question: And do you feel hopeful that that receptivity will actually lead to pressure on the ground by the United States on Pakistan?

Foreign Secretary: We have said consistently that Pakistan needs to take concrete action as far as delivering on the Mumbai terror attacks is concerned because there are no two opinions about the fact that the attack originated out of Pakistan. Even Pakistan and Pakistani agencies have come to acknowledge that. So, the issue here is that Pakistan needs to take action against those responsible, the conspirators, the culprits, the individuals who are culpable in this attack. The United States has been made well aware of our concerns and they fully understand that there is need for the international community to also persuade Pakistan that it needs to act in this regard. We see the United States as being very receptive to our concerns on this.

Question: Madam, we have been repeatedly voicing our concerns over the misuse of international aid and American aid by Pakistan to bolster anti-India terror infrastructure. But apparently it has not worked. Americans believe that Pakistan needs aid of some sort. That is the point of divergence. Why despite our repeated pleading that this aid is not being used in the right direction, Americans are not able to see thorough that?

Foreign Secretary: I think our concerns have been registered very well with the American side and we are able to discuss these issues with a great deal of openness, with a great deal of candour with the American side. They are conscious of our concerns, our point of view, our approach to this issue. They are very conscious of it. We have not only mentioned it to the Americans but we take it up, we are very specific in the articulation of our concerns on this issue and they are receptive. What we have said is that there needs to be greater accountability about this kind of aid that is being provided to Pakistan, particularly defence-related, military aid because our experience with Pakistan in this regard has been an unhappy one. The United States is increasingly coming to be aware of this aspect of our concerns. A few years ago, I think the situation was different. But today, with the growth in our relationship with the United States, with the process of maturity that you see in this relationship, and the many dimensions that have been added on to our dialogue, particularly as far as the counter-terrorism dialogue is concerned, particularly as far as our security and strategic dialogue is concerned, all these issues have figured and the United States is coming to be increasingly sensitive to these issues.

Question: Madam, in July when Hillary Clinton came to India she made repeated pitch for the resumption of Composite Dialogue between India and Pakistan. What is surprising about this trip is that we do not get any pronouncements from American officials that India and Pakistan should resume Composite Dialogue? How has American perception changed? Coupled with this, the new investigations or disclosures that point to the links between Headley-Rana plot and their links in the ISI. So, are Americans now more realistic about Pakistan's involvement?

Foreign Secretary: You should probably ask them that question. Having said that let me say that they are very conscious of our concerns about Pakistan and why the present situation is not conducive to the resumption of dialogue with Pakistan. We have not shut the door on dialogue with Pakistan. I think the Prime Minister has said that time and time again that we want to extend the hand of peace and dialogue to Pakistan. But for this dialogue to proceed and for this dialogue to acquire momentum, we would need to have a closure, we would need to have progress as far as the addressing of our concerns about action that needs to be taken against those responsible, Pakistanis responsible for the Mumbai terror attacks. The weight of public opinion in India today is so strong on this issue and we are a vibrant democracy and we always remain sensitive to the concerns of our people also on this issue. This is apart from Government policy itself that you have to take a composite view of the situation as it exists today within India. The mood of the people, the mood in Parliament, the feelings that have been expressed, our concerns, these cannot be just ignored.

392. Extract Relevant to Global Security and Terrorism from the Joint Statement between Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and President Barack Obama.

Washington (D. C), November 24, 2009.

ADVANCING GLOBAL SECURITY AND COUNTERING TERRORISM

Prime Minister Singh and President Obama recognized that the India-U.S. partnership is indispensable for global peace and security. In this context, the interests of both countries are best advanced through the values mirrored in their societies.

They acknowledged the common threat that international terrorism poses to regional and global security. They condemned terrorism in all its forms and manifestations and declared that there could be no justification for terrorism anywhere.

On the eve of its first anniversary, President Obama reiterated the United States's condemnation of the terrorist attack in Mumbai in November 2008. The two leaders underscored the absolute imperative to bring to justice the perpetrators of this terrorist attack.

They expressed their grave concern about the threat posed by terrorism and violent extremists emanating from India's neighborhood, whose impact is felt beyond the region. The two leaders agreed that resolute and credible steps must be taken to eliminate safe havens and sanctuaries that provide shelter to terrorists and their activities. These undermine security and stability in the region and around the world.

They vowed to redouble their efforts to deal effectively with terrorism, while protecting their countries' common ideals and shared values and committed themselves to strengthening global consensus and legal regimes against terrorism. They decided on a Counterterrorism Cooperation Initiative to expand collaboration on counterterrorism, information sharing, and capacity building.

The two leaders reiterated their shared interest in the stability, development and independence of Afghanistan and in the defeat of terrorist safe havens in Pakistan and Afghanistan. President Obama appreciated India's role in reconstruction and rebuilding efforts in Afghanistan. The two leaders agreed to enhance their respective efforts in this direction.

The two leaders committed to continue pursuing mutually beneficial defense cooperation through the existing security dialogue, service-level exchanges, defense exercises and trade and technology transfer and collaboration. They recognized the scope for cooperation in the areas of non-traditional threats to security, peacekeeping, humanitarian and disaster relief, and maritime security and protecting sea lanes of communication. They agreed to expedite necessary arrangements to facilitate these activities.

The two leaders agreed that strengthening high technology trade between their countries is in the spirit of their strategic dialogue and partnership. They reiterated their shared commitment to technology security and that it is in their mutual interest to invigorate this area of their partnership.

Prime Minister Singh and President Obama reaffirmed their shared vision of a world free of nuclear weapons and pledged to work together, as leaders of responsible states with advanced nuclear technology, for global non-proliferation, and universal, non-discriminatory and complete nuclear disarmament. Part of that vision is working together to ensure that all nations live up to their international obligations. India reaffirmed its unilateral and voluntary moratorium on nuclear explosive testing. The United States reaffirmed its testing moratorium and its commitment to ratify the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty and bring it into force at an early date. Both leaders agreed to consult each other regularly and seek the early start of negotiations on a multilateral, non-discriminatory and internationally verifiable Fissile Material Cutoff Treaty at the Conference on Disarmament. They noted that nuclear terrorism, and clandestine networks are a matter of grave concern. Prime Minister Singh and President Obama look forward to the April 2010 Nuclear Security Summit and working together with all participating states for the success of the Summit.

393. Extract Relevant to Pakistan from the Press Conference of Prime Minister at the end of his visit to Washington. Washington (D. C), November 25, 2009.

President Obama was very conscious and aware of the threats both our countries face from terrorism, and the need for us to work together to combat it. We have agreed to strengthen cooperation in the area of counter-terrorism. He told me that the United States highly values India's role in the reconstruction and development of Afghanistan. We had similar views on establishing peace and prosperity in the Asia-Pacific.

* * * *

Question: On bringing perpetrators of Mumbai terror attack to justice

Prime Minister : As far as bringing the perpetrators of Mumbai massacre to book, our position is very clear that since the conspiracy was hatched basically in Pakistan, it is the obligation of the Government of Pakistan to do everything in their power to bring the perpetrators to justice. I have not seen the report that you have mentioned but I welcome every step that leads in that direction. I have, however, said that it is our strong feeling that the Government of Pakistan could do more to bring to book people who are still roaming around in the country freely, to dismantle the infrastructure of terrorism. I can only hope that there will be progress in that area.

With regard to the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference, there will of course be meetings between various delegations. We simply cannot wish away Pakistan. Whenever politicians meet we always have a tendency to discuss mutual issues. As of now nothing is planned or is on the horizon.

* * * *

Question: On India's relations with Pakistan

Prime Minister: Let me say categorically, India regards a strong, purposeful, peaceful Pakistan to be in our national interest. We have worked in that direction, we will continue to work in that direction. I have also said publicly in my recent interviews to the American media and Fareed Zakaria last week, that Pakistan faces no threat whatsoever from our country and that is the stated position of the Government of India. Any other statement distorted out of context should not carry the weight when I have stated categorically that Pakistan faces no threat whatsoever from our side.

Question: On Taliban

Prime Minister: Let me say that we are worried about the activities of the Taliban now covering the mainland cities and towns of Pakistan, particularly of Punjab. That is a threat to security not only of Pakistan but also a threat to security of our country.

Question: On US pressure on Pakistan to contain terrorism

Prime Minister: I have discussed this matter with the President and with the Secretary of State. I have been assured that the US influence will work in the direction that you have asked for.

Question: On Liberhan report and intelligence sharing by Pakistan and USA

Prime Minister: I have to express my regrets on the Li berhan Commission's report. This should not have happened; regarding the responsibility for the same, we will have it investigated. All this happened while I was away from the country. When I go back I will discuss this matter with the Home Minister and other dignitaries.

The second question you asked is why we do not get the information from Pakistan about the terrorist actions planned against India. For this we have been making efforts and we will continue with our efforts that Pakistan should recognise its responsibility. But we welcome the support that the US authorities have given to us in strengthening our cooperation in information and intelligence gathering.

Question: On Mumbai terror attack

Prime Minister: I had said what I wanted to say in my prepared statement. The 26/11 ghastly act should not have taken place. That it did take place is a cause of deep sorrow and concern to me both as Prime Minister and also as an ordinary citizen of our country; that about 200 citizens of ours perished in this onslaught; that several nationals of various foreign countries also were victims of this ghastly act. I sincerely hope that the world's conscience will be aroused to take effective action against terrorism and associated activities in the hope that our planet can be made free of this scourge for the benefit of all people in all countries.

Question: On possibility of repeat of 26/11 type terror attack in India

Prime Minister: I sincerely hope that the combined pressure of the world community including the United States will work to ensure that the ghastly acts of the type that took place on 26/11 do not happen once again. But I do recognise the obligation of the Government of India to protect its citizens. We will strengthen our internal security measures to the extent possible. We will do all that is necessary to ensure that there is no repetition of these ghastly acts like 26/11. I sincerely hope that the whole civilised world would back India in that direction. I have already mentioned that we greatly appreciate the cooperation that we have been receiving from the US in this regard after the events of 26/11.

394. Response by Minister of State Shashi Tharoor to a question in the Rajya Sabha regarding the meeting between the External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna and Pakistan Minister of Foreign Affairs Shah Mahmood Qureshi in New York.

New Delhi, November 26, 2009.

The External Affairs Minister (EAM) met Pakistan Foreign Minister (FM) Shah Mahmood Qureshi on September 27, 2009 in New York on the sidelines of UNGA. This meeting was preceded by a detailed meeting between the Foreign Secretaries of India and Pakistan.

Both the Ministers had a useful, constructive and candid exchange of views on the situation in our bilateral relations. They agreed that the future direction in our bilateral relations has to be one of deeper, sustained and meaningful relations. EAM conveyed to Pakistan FM our view that for a sustained and meaningful dialogue process to succeed, it is essential to ensure an environment free of violence, terrorism and the threat to use violence. EAM underlined and reiterated that concrete and effective steps by Pakistan against individuals and entities who pose a threat to us can instill in us the confidence that commitments given by Pakistan for not allowing its soil to be used for terrorist attacks against India would be adhered to. Pakistan FM conveyed the seriousness of his Government in bringing to book through their legal process those responsible for the terrorist outrage in Mumbai. Pakistan FM conveyed that the trial against those accused for the Mumbai attack would begin shortly and that the Pakistan Government would take steps to see that justice is done*.

* When the External Affairs Minister Krishna met the Pakistani counterpart again on November 19 in Kabul (where both were participating in the swearing in ceremony of Afghan President Karzai), according to media reports, he assured him that India had clean hands with respect to Balochistan and Afghanistan, and urged Islamabad to step up the pace in prosecuting the masterminds of the Mumbai terror attacks on November 26 2008.

[Mr. Qureshi in turn told Mr. Krishna about Pakistan's investigations into the Mumbai attacks and appreciated the evidence submitted in seven dossiers by India which, he assured, would be presented to the court.] EAM also informed Mr. Qureshi that Islamabad's suspicions of New Delhi's ulterior motives in Afghanistan were unfounded. India had no other agenda in Afghanistan apart from institution building and developmental work, which ought to be appreciated by Pakistan. The only motive was to restore peace and stability in the war-torn country.

- Friends,

It is a sober privilege to be with you all this evening, on the first anniversary of the horrific tragedy inflicted upon the citizens of Mumbai last November which claimed, amongst its more than 180 victims, several foreigners, including 6 Israeli citizens. Today we remember in particular Rabbi Gavriel Holtzberg and his wife Rivka, who made this house their home.

2. If I may be allowed a personal note, I grew up in Bombay, as it was then called, and I watched the unfolding horror here with profound empathy. There is a savage irony to the fact that the attacks in Mumbai began with terrorists docking near the Gateway of India. That magnificent arch, built in 1911, has ever since stood as a symbol of the openness of the city of Mumbai.

3. I remember my childhood and well thereafter, going back frequently and seeing the crowds flocking around the Gateway of India -- crowds made up of foreign tourists and local yokels, teeming throngs reflecting India's diversity. Last year in late November, watching that same area, the same

Gateway of India, on television, barred and empty, ringed by police barricades, that Gateway -- the Gateway not just of India but to India and to India's soul -- seemed to me to stand as a mute testimony to this criminal assault on my country's pluralist democracy.

4. The terrorists who assaulted the Taj Mahal and Trident Hotels, the Chhatrapati Shivaji Terminus, Nariman House and so many other places, knew exactly what they were doing. Theirs was an attack on India's financial nerve-centre and commercial capital, a city emblematic of this country's energetic thrust into the 21st Century. They killed, in cold blood, people of several different faiths, backgrounds and nationalities. The terrorists demonstrated that their brand of fanaticism is anchored less in the absolutism of pure faith than in the geopolitics of hatred.

5. The attack on Nariman House and its Jewish residents was quite central to the terrorists' aims. And it was particularly sad, since India is justifiably proud of the fact that it is the only country in the world with a Jewish diaspora going back 2,500 years where there has never been a single instance of anti-Semitism. The fact is, in my home State of Kerala, the Jews landed, if oral legend is right, after the destruction of their first temple by the Babylonians, or at least after the destruction of the second temple by the Romans, at any rate well before the birth of Christ. Again, another oral legend is that when St. Thomas, Doubting Thomas the Apostle, landed on the shores of Kerala, he was greeted on shore by a flute playing Jewish girl. We have the Jewish community of the Bene Israel of Maharashtra and the urban so-called Baghdadi Jewish communities who came during the Imperial era; all of them have lived in India in peace, in peace with their neighbours of all communities and religious faiths. This is the first time that it became unsafe to be Jewish in India.

6. This tragedy at Nariman House provided one more proof that the terrorists were not Indians -- because the people of India, of every community, have no conflict with the Jewish people anywhere, and it was clear these were foreigners pursuing a foreign agenda.

7. The loss of the Holtzbergs, fine young people who had opened their doors and their hearts to the Jews of Mumbai and to Jewish travelers here, was truly tragic, its poignancy underlined by the survival, thanks to their plucky Indian nanny, Sandra, of their 2-year-old son Moshe. They were known as a generous, loving couple. Their home, which was so brutally attacked, was a home away from home for thousands of Jewish travelers from and to India. I have known the Lubavitch Chabad movement earlier in my years as a UN official and I grieve with them for their terrible loss.

8. The deaths at Nariman House made conclusively clear that India had become the theatre of action for a global battle, one which threatens Indian lives, it is true, but one whose world-wide objectives also mean that we are not alone in this fight. That is part of the solidarity we are all expressing tonight with all those nations whose citizens lost their lives a year ago in Mumbai.

9. This is also the moment to recall and pay homage to the bravery and sacrifice of the many security forces, policemen and others, and ordinary human beings like, hotel staff and Moshe's nanny Sandra, many of whom made the supreme sacrifice in their attempts to rescue innocent civilians from the perpetrators of this unforgivable crime. I salute in pride and admiration the bravery of these Indians, who answered the call of duty, the call of conscience, with tremendous courage and conviction and without a moment of thought or concern about their own lives. Their courage and sacrifice gives a strong message to the terrorists and their masters, wherever they are, that such is the mettle of the sons and daughters of India, whom they have chosen to challenge and threaten. Let a clear message go from this place tonight that India and Indians will not be terrorized.

10. Terror must be resisted. But it is not enough to raise our defenses and improve our intelligence. We must work together to ensure that the malign men who plan such attacks are identified and stopped in their tracks before they can do such harm again. I say to the many foreigners present tonight that we must not let the terrorists imagine that if they attack India, only Indians are concerned. Terrorist attacks anywhere in the world are an assault on our collective conscience as human beings and as citizens of this one world. Our solidarity tonight must be a solidarity of shared suffering but also a solidarity of shared determination. We have to be united in the face of such outrages. We have to preserve the culture of openness symbolized by the Gateway of India - the values of pluralism, co-existence and diversity that we cherish and the killers abominate.

11. Tonight we must reaffirm the human spirit - the spirit of Mumbai. The phrase "never again" has been used elsewhere. Today it resonates in every Indian heart. Let us mourn what happened in Mumbai. Let us pay homage to all the victims of this senseless outrage and tribute to those who overcame the terror. But at the same time let us strive together to ensure that it never happens again.

Thank you!

396. Response of the Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs on charge sheet against David Headley, one of the masterminds involved in the criminal conspiracy in 26/11 terror attacks in Mumbai.

New Delhi, December 10, 2009.

"Investigation and filing of charge sheet in a US court against David Coleman Headley are important steps in exposing the wider conspiracy behind the Mumbai terrorist attack, and other acts of terrorism, for bringing to justice those responsible for mindless violence against innocent people.

The information available from the charges filed points to the fact that organizations including LeT, HUJI and Al-Qaeda, having sanctuaries in Pakistan, continue to remain active in plotting new acts of terrorism, targetting India as well as other countries. Applying facile distinctions amongst these organizations can only be counter-productive in the fight against terrorism, which cannot be selective.

The investigations into the Headley case also highlight the significance of timely, transparent and effective international cooperation for defeating terrorism.

The FBI team is traveling to Pakistan. We expect Pakistan to follow the leads provided, and unravel the full conspiracy behind the Mumbai terrorist attack and other terrorist plots which continue to emanate from its soil. The onus is on Pakistan to act with unalloyed determination against terrorism, its leadership and ideologues so as to eliminate the space which these elements continue to enjoy in Pakistan, and to dismantle the infrastructure of terrorism in its territory*."

---

* It may be recalled that Headley, a US citizen with Pakistani links was arrested in the United States by the FBI and charge-sheeted for his alleged involvement in the Mumbai attacks. The FBI and the the US Justice Department continue to share information with the law enforcement agencies in India. India is keen to get his extradition. But the Press Trust of India reporting from New York quoted the US Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs P. J. Crowley that since there was no extradition treaty between India and the US, it has to be seen "how that will work" and "going forward, I think that's premature." "As a matter of long-standing policy, we never comment on extradition matters. Headley remains charged in the federal court in Chicago, and the investigation continues."

397 Response of the Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs to a question on the proposed release of Indian fishermen by Pakistan.

The High Commission of India received the formal communication in this regard from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Pakistan late evening on 22 December 2009. While welcoming the release of the fishermen, the High Commission immediately requested the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Pakistan to forward the list of the fishermen who were to be released. A press release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs said the release of the remaining nineteen Pakistani fishermen, whose nationality has been confirmed by Pakistan, was under process and were expected to materialize in the near future.

The Ministry also hoped that Pakistan will take necessary steps at the earliest to release more than 500 Indian fishermen and over 400 Indian fishing boats still in Pakistan's custody.

SRI LANKA

399. Extract Relevant to Sri Lanka from the Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon after India had handed over the dossiers on Mumbai terror attack to Pakistan.

New Delhi, January 5, 2009

Question (Mr. Manish Chand, INS): Sir, what is the Indian stand now about Prabhakaran? Have you heard anything latest?

Foreign Secretary: Our position is quite clear that there are several aspects to the Sri Lankan problem, and that no one of them is sufficient to solve the problem. There is no military solution to this problem, for instance, no matter how the military situation might fluctuate. One side might be up, down, today, tomorrow, whatever. But that is neither here nor there. There is a political aspect which needs work because until there is a political understanding within the framework of a united Sri Lanka, within which all the communities in Sri Lanka are comfortable, you cannot speak of a political solution of the situation in Sri Lanka. There is a third aspect, which is a direct result of the military conflict and the absence of a political solution, which is the humanitarian problem for which, as you know, we have been working in the last several months as the fighting is intensified, to try and get relief to supplies and to try and get help to the civilian population who is caught up in this conflict. That we will continue to do. And we will continue to work with all those who are willing to do so, to try and help those poor civilians who are trapped in this zone of conflict. Quite frankly, the military situation might change, might vary. But there is more to the situation in Sri Lanka than just the military situation. I think that is very important.

On Prabhakaran our views are well known. I think we have consistently sought his extradition to face charges here, to face trial here actually. And that continues. That is a request we have renewed repeatedly.

400. Statement of Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon on the need for a political settlement.

New Delhi, January 5, 2009.

"There are several aspects to the Sri Lanka problem. No one solution is sufficient to solve the problem. Military solution alone won't work, no matter how the military situation fluctuates," Foreign Secretary Shiv Shankar Menon said. "Until there is a political understanding within the framework of a united Sri Lanka, we can't speak of a political solution." Humanitarian crises were one direct result of the military conflict and the absence of a political solution. "We have tried to get help to the civilian population and will continue to work with all those to help to civilians caught in the zone of conflict," Mr. Menon said.

(The statement came following the Sri Lankan Army's capture of the administrative and political headquarters of the LTTE.)

401. Press Release issued by the Indian Ministry of External Affairs on Indian humanitarian assistance to civilians and Internally Displaced Persons (IDP) in Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, January 16, 2009.

As stated in the India-Sri Lanka joint press release of 26th October 2008, India, as a goodwill gesture, decided to send humanitarian assistance to civilians and internally displaced persons affected by the conflict in the northern part of Sri Lanka. The first consignment of approximately 1700 tonnes comprising 80,000 ready-to-use family packs containing food, clothing and personal hygiene items arrived in Sri Lanka within three weeks and has already been distributed to those in need with the assistance of the ICRC and the co-operation of the Government of Sri Lanka.

India will continue to work with Sri Lanka in meeting the humanitarian needs of the civilian population in Northern Sri Lanka. India has decided on a second installment of such assistance amounting to approximately, SLR 40 million. Accordingly, a consignment of medicines was handed over by the Foreign Secretary Shri Shivshankar Menon to Senior Presidential Advisor and MP Hon. Mr. Basil Rajapaksa at a simple ceremony today.

402. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon to Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, January 18, 2009.

During his visit, the Foreign Secretary Mr. Shivshankar Menon met with the Foreign Secretary of Sri Lanka, Dr. Palitha Kohona and the Defence Secretary of Sri Lanka, Mr. Gotabhaya Rajapaksa. He also held discussions with the Senior Advisor to the President, Mr. Basil Rajapaksa, the Secretary to the President, Mr. Lalith Weeratunga and the Governor of the Central Bank, Mr. Ajith Nivard Cabraal. He also called on H. E. Mr. Mahinda Rajapaksa, President of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka and H. E. Mr. Rohitha Bogollagama, Foreign Minister. In addition, the Foreign Secretary also met political leaders, including the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Ranil Wickremesinghe of UNP and prominent leaders of the Tamil and Muslim communities in Sri Lanka.

Discussions during the visit covered bilateral relations, the situation in Sri Lanka and developments in the region. The Foreign Secretary was informed of recent developments in Sri Lanka. President Rajapaksa indicated his desire to rapidly move on from military success to a political solution of Sri Lankan issues. The Foreign Secretary urged early movement towards a peacefully negotiated political settlement in the island, including in the North. He reiterated the importance of a political understanding within the framework of a united Sri Lanka, wherein all communities, including the Tamil community, live in peace and dignity. In this connection, he welcomed the Sri Lankan Government's commitment, reiterated to him during the visit, to fully implement the 13th Amendment and devolve further powers to the provinces.

In his meetings, the Foreign Secretary also conveyed India's concerns at the humanitarian situation in the northern part of Sri Lanka and the need to ensure the safety and security of the internally displaced civilian population. He underlined the importance of preventing civilian casualties as a result of ongoing hostilities. The Foreign Secretary announced India's intention to provide further assistance of relief material consisting of medicines and shelter material. As part of this assistance, he handed over the first consignment of medicines to Mr. Basil Rajapaksa, MP and Senior Advisor to the President. India had earlier provided 1680 tonnes of food and other relief assistance through the ICRC for the affected population in the Vanni.

Discussions between the two sides also touched upon the present global economic situation and, in that context, both sides decided to consider ways to further deepen and strengthen bilateral relations and cooperation for mutual benefit.

403. Statement by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee on his visit to Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, January 28, 2009.

I had detailed, useful and productive discussions with H.E. President Rajapaksa and am pleased with the comprehensive briefing by the Sri Lankan side. We covered recent developments in Sri Lanka, the entire gamut of India-Sri Lanka relations and regional issues of mutual interest. India-Sri Lanka relations are developing strongly. It is particularly important at this time of transition and change that we should continue to strengthen our ties.

- The President mentioned his hopes for future developments in Sri Lanka. I stressed that military victories offer a political opportunity to restore life to normalcy in the Northern Province and throughout Sri Lanka, after twenty three years of conflict. The President assured me that this was his intent. We will work together with the Government of Sri Lanka to enable all Sri Lankans, and particularly the Tamil community who have borne the brunt of the effects of the conflict, to lead normal lives as soon as possible.

- For our part, I expressed our readiness to participate in the reconstruction of northern Sri Lanka so as to overcome the ravages of war and also to lay the economic and political foundations of a strong peace in which all communities feel comfortable. We will be working together on a reconstruction plan for these areas which will involve infrastructure and other support. I was happy to be informed of progress towards the establishment of a 500 MW thermal power project near Trincomalee by NTPC from India.
  - H.E. President Rajapaksa assured me that it was his intention to move as quickly as possible to implement the 13th Amendment of the Sri Lankan Constitution, which, you would recall, followed the India-Sri Lanka agreement of 1987. In fact, he would explore the possibility of going further and improving upon those devolution proposals.
  - We also reviewed the humanitarian situation as a result of the conflict. The Sri Lankan Government has reassured that they would respect the safe zones and minimize the effects of conflict on Tamil civilians. As you know, India has extended its relief supplies to civilians caught up in the zone of conflict and intends to continue doing so.
2. After our conversation H.E. President Rajapaksa was good enough to extend a personal invitation to an all-party delegation from Tamil Nadu led by Chief Minister Karunanidhi and Ms. Jayalalitha to see for themselves the situation on the ground and to persuade the LTTE to lay down arms and join the democratic mainstream.
3. An early restoration of normal democratic life in the areas affected by the conflict would be a major contribution to peace and stability. India will do all that it can bring this about, working with all those who work for this goal with us.

404. Statement by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee to the media on his return from Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, January 28, 2009.

Yesterday in the morning I told you that I will be visiting Sri Lanka. I went late evening and reached there around 2100 hrs. I had very fruitful and productive discussions with the Sri Lankan President H.E. Rajapakse.

We discussed, apart from our normal bilateral relationship, the contemporary developments in Sri Lanka after the success of Sri Lankan armed forces in liberating a large portion of territory under occupation of the terrorist organization LTTE. We made quite clear our concerns for the civilian population-around 150,000 plus-(who) are affected by the campaign.

In course of our discussions, President Rajapakse agreed to expand the safe zones and also ensure that there is no shelling, firing in the safe zone. He appealed to all concerned to allow the civilians to go to the safe zones so that food, shelter, medicine and safety could be provided to them. We also requested that international agencies like UN High Commissioner for Refugees, International Red Cross Society Committee and other international organizations engaged in the relief measures, should be allowed to visit and that Sri Lanka authorities should extend facilitation so that they can visit safely and see the circumstances with their own eyes. We further requested and President agreed to ensure that the relief material, which we are sending, reaches the persons who are affected by the impact of this conflict.

Sri Lankan President has extended an invitation to all-party Tamil delegation to visit the affected areas led by Chief Minister Dr. Karunanidhi and Ms. Jayalalitha.

We also discussed the 13th Amendment of the Sri Lankan Constitution which was introduced after the 1987 Rajiv Gandhi-Jayawardhene Agreement, to allow devolution of power and autonomy to the northern and eastern provinces, to meet the legitimate aspirations of the ethnic minorities of Sri Lanka. President assured me that this would be an area of his urgent attention and that he would try to explore possibilities and to improve the conditions further.

Thank you.

405. Press Release of the Ministry of External Affairs on Consignment of medicines sent to Sri Lanka.*New Delhi, February 3, 2009.

The Government of India began handing over a consignment of medicines yesterday, to assist the people affected by the conflict in northern Sri Lanka, in keeping with its commitment. It forms a part of our package of assistance announced earlier. A portion of the consignment was handed over at the Ministry of Health, by our Deputy High Commissioner Vikram Misri, to the Minister of Healthcare and Nutrition Mr. Nimal Siripala de Silva.

The entire consignment, valued at approximately SLR 20 million, will be handed over to Sri Lankan authorities by the end of this week.

The Government of India hopes that the assistance will help in ameliorating the sufferings of the people affected by the ongoing conflict*.

* Meanwhile a medical team from India was expected to provide emergency care to civilians displaced by the fighting between security forces and LTTE in the north. India sent the team based on an agreement made during the visit of the Foreign Secretary, Shivshankar Menon, to participate in the SAARC Standing Committee meeting. The Indian High Commission said the team would establish an emergency medical unit, including a hospital at Pulmodai in the eastern district of Trincomalee, to supplement the existing medical facilities in that area. "In addition, a consignment of urgently needed medicines and other supplies worth approximately Sri Lankan Rs.70 million will also be brought by the team and handed over to the Health Ministry," it said.

406. Statement of the Home Minister P. Chidambaram to the media advising the Sri Lanka Government to suspend the military operations while advising the LTTE to lay down arms.

New Delhi, February 5, 2009.

Indian Home Minister on February 5 advised the LTTE to lay down arms and come to the negotiating table even as it urged the Sri Lankan government to suspend the offensive.

Speaking to journalists, home minister P Chidambaram said, "We are deeply anguished at the loss of lives. We are not happy that the Sri Lankan government has resumed hostilities."

He said, "The Lankan government must suspend hostilities and the LTTE must lay down arms. This must happen simultaneously. It requires both hands to clap...Unfortunately we are not able to prevail over the LTTE to lay down arms and not able prevail over the Sri Lankan government beyond a point. We once again appeal to both sides to give up hostilities and come to the negotiating table."

He stressed that Central government was "very deeply concerned" about the situation in Sri Lanka, and added that foreign minister Pranab Mukherjee and foreign secretary Shivshankar Menon had visited Colombo in this connection.

"We were able to prevail upon Sri Lanka to pause (hostilities) for 48 hours. We were disappointed that there was no response from the LTTE. Even today there is no response from the LTTE," he added.

To a question about the possibility of LTTE cadres sneaking into Indian territory, Chidambaram said the Centre has sensitised the Tamil Nadu government on the matter. He pointed out that LTTE was a banned organisation in India.

"The (Tamil) refugees will be dealt with according to the extant policy," he said.

Asked about protests by some political parties in Tamil Nadu on the ongoing conflict in the island nation, Chidambaram said the Centre and the state government "have done, are doing and will continue to do whatever is in our capacity".

407. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the Telephonic Conversation between External Affairs Minister and Danish Foreign Minister Per Stig Moller to discuss the situation in Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, February 8, 2009.

Foreign Minister of Denmark H.E. Per Stig Moller called the External Affairs Minister on 7th February 2009 to discuss the current situation in Sri Lanka. He expressed concern at the situation of the civilian population in northern Sri Lanka.

In response, EAM mentioned to his counterpart that the safety and security of the civilians and internally displaced persons (IDP) in the LTTE controlled areas continued to be a source of concern. He referred to his recent visit to Colombo on 27th January when he had taken this up with President Rajapaksa. Soon after his discussions, the Sri Lankan President had announced a 48 hour period for civilians to leave the conflict zone and had appealed to the LTTE to allow the civilians to leave and assured their safety. EAM further stressed to the Danish Foreign Minister that the Government of India was doing its best to ensure that the civilians are moved to safety*.

Referring to India's humanitarian assistance of food, non-food and medical supplies for these affected IDPs and civilians, EAM also referred to the Sri Lankan Government's assurance to provide relief supplies, respect and expand safe zones and prevent civilian casualties. The way forward must include credible devolution of powers, early return of democracy and rehabilitation and reconstruction of the affected areas.

* On February 8, the External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee urged "friends" in Tamil Nadu to draw a distinction between the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Elam (LTTE) and the Tamil civilians of the island nation. The Minister was elaborating on the government's policy vis-a-vis the Sri Lankan Tamil issue at the one-day national convention of Block Congress Committee (BCC) and District Congress Committee (DCC) presidents.

Mr. Mukherjee said it was at India's request that Sri Lanka agreed to a near ceasefire for 48 hours to facilitate safe passage for Tamil civilians caught in the crossfire between the Sri Lankan Army and the LTTE. Referring to the concern expressed by "friends" from Tamil Nadu about the plight of Tamil civilians in Sri Lanka, the Minister said India had informed the Sri Lankan government about its concern while asserting that it had no sympathy for the LTTE. Not only was the LTTE a banned organisation in India, the EAM received a telephone call from the Canadian Foreign Minister Mr. Lawrence Cannon today. During the call, both Ministers expressed concern over the situation of the civilian population in northern Sri Lanka. EAM noted that the safety and security of the civilians and the internally displaced persons continued to be a source of concern. He reiterated that the only way forward would be to ensure credible devolution of powers at the earliest.

EAM discussed other issues of mutual concern with both his Australian and Canadian counterparts.

country had also been consistently seeking the extradition of its head V. Prabhakaran. On February 13, The plight of Tamils caught in the war between the Sri Lankan Army and LTTE militants in the island nation was raised in both Houses of Parliament with Members urging the Government to talk to the Sri Lankan government to ensure the safety of displaced Tamils. They said there was a grave humanitarian crisis in Sri Lanka where over three lakh Tamils had been pushed inside the jungles by the Sri Lankan Army. "It is a matter of concern for all of us. India cannot remain a mute spectator and should withdraw all types of military aid being provided to the Sri Lankan Army. Indian government should immediately intervene and safeguard the Tamils," it was argued. Intervening in the matter, Minister of State for Parliamentary Affairs V. Narayansamy drew the attention of the House to President Pratibha Patil's address to the Parliament when she enumerated India's policy on the Sri Lankan Tamil issue that India favoured an immediate ceasefire and that the matter be resolved through negotiations.

409. Suo Motu Statement by the External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee in Parliament on the situation in Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, February 18, 2009.

I rise to apprise this august House about the present situation in Sri Lanka.

Since I last addressed the House on this issue in October 2008, developments have unfolded rapidly in northern Sri Lanka. Sri Lankan Government forces have made significant advances into LTTE-held territory, restricting LTTE cadres to a small area of approximately 150 sq. km. adjacent to the coast. Sri Lankan forces have captured Kilinochchi, Elephant Pass and Mullaitivu town and have regained control of the A-9 highway.

A serious source of concern to us has been the condition of civilians and internally displaced persons, mostly Tamil, caught up in the zone of conflict. Estimates on the number of civilians trapped vary, but 70,000 or so are estimated to be there now. The LTTE were reportedly using them as human shields.

Hon'ble Members may rest assured that our strong concerns for the safety, security and welfare of civilians caught in the conflict have led us to stay actively engaged to prevent a further deterioration of humanitarian conditions. We have sent relief supplies to the civilians and the IDPs, facilitated access by international and UN organisations, and suggested ways for civilians and IDPs to escape from the conflict zone. Two batches of relief assistance have been sent so far including 80,000 family packs of food and non-food articles, collected and donated by the Government of Tamil Nadu and medicines. Another batch of relief material is being sent.

I personally visited Colombo on 27th January. In my discussions with Sri Lankan President Mahinda Rajapaksa, I stressed the need to give an opportunity to civilians and IDPs caught up in the conflict to emerge from LTTE held areas and suggested a pause in hostilities to provide the necessary environment. On 29th January 2009, the Sri Lankan President announced a 48-hour period for civilian safe passage to secure areas. He also appealed to the LTTE to allow civilians to leave and assured the safety and security of the civilians who did so.

In the last two weeks, nearly 35,000 civilians have come out of LTTE-held areas. Sadly some of those escaping from the conflict have been caught in cross-fire and, in recent incidents have been stopped and even killed by LTTE cadres. As the conflict enters what may be the final phase of military operations, the LTTE would best serve the interest of the Tamils by immediately releasing all civilians and laying down arms.

The Government of India is ready to facilitate the evacuation of civilians trapped in the area of conflict, working with the Government of Sri Lanka and the ICRC who would take responsibility for the security, screening and rehabilitation of these internally displaced persons.

Mr. Speaker,

India continues to support a negotiated political settlement in Sri Lanka within the framework of an undivided Sri Lanka acceptable to all the communities, including the Tamil community. The LTTE remains a proscribed organisation in India and has done much damage to the Tamil community.

In this context, the earlier normal democratic political processes begin in Sri Lanka the better. In our view, after 23 years of conflict, there is today a political opportunity to restore life to normalcy in the Northern Province and throughout Sri Lanka. The President of Sri Lanka assured me that this is also his intent. The full implementation of the 13th Amendment to the Sri Lankan Constitution would be a significant first step. Honourable Members would recall that the 13th Amendment was introduced to give effect to the India-Sri Lanka accord in 1987. Going beyond the 13th Amendment on the question of devolution of powers would be significant.

India is ready to work with the Government of Sri Lanka in their important tasks of rehabilitation and reconstruction which lie ahead in Sri Lanka, particularly the north and east. We have begun steps to implement developmental projects in the Eastern Province such as a 500 MW thermal power project, assistance for a rail bus project and the setting up of IT centres.

I wish to assure the Hon'ble Members that Government will continue to stay engaged in the process of bringing enduring peace to Sri Lanka, working with the Government of Sri Lanka and the various communities in Sri Lanka in pursuit of our common security and prosperity.

410. Statement by Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs on evacuation and safety of internally displaced persons in Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, February 24, 2009.

We have seen reports that the LTTE has declared its willingness to discuss international appeals to permit internally displaced persons (IDPs) caught in the zone of conflict to leave the area for safety.

2. In this context, India appeals to the Sri Lankan Government and to all concerned to work out appropriate and credible procedures for the evacuation of IDPs to safety, which would include the international agencies being able to oversee the movement of the IDPs. The sanctity of the safe zones must be respected by both sides. We understand that small numbers of medical evacuees have indeed been brought out of the conflict zone for the last few days by sea. We would urge all concerned to make it possible for much larger numbers to be brought out both over land and by sea.

3. India is ready to provide all necessary help to facilitate the process of bringing innocent civilians to safety and to meet their humanitarian needs for relief materials, medicines and medical care.

4. India is working out modalities with the Government of Sri Lanka to arrange for early dispatch of medical help and medicine to reach sick and injured civilians.

* The Sri Lankan Government response was to put the onus on continuing the operations on the LTTE. It said on February 24 that if the LTTE was ready to heed the call of the European Union (EU) to lay down arms, the need for "immediate ceasefire" to protect the interests of stranded civilians does not arise. Welcoming the EU call to the LTTE to lay down arms and renounce terrorism, the government claimed that it suspended hostilities for a 48-hour period and designated no-fire zones to allow safe passage of the civilian population fleeing the conflict areas on January 29. The LTTE has not responded so far to the EU call. Hours before the EU Foreign Ministers statement, the Tigers in a letter to the Co-Chairs of Sri Lanka (U.S., Norway, Japan and EU) argued why it was not "helpful" to ask the LTTE to give up arms and said it was ready for an internationally supervised ceasefire. "The LTTE's only response was to continue with its armed hostilities, endangering the lives of civilians. It should be emphasised that the objective of the present military engagement is to defeat terrorism and create an environment conducive for democratic pluralism", it said.

"Amidst extremely hazardous circumstances, the government is continuing to keep the civilians supplied with food, medicine, and other essential services, which underscores the duty and concern towards its own citizens, thus also fulfilling its obligations under International Humanitarian Law and the principles of the laws of war", the Sri Lankan Foreign Ministry said.

411. Statement of Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs on providing a full-fledged emergency medical unit with hospital to Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, February 26, 2009.

India had earlier expressed its readiness to provide all necessary assistance to facilitate the process of bringing civilians and internally displaced persons from the conflict-affected zone in northern Sri Lanka to safety as well as meet their immediate humanitarian and medical requirements. India has discussed this further with the Government of Sri Lanka to work out the modalities.

Accordingly, India and Sri Lanka have agreed to work together to address the urgent medical needs of these civilians. In this connection, India will immediately send a full-fledged emergency medical unit with hospital to Sri Lanka. This emergency medical unit would consist of doctors, surgeons, anaesthetist, nurses and support staff and necessary medical equipment and supplies. This would be augmented further depending on the requirement.

India will also work with the Government of Sri Lanka in the rehabilitation and reconstruction process in the northern and eastern Sri Lanka.

412. Statement by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee on humanitarian crisis in Sri Lanka and appealing the Sri Lanka Government to work out safe passage for trapped civilians.

New Delhi, February 28, 2009.

The Government of India views with grave concern the humanitarian crisis that is building up with every passing day in Sri Lanka. There are reports that over 70,000 civilians are trapped in the conflict zone in Sri Lanka and there is acute shortage of food, water and medicines. Many innocent lives have been lost in the conflict zone. The Government of India has repeatedly expressed its concern for the security and passage to safe zones of the civilian population.

It is reported that the LTTE has offered a ceasefire. While this may fall short of a declaration of willingness to lay down arms, it is our view that the Government of Sri Lanka should seize the opportunity presented by the offer to bring about a pause in the hostilities. The Government of India would, therefore, appeal to the Government of Sri Lanka to immediately work out safe passage for trapped civilians to secure locations. This would require the cooperation of the LTTE.

The pause in hostilities must be utilised to facilitate the movement of Tamil population out of the war-affected areas to secure locations where proper rehabilitation is possible and international aid organisations, as also the ICRC, have free access and scope to provide medical and other forms of humanitarian aid. Government of India is making arrangements to send an emergency medical unit and medicines to render medical assistance to internally displaced persons in Northern Sri Lanka.

This needs to be further followed up by effecting a proper devolution of powers to the Provinces, with assurances of equality and equal rights to all citizens, particularly the Tamil people, within the constitutional framework of Sri Lanka maintaining its territorial integrity.

I sincerely hope that the Government of Sri Lanka and all others will respond to this sincere appeal that is made in the interest of all sections of the people in Sri Lanka.

413. Extract relevant to Sri Lanka from the Media Briefing by the Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon on the visit of the Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to London for the G-20 Summit.

London, March 30, 2009.

Question: Sir, can you give us the latest information on India's humanitarian assistance to Sri Lanka? Secondly, Indian Prime Minister's Principal Secretary has visited Colombo and come back. Can you give us the update on his visit? Did he meet any dignitaries there?

Foreign Secretary: Yes, he had a very good visit. The Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister met with his counterpart who is the Secretary to the President. He also called on the President. There were three main purposes to this visit. One was to urge upon the Government of Sri Lanka that they take steps towards a credible devolution and a political package which could be seen as contributing to meeting the needs of all the communities in Sri Lanka, particularly the Tamil community and to bring them into the normal political democratic framework; and secondly to see what we could do for reconstruction, rehabilitation in the North especially. We had a fairly detailed discussion of that. Thirdly, to see what we could do on the humanitarian side, which you have mentioned. As you know, we have increased the size of the hospital because of the numbers of people who were coming out. Now I think almost something like 55,000 civilians have come out of the conflict zone and this hospital has been treating fairly large numbers of people in each batch. So, we had to increase its capacity. We have also shipped a new shipment of medicines, end of last week. And we have also got food supplies into the conflict zone both through the ICRC and the UN. This was important because supplies of food into the conflict zone in February had actually dropped considerably because of the fighting. So, we thought it very important that we get it there. You would have seen recent statements by the Government of Sri Lanka that they are ready to work out modalities including a pause of some kind if necessary, to allow civilians to come out of the conflict zone and to bring them out of harm's way. We would welcome that.

As you know, our Minister has said so last month already. He had said publicly that we would welcome that. And we would hope that there is progress towards bringing remaining civilians out of the conflict zone so that at least this kind of situation where each side is blaming the other but civilian casualties continue and where we then have to deal with the consequences in the hospitals, in terms of rehabilitation is avoided, and we can then concentrate on the big job of actually getting people back into normal activity and a normal political life in Northern Sri Lanka. So, all in all we were very heartened by the results of the Principal Secretary's visit. It was a very useful visit.

Question: Are you planning to send more doctors?

Foreign Secretary: We have sent more doctors actually last week to the field hospital.

414. Statement by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee on the situation in Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, April 17, 2009.

India is deeply concerned about the humanitarian situation in Sri Lanka. The continuing conflict has taken a heavy toll on Tamil civilians and internally displaced persons caught in the cross fire. The Government of India has repeatedly expressed its concern for their security and sought to ensure safe passage to secure zones for the civilian population.

We had welcomed the announcement by Sri Lankan President Mahinda Rajapakse of a cessation of hostilities for the Tamil and Sinhala New Year over the last two days. The Government of Sri Lanka must extend this pause in hostilities to prevent further casualties and enable trapped civilians to leave the area to secure locations. Continuation of precipitate military actions leading to further civilian casualties at this time would be totally unacceptable. While it is incumbent on the LTTE to release all civilians and IDPs under their control, the Government of Sri Lanka cannot be oblivious to the evolving human tragedy and the fate of the Tamil civilian population caught up in the so-called No Fire Zone. There is no reason not to continue with the pause in military actions in the NFZ.

The Government of India have extended humanitarian assistance, including medicines, food and other supplies, to the civilian population trapped in the conflict zone. A 62-member emergency medical unit from India has treated more than 1500 serious medical cases among civilians in Pulmoddai in Sri Lanka. We will soon send another consignment of 40,000 family packs to the affected civilians in Northern Sri Lanka.

The Government of India expects the Government of Sri Lanka and others concerned to respond positively to this appeal in the interest of the Tamils who are citizens of Sri Lanka*.

* On April 17, the Tamil Nadu Chief Minister M. Karunanidhi welcomed the Government of India's appeal to Sri Lanka to implement a ceasefire. In identical telegrams to Prime Minister Manmohan Singh, Congress president Sonia Gandhi and External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee, he said: "We welcome with gratitude the appeal made by the External Affairs Minister for ceasefire in Sri Lanka. If the appeal for ceasefire is not honoured and implemented by the Sri Lankan government, we request the Government of India to snap all diplomatic relations with Sri Lanka."

The U.S. also made a similar appeal and called for allowing international observers to oversee the evacuation of civilians trapped in the 'no fire zone.'

415. Statement by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee on the situation in Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, April 22, 2009.

Prime Minister reviewed the evolving situation in Sri Lanka this evening with me, Raksha Mantri, National Security Adviser and Foreign Secretary.

We are very unhappy at the continued killing of innocent Tamil civilians in Sri Lanka. These killings must stop. The Sri Lankan Government has a responsibility to protect its own citizens. And the LTTE must stop its barbaric attempt to hold civilians hostage.

There is no military solution to this ongoing humanitarian crisis, and all concerned should recognise this fact. The only lasting solution will come from political efforts to address the real concerns of the Tamil people, giving them lives of dignity within the Sri Lankan mainstream.

India will work to achieve this goal, and will do all it can to also ameliorate the humanitarian crisis caused by the conflict*.

I am speaking to many of my counterparts around the world to join us in this effort.

* India on April 22 night voiced its unhappiness over the continued killing of innocent Tamils in Sri Lanka and asked the LTTE to stop its "barbaric" attempt to hold civilians hostage, even as Prime Minister Manmohan Singh reviewed the situation in the island nation. A special meeting, attended also by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee, Defence Minister A.K. Antony, National Security Adviser M.K. Narayanan and Foreign Secretary Shiv Shankar Menon discussed the latest developments and reviewed the situation. "We are very unhappy at the continued killing of innocent Tamil civilians in Sri Lanka. These killings must stop," Mr. Mukherjee told journalists after the hour-long meeting called to discuss the situation in the light of Sri Lankan Army's final push against the LTTE and the options available to India.

It may be mentioned that the EAM Mr. Mukherjee had cut short his election campaigning to attend the meeting. The government dispatched 40,000 'family packs' to Sri Lanka, bringing the total of such packets - which would help a nuclear family keep going for a week - to one lakh. Meanwhile, two principal political parties, the Congress and the Bharatiya Janata Party called upon Colombo to declare a ceasefire so that civilians could be evacuated from the conflict zone. Congress leaders said United Progressive Alliance chairperson Sonia Gandhi had curtailed some of her programmes of election tours to hold consultations on the Sri Lankan situation in view of the political ramifications. Indian diplomats were in touch with their counterparts from several countries to discuss ways of ensuring that the civilians trapped in the no-fire zone (NFZ) did not fall victim to an impending military assault on militants of the LTTE, who are believed to have taken refuge, among the displaced people, in the NFZ.

416. Statement by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee on visit of special emissaries to Sri Lanka.*New Delhi, April 23, 2009.

Government of India has been monitoring with deep concern and anxiety the evolving situation in Sri Lanka, in particular the conditions of the Tamil civilians in the conflict zones. We understand that over 100,000 civilians have emerged from the No Fire Zone into areas under Government control in the past three days but the lives of several thousands of innocent civilians remain threatened.

We are very unhappy at the continued killing in Sri Lanka. All killing must stop. There must be an immediate cessation of all hostilities.

In order to convey these concerns to the Government of Sri Lanka the Government of India has decided to send two special emissaries to Sri Lanka.

The U.S., France and Britain, among other countries, had expressed their desire to mount humanitarian operations. Foreign Secretary Mr. Menon was also in regular contact with his Sri Lankan counterpart and was understood to have referred to the U.N. appeal for a massive humanitarian operation. Earlier outlining India's position, Mr. Mukherjee said countries including the U.N., which wanted to help in the evacuation of civilians from the conflict zone, should be allowed to do so. The Minister spoke to the Sri Lankan government to ensure that relief materials sent by India were distributed through the International Committee of the Red Cross.

In an interview, the Prime Minister has said the government considers the LTTE a terrorist organisation, and its chief V. Prabakaran a "proclaimed offender." On April 23, External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee said the government was monitoring with "deep concern and anxiety the evolving situation in Sri Lanka, in particular the conditions of Tamil civilians in the conflict zones." Mr. Mukherjee earlier convened a stocktaking meeting with Foreign Secretary Shiv Shankar Menon and India's High Commissioner in Colombo, who was summoned to New Delhi for consultations. "We understand that over 1,00,000 civilians have emerged from the no-fire zone into areas under government control in the past three days but the lives of several thousands of innocent civilians remain threatened. We are very unhappy at the continued killings in Sri Lanka. All killings must stop. There must be an immediate cessation of all hostilities," Mr. Mukherjee said. In order to convey these concerns to the Sri Lankan government, the Centre, at a high-level meeting chaired by the Prime Minister, decided to send Mr. Menon and National Security Adviser M.K. Narayanan to Colombo, he said. The meeting reiterated India's resolve to extend all possible assistance to the internally displaced people in Sri Lanka. It noted the dispatch of 40,000 packets (about 1,000 tonnes) of 'family relief packs' by ship from Chennai reaching Colombo April 25.

417. Statement by National Security Advisor M. K. Narayanan upon return from Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, April 24, 2009.

Foreign Secretary and I visited Colombo today on the instructions of the Prime Minister.

We were received by H.E. the President of Sri Lanka. We conveyed the concerns of the Government of India on the evolving situation in Northern Sri Lanka, especially at the casualties caused among Tamil civilians as a result of ongoing operations.

We also expressed the Government of India's concerns about the humanitarian situation as a result of nearly hundred thousand Tamil civilians coming out of the conflict zone since early this week.

The President of Sri Lanka was receptive to our concerns.

We are hopeful of a positive outcome.

418. Statement by External Affairs Minister Pranab Mukherjee on the situation in Sri Lanka and announcement of a grant of Rs. One billion for providing relief assistance to innocent civilians.

New Delhi, April 27, 2009.

The Government of Sri Lanka has announced* that combat operations have reached their conclusion and that the Sri Lankan security forces have been instructed to end the use of heavy caliber guns, combat aircraft and aerial weapons, which could cause civilian casualties. Sri Lankan forces will now confine their attempts to rescue the civilians who remain and give foremost priority in saving them.

This is an important first step in addressing concerns for the safety and security of Tamil civilians and Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) trapped in the conflict zone.

The need of the hour is for urgent steps to ameliorate the humanitarian situation of those who have come out from conflict zone as well as to bring the remaining civilians and IDPs in the No Fire Zone out to safety. The IDPs and innocent civilians are the main victims of the conflict and every measure must be taken to protect them and guarantee their welfare.

I am happy to announce that the Prime Minister has approved a grant of Rs. 100 crores (Rs 1 billion) for providing humanitarian relief assistance to innocent civilians who have been evacuated from the conflict zone. The details regarding utilization of this assistance are being worked out.

* The statement followed a meeting in Colombo of the National Security Council that was presided over by President Mahinda Rajapaksa. It may be added that the statement also came soon after the visit of Indian National Security Advisor and Foreign Secretary to Colombo.

A Statement of April 27 issued from the Presidential Secretariat read: "Government of Sri Lanka has decided that combat operations have reached their conclusion. Our security forces have been instructed to end the use of heavy caliber guns, combat aircraft and aerial weapons which could cause civilian casualties. Our security forces will confine their attempts to rescuing civilians who are held hostage and give foremost priority to saving civilians."

419. Statement by the Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs on Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, May 18, 2009.

In a telephone conversation with External Affairs Minister Shri Pranab Mukherjee earlier today, the President of Sri Lanka confirmed that armed resistance by the LTTE has come to an end and that LTTE leader Velupillai Prabhakaran is dead.

India will work with the people and Government of Sri Lanka to provide relief to those affected by the tragic conflict, and to rapidly rehabilitate all those who have been displaced, bringing their lives to normalcy as soon as possible.

It is our view that as the conventional conflict in Sri Lanka comes to an end, this is the moment when the root causes of conflict in Sri Lanka can be addressed. This would include political steps towards the effective devolution of power within the Sri Lankan Constitution so that Sri Lankans of all communities, including the Tamils, can feel at home and lead lives of dignity of their own free will.

420. Press Statement on the visit of National Security Advisor M. K. Narayanan and Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon to Sri Lanka.

Colombo, May 21, 2009.

Mr. M.K. Narayanan, National Security Advisor and Mr. S. Menon, Foreign Secretary visited Sri Lanka on 20 and 21 May. They called on His Excellency President Mahinda Rajapakse, and met with senior officials, including Mr. Basil Rajapakse, MP, Mr. Lalith Weeratunga, Secretary to President and Defence Secretary Gotabhaya Rajapakse. They also interacted with a number of political parties in Sri Lanka.

Both sides agreed that with the end of military operations in Sri Lanka, the time was opportune to focus attention on issues of relief, rehabilitation, resettlement and re-conciliation including a permanent political solution in Sri Lanka.

Following their agreement of 26 October 2008, both sides have been co-operating in providing humanitarian relief and assistance to IDPs in Sri Lanka. This includes medical assistance in the form of a field hospital, urgently needed medicines and medical supplies as well as food, clothing and shelter material.

Both sides emphasized the urgent need to resettle the IDPs in their villages and towns of habitation and to provide to them necessary basic and civic infrastructure as well means of livelihood to resume their normal lives at the earliest possible. To this end, the Government of Sri Lanka indicated that it was their intention to dismantle the relief camps at the earliest and outlined a 180 day plan to re-settle the bulk of IDPs to their original places of habitation. The Government of India committed to provide all possible assistance in the implementation of such a plan in areas such as de-mining, provision of civil infrastructure and re-construction of houses.

Both sides also emphasized the urgent necessity of arriving at a lasting political settlement* in Sri Lanka. Towards this end, the Government of Sri Lanka indicated that it will proceed with implementation of the 13th Amendment.

* The Policy of the Government of Sri Lanka to the Tamil question was articulated on May 17 in Parliament when Mr. Rajapaksa said: "At this victorious moment, it is necessary for us to state with great responsibility that we do not accept a military solution as the final solution ...the responsibility that we accept after freeing the Tamil people from the LTTE is a responsibility that no government in the history of Sri Lanka has accepted. It Further, the Government of Sri Lanka also intends to begin a broader dialogue with all parties including, the Tamil parties in the new circumstances, for further enhancement of political arrangements to bring about lasting peace and reconciliation in Sri Lanka.

is necessary that we give these [Tamil] people the freedoms that are the right of people in all other parts of the country. Similarly, it is necessary that the political solutions they need should be brought closer to them faster than any country or government in the world would bring. However, it cannot be an imported solution. It is necessary that we find a solution that is our very own. It should be a solution acceptable to all sections of the people."

On May 16 after Mr. Rajapaksa formally conveyed to India that Eelam War IV had ended. New Delhi said that India would work with the people and the government of Sri Lanka to provide relief to those affected by the tragic conflict, and to rapidly rehabilitate all those who had been displaced, bringing their lives to normality as soon as possible.

421. Remarks by External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna on his meeting with Sri Lankan delegation.*New Delhi, June 24, 2009

I just received the delegation from Sri Lanka which includes the Senior Adviser to the Sri Lankan President, Basil Rajapaksa, Defence Secretary of Sri Lanka, Gothbaya Rajapakse and Secretary to the President, Lalith Weertunga.

2. We reviewed several issues related to our bilateral relations and developments in Sri Lanka. During the discussion, when I raised the question of rapid resettlement and rehabilitation of internally displaced persons in the Northern Sri Lanka, I was assured that the Sri Lankan Government will see to return IDPs to their homes, and to dismantle the camps in the timeframe of 180 days that they have indicated to us earlier. India will be assisting in the resettlement and rehabilitation process and we are committed to helping in the demining activity which must be the first step to permit the safe return to home of the IDPs.

3. We also discussed issues relating to the course of political events in Sri Lanka. I was assured that it is the intention of the Government of Sri Lanka to implement the proposal which would be an advance on the 13th Amendment to the Sri Lankan Constitution, which you would recall was designed to devolve considerable power to the Sri Lankan provinces.

4. During this conversation I stressed that following the cessation of active hostilities in Sri Lanka there is an opportunity to make a new beginning and to build a better future for all the peoples of Sri Lanka and therefore for the region as a whole.

5. I also took this occasion to reiterate the need to strictly adhere to the understanding reached in October 2008 on matters relating to fishing. The Sri Lankan Government clarified that it does not contemplate putting up any military structures at Katchchativu.

6. I also requested the delegation that as a humanitarian gesture, the Sri Lankan Government allow the ship Captain Ali to off load the relief items on board meant for IDPs in Northern Sri Lanka. The Sri Lankan delegation kindly agreed to our suggestion and these would now be routed to Sri Lanka through the Indian Red Cross.

422. Extract relevant to Sri Lanka from the Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary Shivshankar Menon on Prime Minister's visit to Italy to attend the G-8/G-5 Summits.

New Delhi, July 6, 2009.

Question: Sir, two short questions. One is that the Finance Minister announced a Rs. 500 crore package for Sri Lanka. Is the package kind of ready or is it still in the making, have you discussed it with the Sri Lankans and second you mentioned development policy as being the core of the G-8 this time. Do we have yet another paper that we are presenting and your thoughts on the development policy in the current situation?

Foreign Secretary: I did not say it is the core of the G-8 this time, I just said it is one of the big issues; it is part of the broader issues which the G-8 is actually well equipped to discuss and for that part of the discussion in fact it would be a much broader meeting with other countries. We will not be presenting a paper this time, not this time around.

On the Sri Lankan package, on the 500 crores for relief and rehabilitation in Sri Lanka which we provided in the budget today, you know, we have been discussing with the Sri Lankan authority and with the civil society in Sri Lanka also what is required to resettle populations which have been affected by this long-drawn out tragic conflict in Sri Lanka and there are a series of steps that we, as India, have indicated that we would be willing to take that we think we can take. The Sri Lankan Government has assured us at the highest level that it is their goal also to resettle all their internally displaced people those who are in the camps in six months, in 180 days, and we will do what we can do to make that possible to bring people back to their homes in safety back to their original place of habitation with proper livelihood and a proper prospect of living in comforts, some comfort, at least. This would involve a whole series of steps; de-mining to start with, making sure that the paddy fields and their other produce uses the next growing season which is now really over the next few months, so that they have some livelihood to depend on when they go home. That we also provide some shelter in terms of material and so on so, we do have a plan of things that we want to do in these areas to try and help people to go home. We discussed them with the Sri Lankan government in some detail but we will have to keep detailing these and making them more and more details.

Some of these materials has actually already been shipped, some of the help is already there, there is a large hospital, ours is in fact one of the few hospitals which is working within the camps itself and we are trying to take care of their medical needs. There is a whole series of needs which we think this 500 crores will be necessary for. So, yes, we do have a plan which will have to be improved as we learn, as we go along, we are working with the Sri Lankan Government, the authorities, with the civil society in Sri Lanka to see that we can carry out this plan and hopefully achieve our goal.

Question: Today's five hundred crores is in addition to the previous package announced in May?

Foreign Secretary: In May we were speaking of one hundred crores, then PM said five hundred crores. So this implements what the PM had said. It is in the budget.

Question: Will we be sending de-mining experts to Sri Lanka?

Foreign Secretary: Yes, we will be sending experts from India. We have some expertise in it. More than experts it is also equipment which helps to do this.

Question: Will the experts be from the Army as well?

Foreign Secretary: Possibly. But there are groups outside the Army who have specialized in this.

423. Keynote address by C. Romesh Jayasinghe, the High Commissioner of Sri Lanka at the Seminar on "Post-Conflict Sri Lanka and India's Role".

Chennai, July 7, 2009.

Mr. R. Swaminathan, Special Secretary & Director General [Retd.] Govt. of India,

Dr. Sister Jasintha Quadras, Principal, Stella Maris College,

Lt-Gen V.R. Raghavan [Retd], President, Center for Security Analysis, Chennai,

Mr. N. Ram, Editor in Chief, The Hindu,

Mr. N. Sathiya Moorthy, Observer Research Foundation, Chennai,

Mr. P. M. Amza, Deputy High Commissioner, Members of the Diplomatic Corps,

Ladies & Gentlemen.

Mahatma Gandhi said "It is, at least it should be impossible for India and Ceylon to quarrel. We are the nearest neighbours. We are inheritors of a common culture..... But even as blood brothers sometimes differ, so do next-door neighbours. And like brothers, they usually adjust their differences and are often more closely knit together after the clearance".

Though the Father of the Indian Nation made this statement almost 70 years ago, the sentiments expressed have withstood the passage of the years. Indeed, they have perhaps even gained in relevance at this present juncture, with the historic clearance or end of the conflict which affected parts of Sri Lanka for over a quarter century.

It is of course a fact that despite the conflict, the bilateral relationship between India and my country was never a hostage to the situation in Sri Lanka. After all, it was during this period that both nations established a bilateral Free Trade Agreement, which has in turn led to two way trade today growing to a level of over US$ 3 billion per year. Parallel to the growth in trade, civil aviation links too expanded significantly, thereby enabling an exponential increase in people to people contacts. Nevertheless, it has also to be accepted that what was happening in Sri Lanka did have a potential of placing great stress on the bilateral relationship, with accordingly a need for both nations to devote some energy to managing the situation.

That particular need is now no more and so there is a consequent opportunity, for an even greater strengthening of relations. At the same time, the efforts in this direction would be even more sustainable, once they are evolved through a thorough understanding of the relevant background and issues. I therefore see our Seminar this morning on the theme of "Post-Conflict Sri Lanka and India's Role", as being singularly appropriate. I wish to thank the ORF in Chennai for their important initiative and regard myself as extremely privileged in being invited to deliver the Inaugural Address.

Ladies and Gentlemen, it is in a spirit of contributing to an understanding of the background and issues, that I now wish to flag certain matters for your consideration. I begin with those relating to the past. Let me emphasize in this regard that while the conflict in parts of Sri Lanka lasted for over 2 ½ decades, this era was also characterized by several attempts, in fact five in number, to politically resolve the situation.

The first such culminated after tripartite discussions convened by India with the involvement of the Sri Lanka authorities, the Tamil political parties and the armed separatist groups, in the India - Sri Lanka Agreement of 1987. In keeping with its obligations under the Agreement the Government of Sri Lanka enacted the 13th Amendment to the Constitution, in order to share responsibilities and empower especially the minority community through the devolution of many of the functions of the authorities based in the capital of Colombo, to Councils or administrations set up on the basis of the island's nine Provinces. With the passage of the Amendment, the LTTE undertook to lay down its arms and join the political process.

Unfortunately, the objective of the Agreement of bringing about peace was not attained, because the LTTE reneged on its commitments and attacked the units of the Indian Army that had originally gone to the island as a Peace Keeping Force.

In 1990, there was a second effort for negotiations, this time between the administration of the then newly elected President Mr. R. Premadasa and the LTTE. The key demand of the LTTE was that the Indian Peace Keeping Force (IPKF) should leave the island, before substantive discussions could commence. The Indian Forces were de-inducted, but instead of commencing talks, the LTTE promptly went back to conflict.

A third effort for negotiations commenced in late 1994, under the administration of President Kumaratunga. In these negotiations, the tactic of the LTTE was to insist on what they termed confidence building measures, such as the relocation of certain vital military facilities, to their manifest advantage and to the clear disadvantage of the Security Forces.

The Government was of the view that such matters could be progressively addressed since as the outlines of a political solution become clearer, it would only be logical for both sides to incrementally de-escalate their respective security stances. The LTTE brushed aside this reasonable approach and in April 1995, they unilaterally commenced hostilities.

The fourth endeavour for peace took place under the Government of Prime Minister Ranil Wickremesinghe, through a Ceasefire Agreement or CFA negotiated under the facilitation of Norway that came into operation in February 2002. Under the CFA, six rounds of face to face negotiations between the Government and the LTTE took place with the presence of the Norwegian facilitators in various locations outside Sri Lanka. However in April 2003, the LTTE abruptly walked away from the negotiations. The LTTE also built up quite a record of repeated violations of the Ceasefire Agreement, by abusing the space they should have used for legitimate political activities to instead covertly take on Government targets and those associated with non-LTTE Tamil political factions.

The fifth in the series of efforts for peace was mounted by President Mahinda Rajapaksa, who in his Address to the Nation after being elected to office in November 2005, offered to personally meet and discuss with LTTE leader Prabhakaran, the way forward to a negotiated solution. However, even as the President was extending this gesture of peace, the LTTE intensified its campaign of covert attacks. Despite the repeated and serious provocations President Rajapaksa did not abandon the effort to re-invigorate the Ceasefire Agreement and sent teams of senior Government personalities twice to Geneva, for talks with the LTTE under Norwegian facilitation.

The LTTE however made for it the fatal error of mis-reading the restraint of President Rajapaksa as weakness and decided to plunge into even more escalated conflict. Having unsuccessfully attempted in April 2006 to assassinate the Commander of the Sri Lanka Army, the LTTE began a series of offensives in the East, cutting off irrigation for agriculture and threatening to over-run the vital port city of Trincomalee. In the North, the control of the Jaffna peninsula by the Government was challenged.

In this situation, the President and his Government faced the LTTE with great resolve. The results were not long in coming, with the Tigers flushed out of the East by mid 2007 and then cleared out of the North in May 2009.

Had any one of these efforts for peace succeeded, the conflict would have ended much earlier with the prevention of further suffering and loss.

Regrettably, that could not be the case due to the obdurate refusal of the LTTE to make the transition from its focus on fighting and violence, to purposeful discussion. The present reality therefore is that whatever may be the attempts by non-mainstream elements to subjectively interpret what happened, the culpability of the LTTE in wrecking the efforts for peace will never be erased. This reality alone Ladies and Gentlemen, should lead us to accept that in relation to Sri Lanka there should be a closure of any tendency to become fixated on the past, at the cost of the ability to look ahead positively to the future.

Another set of matters I wish to flag, concerns the immediate needs arising from the end of the conflict, as well as the medium or longer term effort that would follow. The tactics deployed by the LTTE up to the very end caused further tragic human loss and suffering, as well as the large scale displacement of civilians. To the around 280,000 persons who escaped or were freed during the first five months of this year from their plight of being used as human shields by the LTTE, must be added another 100,000 or so persons including from the Muslim community, who had been displaced even earlier on, again due to the activities of the Tigers. The scale of the problem can be seen in its immensity, when it is realized that the number involved amounts to more than 1.5% of the island's total population. At the same time, Sri Lanka is fortunate to have a competent administrative system with a proven track record of delivery, especially in relation to health care and education. Its capacities were notable when in the aftermath of the Asian Tsunami of 2004 which led to a death toll of 35,000, it was possible to launch a sustained and ultimately successful rehabilitation effort with no outbreak of mass disease or any breakdown of law and order.

A major concern would be the comprehensive de-mining of the areas inhabited by the internally displaced, so that they can safely return to their dwellings. Among the related concerns would be ensuring the availability of construction material for repairs to damaged housing stock, plus supplying in adequate quantities the wherewithal such as fertilizer and fisheries equipment, for the resumption of livelihoods. Let me add that Sri Lanka deeply values the generous pledge of Indian Rs. 500 crore announced by the Prime Minister of India to meet these needs, which is complemented by the timely grant of Rs. 25 crore by the Government of the State of Tamil Nadu, for the same purpose.

Sri Lanka will also draw on the specialized agencies of the UN system, the ICRC and other reputed international NGOs with a record of effective service in the island, for assistance in coping with those displaced or otherwise affected by the conflict. With the progressive restoration of security and normalcy, access to the transit facilities housing the internally displaced can now be stepped up for the personnel of these agencies.

The resettlement of the internally displaced will have to take place in a situation where due to the conflict the infrastructure both in the East and especially in the North, has been subjected to colossal degradation. For example, that segment of the electricity grid which enabled power transmission to the Jaffna peninsula is no more. One hundred and forty kilometers of rail-track, on the stretch from the Northern Province town of Vavuniya to the peninsula, is no more. The heavy industry on the peninsula such as the cement factory and the chemicals plant were razed long ago by the LTTE.

While the precise financial cost of the conflict is perhaps yet to be worked out, a study carried out on the basis of a detailed methodology by the American academic Professor John Richardson for his book "Poisoned Paradise" looks at the early phase from 1983 to 1987 and calculates that the cost during those four years, was equivalent to 70% of Sri Lanka's 1988 GDP. As the conflict went on for 27 years, the cost on the basis of Professor Richardson's computation may amount to four to five years cumulated worth of national GDP. Moreover, the process of recovery has to be commenced within the current global climate of significant and prolonged economic down-turn. At the same time, two significant positive factors that have emerged with the end of the conflict should not be overlooked. The first is that the return to normal economic activity of North and of the East, which together account for around 13% of Sri Lanka's population, 28% of its land area and over 50% of the island's fisheries rich coastal belt, will hugely boost national productivity. The second would be with the opening up of road transport between the rest of the island and the peninsula, the energizing re-entry back into national life of the Jaffna and Northern Province populace, who are renowned for their intellectualism and disciplined approach to any task they undertake.

Ladies and Gentlemen, there is also the all important matter of strengthening national reconciliation and amity, through a political process of devolution which creates a sense of empowerment amongst all. President Rajapaksa clearly signaled his intent to move in this direction when in his Address to Parliament on 19th May 2009 informing of the successful end of the security operations, he emphasized "we do not accept a military solution as the final solution". The President in order to give this effort further impetus constituted an All Party Committee chaired by him, which would meet once a month, to address the issues of national reconciliation and of development. It was particularly encouraging that 22 political parties including the Tamil National Alliance, participated in the initial meeting of the Committee on 2nd July.

In advancing the political process, the President and his Government would be mindful that our Constitution is rigid in nature, requiring for amendment a 2/3rd majority in Parliament, with some entrenched clauses needing even thereafter approval by the people at a Referendum. Since Sri Lanka's change in 1989 from the previous first-past-the post system to a proportional representation system, no party has obtained a two third majority. In fact, President Rajapaksa depends for his parliamentary support on a coalition, with his own party the SLFP having less than 1/3rd of the seats in a Legislature with a total strength of 225.

In this situation, the President intends to proceed pragmatically by relying on the constitutional provisions for devolution that have already been enacted, through the 13th Amendment to the Constitution adopted after the India-Sri Lanka Agreement of 1987. Paradoxically though the 13th Amendment became part of the law of the land 22 years ago, it could not benefit the Northern and Eastern Provinces as long as the LTTE was present in those areas.

In the East, the operationalization of the 13th Amendment has already started, with the election of the Chief Minister and his administration consequent to the Provincial Council polls held on the 10th of May 2008.

Now that the LTTE is no more in the North, the Government will hold Provincial Council elections there as well. Before that, there will be elections to the local bodies in two of the main Northern Province towns, namely Jaffna and Vavuniya.

The completion of the Provincial Council election in the North, in the wake of that which took place in the East, will be an important milestone in the further strengthening of national amity. These elections will have to be complemented by the evolution of sound administrative practices and conventions. The political leaders and authorities in the capital of Colombo and those at the helm of administration in the Provinces would need to collaborate towards this end through a spirit of give and take, which while trying to accommodate the specific interests and concerns of the Provinces, also keeps in mind the wider context of ensuring Sri Lanka's continued economic and political progress as a multi-ethnic and multi-cultural society.

Ladies and Gentlemen, Dr. Henry Kissinger concludes his book "Diplomacy" by referring to a Spanish proverb that says "Traveller, there are no roads.

Roads are made by walking". The session of the Seminar that follows next will have the benefit of being addressed by a most distinguished group of panelists. I am very confident that the understandings reached through their contributions, would help India and Sri Lanka as the nearest of neighbours and the inheritors of a common culture, to choose on an informed basis the road that would best lead them, to the realization of their shared goals.

I thank you Ladies and Gentlemen, for the kind attention you have devoted to my remarks.

424. Interview of Sri Lanka President Mahinda Rajapaksa with the Chief Editor of Chennai based daily The Hindu.

(The three part interview was published on July 6, 7 and 8, 2009.)

[The human drama of some 300,000 Tamils fleeing the LTTE in the weeks before its elimination as a military force moved the world as it watched in shock, awe, and eventually great relief. What is their present condition in the Vavuniya IDP camps and what will be their future? And what is the nature of the political solution Sri Lanka's government has in mind? President Mahinda Rajapaksa responds to N. Ram 's questions in this first part of an extended interview to The Hindu in Colombo. Lalith Weeratunga, Secretary to the President, participated in the conversation, filling in some details and adding his insights. P.M. Amza, Sri Lanka's Deputy High Commissioner in Southern India, was also present during the June 30 meeting at Temple Trees, the former official residence of Prime Ministers.]

Part - I

N. Ram: Mr. President, are you satisfied with conditions in the Vavuniya IDP camps where close to 300,000 Tamils are housed?

President: I sent some people close to me to the camps. They went and stayed for several days. They spoke to the girls, the Tamil children, and others. And they came and reported to me. I don't rely on information only from the officials. We released people over 60. You know, a 74-year-old man, when he was released he immediately came here and went to Singapore. He was the man who had the money list, the other list. [Velupillai] Prabhakaran had given lists to many, not to just one person. This man escaped; he was one of the leaders.

I would say the condition in our camps is the best any country has. We supply water. There is a problem with lavatories. That is not because of our fault. The money that comes from the EU and others, it goes to the NGOs and the U.N. They are very slow; disbursing money is very slow. We supply the water tanks; we have spent over [Sri Lankan] Rs. 2 billion. Giving electricity, giving water, now we are giving televisions to them. They have telephone facilities. Schools have been established. Some of the leaders are using mobile phones.

I had a special meeting on the disposal of waste. I sent a special team of specialists to see how mosquitoes can be eradicated.

We know there are shortcomings. Slowly, we have to overcome them. In some camps there are no problems. What these people I sent told me: they are satisfied with the housing, the shelter. They have undergone much worse conditions earlier [when they were under the LTTE's control]. Their problem is movement, freedom of movement. Since there are security concerns, I don't know how to do that immediately.

So I said: "We have to identify these people. So if anybody takes the responsibility, we are ready to send them." We have called an all-party meeting for Development and Reconciliation. The reconciliation part, all parties must participate. The TNA [Tamil National Alliance] must participate.

Resettling displaced Tamils

NR: Why can't more Tamil IDPs be sent back to the places they hail from, provided of course their security and wellbeing can be assured? Why not a grand gesture of sending tens of thousands of people to safe places where they can be looked after - at this stage, in the Eastern Province, the Jaffna Peninsula, and the Indian Tamil areas?

President: You must remember it is only one month, my friend. I said on the 20th of May that as soon as possible, we must send them to places where they can stay. My problem is that we have to get the certificate of de-mining from the U.N. We have already sent people back to several places; you can get the details. As soon as we get the clearance, I'm ready to do that. But before that I must get the clearance from the U.N. about the de-mining. I can't send them to a place without basic facilities. Now we're spending on electricity, on roads, on water. We can't send them back to a place where there are just jungles. Every square centimetre has been mined by the LTTE. If something happens, I am responsible.

Lalith Weeratura (Secretary to the President; LW): Sri Lanka is adopting a very good system. We are de-mining the paddy fields first; then you can get into rice cultivation. The other thing is that the U.N. has been so slow in de-mining. It's the Indian companies that have been doing the good work.

President: And the [Sri Lankan] Army. They're doing the best work.

My personal feeling is that as soon as possible, we have to re-settle these people. We have to send them to the villages. But my problem is that to provide security for them, I will have to recruit another 200,000! I don't want to do that. Now I am recruiting Tamils to the Army and the police. I was always for that. I said: "Have a Muslim regiment and a Tamil regiment." All these people started opposing it for political reasons: "No Muslim regiment, no Tamil regiment." Not by the Sinhalese who welcomed that, but by the Tamils, by the Muslims.

You know, the mothers of our soldiers - some of them though their sons had been killed by the LTTE - when we told them that these people [Tamil civilians fleeing the LTTE] were coming and we must send them food and meet their other basic needs, these mothers contributed. The mothers of ex-soldiers contributed. Bikkus contributed. But not some Tamil businessmen. I had to remind them, shout at them, plead with them to get that support.

NR: Another issue is three doctors under detention: one may be an LTTE man; the other two are government doctors. Why can't they be released now?

President: I told them to organise a press conference. Let the doctors come and say what they have to say.

LW: They were lying through their teeth [about civilian casualties in the No Fire Zone]. And they are public servants, paid by the government. If they go scot-free, it will set a very bad precedent.

President: Everybody is worried about the doctors. So let them explain to the public, to the journalists, who can question them, why and on what basis they said what they said. Let the pro-LTTE journalists also question them.

The question of Tamil leadership

NR: How do you see the post-Prabakaran situation evolving politically?

President: My view is this. Most Tamil people believed they had a leader - whether he was right or wrong. This man [Prabakaran] made them proud. It was a ruthless organisation, it killed people, those are all immaterial for others. They thought: "There is a leader who is keeping us up in the world." Suddenly that leadership vanished, after thirty years. Immediately they couldn't digest it. Many of them know he was wrong. It will take time. Some of these people, the older people, can't accept it yet. Still the Internet - 'KP' [Selvarasa Pathmanathan, the former head of the LTTE's 'Department of International Relations' and chief arms procurer who is at large and on Interpol's most wanted list] and the rest are sending messages, right? "You don't worry, the organisation is still there," and so on. Their propaganda machinery is alive, to get the money. Things that they bought individually, they are not giving it. There are Sinhalese businessmen here who invested the LTTE money. We know it but various powerful people protected them.

My fear is this. Now, to collect money again, somebody will have to plan something here. Just one incident. Just to upset the world and then to show they have started the movement - so that they can continue to collect the money. They think that will help. But we are very vigilant.

No racism

In this whole thing, we have to think aloud. I have warned my party people, all party people, whether Sinhala, Tamil or Muslim, that "I don't want any statement, anything that creates a disturbance among our three communities." Now my theory is: there are no minorities in Sri Lanka, there are only those who love the country and those who don't. They tried to twist that but I still maintain that position.

NR: That was in your speech of May 19.

President: Yes, in Parliament. And in my Parliament speech, I spoke in Tamil also. And I spoke only in Tamil when I gave a small message when we started the new ITV Tamil channel, Vasantham.

LW: The public service is learning Tamil. Some are following courses of 40 hours of spoken Tamil.

President: I learnt that in one school the master said: "If the President can learn Tamil, why can't you all? You are students. You must learn Tamil." We are paying people in the public service for learning Tamil, to encourage them.

LW: There is a one-time payment if you pass Tamil. But if they go for classes also we pay. H.E. [His Excellency] has issued a directive that with effect from July 1 we will not recruit people to the public service unless they know Tamil - and vice versa, that is, Tamils must know Sinhala, Sinhalese must know Tamil.

President: Let them learn, let them learn. I can remember that in 1970 as a young MP I said that we must teach all Sinhalese Tamil and all Tamils Sinhala. If that had happened, I think there would have been a different world.

NR: There was this famous and prophetic statement in the 1950s [in 1956, when Sinhala was made the official language]: "Two languages, one country. One language, two countries."

President: Yes, by Colvin [Dr. Colin R. de Silva, the LSSP leader who between 1970 and 1975 was a key Minister in the Cabinet of Sirimavo Bandaranaike].

Towards a political solution

NR: Now about your political solution. You talked about the 13th Amendment plus.

President: I am waiting for them. The TNA representatives must come and participate in the discussions [on the political solution]. I am getting delayed because they haven't done this yet. [On July 2, leaders and representatives of 22 political parties, including the TNA, participated in the inaugural meeting of the newly constituted All Parties Committee to build a consensus among political parties for development and reconciliation, giving priority to the speedy resettlement and rehabilitation of the war-displaced.] I am waiting but it will be after my [re-]election [as President]. I must get the mandate. After that, the political solution comes. Even tomorrow I can give that - but I want to get that from the people. Even today somebody said: "The 13th Amendment. We are not for..." I called them and gave them a piece of my mind. I called our party leaders and told them: "Now what I'm going to tell you, you're not going to tell anybody. It's between you and I." Only party leaders were there. But today a professor from a university called me to say, "Thank you very much." I said: "For what?" He said: "This morning you have warned all the people about racism. And what you said has been highly regarded. This call is to thank you." I asked, "How do you know?" He said: "No sir, I just heard." This professor, a Tamil man, had immediately got the news. "Whether it is Sinhalese, Tamil or Muslim, I am telling you all. No racism. Don't try to create problems for me."

[As for the political] solution, I'm willing. I know what to give and I know what not to give. The people have given me the mandate, so I'm going to use it. But I must get these people [the TNA representatives] to agree to this. They must also know that they can't get what they want. No way for federalism in this country. For reconciliation to happen, there must be a mix [of ethnicities]. Here the Sinhalese, the Tamils, and Muslims inter-marry. In my own family, there have been mixed marriages: Sinhalese with Tamils, Sinhalese with Muslims. This is Sri Lankan society. No one can change this.

NR: You have this idea of a Second Chamber.

President: Yes, I want to get representatives from the Provinces involved in national policy-making. And if there is anything against a Provincial Council, they can protect their powers constitutionally. I have an arrangement in mind - this is what we call 'home-grown solutions' - but the idea needs to be discussed and the details settled. I don't want to impose any arrangement.

In this second part of an extended interview to The Hindu at Temple Trees in Colombo on June 30, President Mahinda Rajapaksa answers N. Ram's questions on his outlook on the LTTE, his approach to it in peacetime and in armed conflict, and his assessment of its fighting capabilities and of Velupillai Prabhakaran's strategy during the endgame. The first part was published on July 6.

N. Ram (NR): Mr. President, when you were elected in 2005 what was your expectation of this conflict? This is what you said in your 2005 presidential election manifesto, Mahinda Chintana: "The freedom of our country is supreme. I will not permit any separatism. I will also not permit anyone to destroy democracy in our country...I will respect all ethnic and religious identities, refrain from using force against anyone, and build a new society that protects individuals and social freedoms." In that policy statement, you also projected the "fundamental platform" of your initiatives as "an undivided country, a national consensus, and an honourable peace." So what was your real expectation when you assumed the office of President? You had no plan, it appears, to go on an offensive.

President: I was very clear about terrorism. I didn't want to suppress the Tamils' feelings. But I was very clear about the terrorism from the start. That's why as soon as I knew that I was going to win, I invited Gota [his brother Gotabaya Rajapaksa, who took charge as Secretary in the Ministry of Defence, Public Security, Law & Order on November 25, 2005; a battle-hardened professional with 20 years of service in the Sri Lankan Army, he played a key role in the successful Vadamarachchi Operation against the LTTE in 1987 and subsequently, in 1990, in Operation Thrividabalaya to rescue Jaffna peninsula and the Jaffna Fort from LTTE control.] I said to him: "You can't go. You wait here." That's why I selected as commanders of the Armed Forces people who would get ready to do that.

Then I sent the message to the LTTE: "Come, we will have talks, discuss." I was trying to negotiate. I was very practical. I said: "You can get anything you want. But why don't you all contest for this, have elections? Now you are people who have weapons in your hands. Ask the people to select. Have elections for the Provincial Council. Then we will negotiate. I can negotiate with an elected group. But with a man with weapons, I can't negotiate." The biggest mistake he [Prabhakaran] made was this. He said I was a practical man, a pragmatic man.

Lalith Weeratura (Secretary to the President; LW): H.E. [His Excellency] was appointed on the 19th of November [2005] when he made his inaugural speech, where he invited this man. Then on the 27th of November came Prabhakaran's Maaveerar speech, in which he said the President was a pragmatic, practical man [the LTTE supremo announced that his organisation would "wait and observe" the new President's approach to the peace process "for some time" because "President Rajapaksa is considered a realist, committed to pragmatic politics"]. When he said that, H.E. said in a speech: "I am willing to walk that last mile." Then on the 5th of December, they attacked 13 innocent soldiers who were taking meals to their comrades and they were without weapons. That is how it started.

President: Even then I didn't do anything. But then I knew what was going on. Then only I started my defence, I would say. Then Gota said we would have to increase the strength of the Army. All that was planned by them [the professionals]. I said: "What do you want? Get ready." But I went behind them [the LTTE] pleading. But I knew people were getting worked up in the South. Then I warned the LTTE: "Don't do this. Don't push me to the wall."

LW: Then you sent me to talk to one of their leaders.

President: I sent him. I sent Jeyaraj [Jeyaraj Fernandopulle, a veteran politician hailing from the Tamil minority group of Colombo Chetties and Cabinet Minister of Highways & Road Development; he was assassinated by an LTTE suicide bomber on April 6, 2008].

LW: In 2006, I went through many checkpoints without being checked. H.E. said: "Just go. Don't identify yourself." Later he told them: "I sent someone. You people couldn't even find out who it was."

President: I pulled up the Defence people, saying: "If I can send a man there, what is your security?" I told them after several months: "He [Lalith Weeratunga] is the man who went there. Do you know that?"

LW: To that extent he went.

NR: To see the weaknesses?

LW: No, to negotiate.

President: To negotiate and see the weaknesses also! Then I sent Jeyaraj. He told them some home truths in Sinhala, which they understood. "You will be killed [if they continued along this path]."

NR: Then came the Mavil Aru incident.

President: That was the time they gave me the green light!

NR: But you were well prepared by then, August 2006?

President: Yes. But before that, they tried to kill the Army Commander.

LW: In April 2006, when they tried to assassinate the Army Commander, the President said - this was in the next room - "as a deterrent, just one round of bombing, then stop it."

President: Yes, I said: "Just go once." We were very careful. We did our best to find a way out through talks.

LW: There was a whole series of negotiations, in Geneva and elsewhere. They [the Tigers] didn't even want to talk.

President: So these military operations did not come without negotiation or without any reason. But from the start, I was getting ready for that [the military operations]. I knew - because I had the experience, you see. We knew that they would never lay down arms and start negotiating.

LW: In this connection let me tell you about the President's interesting conversation with Mr. Solheim [Eric Solheim, the Norwegian politician and Minister who helped negotiate the 2002 ceasefire and was a controversial participant in the Norwegian mediatory efforts]. I was there, it was about March 2006. Mr. Solheim came to see H.E. after he became President, and said, in the midst of other things: "Prabakaran is a military genius. I have seen him in action," and this and that. The President said: "He is from the jungles of the North. I am from the jungles of the South. Let's see who will win!" It was very prophetic. Later the President met Minister Solheim in New York and reminded him of their conversation on the "military genius," the jungles of the North and South, and who would win. The East had by that time, in 2007, been cleared and the President said: "Now see what's going to happen in the North. The same."

NR: When did you first get an idea that the Tigers were vulnerable, that they were hollow in some sense, that you could hit deep?

No underestimation

President: From the beginning I had the feeling that if you gave the forces [the Sri Lankan armed forces] proper instructions and whatever they wanted, our people could defeat them. Because I always had the feeling that what they [the LTTE] were showing was not the reality. But in a way, we were wrong. They had numbers, they had weapons. They would have attacked not just Sri Lanka, they would have attacked South India. The weapons they had accumulated could not have been just for Sri Lanka! The amount of weapons our armed forces are discovering is unbelievable. And I knew when our intelligence was saying: "They have only 15,000 fighters," I knew it was not that number. I was not depending on one source. I knew that the LTTE had more than that. One thing I never did was to underestimate the LTTE.

NR: So you say they were the most ruthless and most powerful terrorist organisation in the world.

President: Yes, the most ruthless and richest terrorist organisation in the world. And well equipped, well trained.

LTTE's final strategy?

NR: What do you think was their final strategy? Prabhakaran holed out with all the LTTE leaders and their families in that small space, that sliver of coastal land. It shocked the world. But what were they expecting? D.B.S. Jeyaraj, who writes for us, has a theory that they wanted to do a daring counter-attack.

President: I think what they wanted was to escape. In the final phase, they were waiting for somebody to come and take them away. Otherwise, they wouldn't have gone there. Because they had the Sea Tiger base: that was the only place where they could bring a ship very close - even a submarine. They selected the best place for them: on one side the sea, then the lagoon, and there was a small strip. But then it was not they who actually selected the place: they 'selected' it but the armed forces made them go there. The No-Fire Zones were all announced by the armed forces. After Kilinochchi, they were saying: "No-Fire Zones, so go there." So all of them [the LTTE leaders and fighters] went there. These were not areas demarcated by the U.N. or somebody else; they were demarcated by our armed forces. The whole thing was planned by our forces to corner them. The Army was advancing from North to South, South to North, on all sides. So I would say they got cornered by our strategies.

LW: Kilinochchi was captured on the 1st of January 2009. And the whole operation was over on the 19th of May. So there was ample time [for them to get away].

Conduct of armed forces

President: Yes, I can't understand why they had to fight a conventional war. Prabakaran could have gone underground. If I was the leader of the LTTE, I would have gone underground and I would have been in the jungles - fighting a guerrilla fight. They couldn't do that now because we, our Army, mastered the jungles. They were much better than the LTTE in this [mode of warfare]. Thanks to the Special Forces, the Long-Range Forces, and the small groups, the group of eight. That worked very well. And I salute our forces for their discipline.

LW: For example, there was not a single instance where the Army was found to be wanting in its conduct towards women.

President: That girl, when she surrendered - they were deciding, there were six or seven [LTTE women fighters] - she says in her statement: finally, two or three ate cyanide and killed themselves; and then two or three girls said, "all right, we will see whether we will be raped, whether we will kill ourselves or be killed by rape, we will take this risk." The schoolteacher, this educated girl, surrendered. Nothing happened. She can't believe this. She was paid by the government for fighting us! By the way, we are now going to get all the government servants [from the Northern areas that used to be controlled by the LTTE] and I am going to tell them: "Forget your past. You work there in these organisations, you can't just wait there. We are paying you." Now teachers must go and teach and others must go to their posts and work.

And the money that they [the Tamil civilians fleeing the LTTE] deposited: on the first day it was 450 million [Sri Lankan rupees] together in the two banks, People's Bank and the Bank of Ceylon. And considerable quantities of gold. The Army has become a very disciplined force.

Part - III

[In this concluding part of an extended interview to The Hindu at Temple Trees in Colombo on June 30, President Mahinda Rajapaksa answers N. Ram's questions on concerns over what is perceived as triumphalism, the power of Sri Lanka's executive presidency, assaults and pressures on the news media, personal friendships, and relations with India.]

NR: Are you not worried by what is seen outside Sri Lanka as triumphalism following the military victory? That has to be checked, does it not, in the South?

President: No. The Tamils are happy, the Muslims are happy. They had that fear for two days. I must admit that. When my friends informed me, "Sir, we have a problem like this" - they had this fear - I spoke to them in Tamil and said: "Don't worry, I will look after you." People were enjoying themselves for two weeks. One day I took a vehicle and went all over just to find out what was going on. I placed the Army and the police near the Tamil houses. Nothing happened. Not a single Tamil house was attacked, not a single Tamil was humiliated. Not a single Muslim.

Do you know that recently there was a fight. Two were killed. I thought, "Another problem." Only to find out that a gang had applied for visas saying, "The Army is bombing us and fighting us" and that they wanted to escape all this. They somehow got two visas and [to celebrate that] had a party. After drinking, two fellows were killed. We caught all of them and questioned them. They are not LTTEers, they don't belong to any political party. They are gangsters. Gang fighting is going on. These are the underworld; we have to tackle them. They want to go to some western countries. I don't mind; if those governments want them, let them take them!

Is the President too powerful?

NR: There is a perception that the presidency has become too powerful. If so, what is the safeguard? What would be your answer to this criticism?

President: My answer is that it is not too powerful. That is my three years' experience. I can't take any decision on money matters. My money is controlled by Parliament. My powers have been taken over by Commissions. I can't dismiss any Provincial Council - unlike your central government, which has the constitutional power to dismiss a State government and dissolve a State Assembly. So how can I say I am powerful? I can't transfer a provincial teacher. I can't make a school a national school. So what is this power? To decide on the security, yes. The power is there. To keep the country in one piece. Otherwise I have no powers. The Cabinet has all the power. I can request.

NR: You are a man of Parliament, are you not?

President: I always say I am a man of Parliament. I like to debate. I like to fight, not physically of course. If you are inside Parliament, you're in touch. I'm in a prison now. A glorified prisoner, I would say, with all these security personnel. I'm one who walked from Colombo to Kathargama, 180 miles in 18 days. I'm a person who went and met people. I am a person who went to their houses. I was very free: 40 years of politics was with the people. So suddenly you put me here. I also have been in remand for three months. But I can't see a difference now. Of course I'm getting all these comforts. But what is comfort? This is not comfort. I can't get out, I can't drop in on my friends, I can't bring them here. I can't enjoy anything.

Friendship

NR: They say you value friendships a lot. You have friends in India.

President: I will do anything for a friend - not for any bad work, of course. But when a friend in difficulty approaches me, I will do whatever is possible to comfort them. Even when a country needs a friend, I always trust that country as a friend. Personal friendship has become important even in international relations. That is why I always treat India as a friend. A little more than that: a relation, I would say. Because of that, I will not get angry with others also.

NR: You are happy overall with India's response to the recent developments?

President: Yes, India was very helpful, first by understanding what was happening. We had a list and we knew what was possible and what was not. We bought the weapons we wanted from China. It was a commercial deal. China helped us and when somebody helps you, you appreciate it, don't you? But we paid them on international terms. We were very clear about this. That is also why I stood by Pakistan. When they were isolated, I got up and defended them. Then I canvassed for India during the process of choosing a Secretary-General for the Commonwealth [Kamalesh Sharma, a senior Indian diplomat, was chosen for this post by the Commonwealth Heads of Government in November 2007 and took up his post in April 2008]. I think no other country's leader would have been doing that openly. There were people in Sri Lanka who were interested in the job. But I said I wanted an Indian candidate. "In this region, we must have a leader. Here's the SAARC leader, at that time. So make them also powerful internationally and then we have a friend to defend us in international forums." That was my reasoning.

Media issues

NR: There has been international concern over the assaults and pressures on journalists in Sri Lanka. Some of these journalists were your personal friends, especially Lasantha Wickrematunge [Editor of The Sunday Leader] who was gunned down in January 2009. Then, in June, a Tamil woman journalist [Krishni Ifhan née Kandasamy of Internews] was abducted in Colombo by unidentified persons [who questioned her for several hours before releasing her in Kandy].

President: Most of these cases were created, I would say. If you fight someone in the street and that man comes and hits you, can the government take responsibility? But we have not done anything against journalists even when they attack us. For example, even though we had evidence that a Tamil newspaper owner and editor supported the LTTE, we treated them as journalists. I invited them here and they even entered into arguments with our senior officials.

Some of our journalists want complete freedom. They can attack anybody, they cannot be charged. Under the Constitution, only the President has immunity from prosecution. But the journalists also think they have the right to do whatever they want and get away with it - because they are journalists. Some of them said they would get together and do something about this. But what are some of the newspapers doing? They use media power to blackmail innocent citizens and collect money. I am a politician, I can take it. But public servants, what recourse do they have? The journalist writes something and then publishes a correction - it is useless. If they write falsely that this person is a bribe-taker or a rapist - there are such instances - what does he do? He can't go home; he can't face his children. How many people can afford to go to court with a civil [defamation] case?

Newspapers must take responsibility. If they won't do this, then you will have laws to make them do this.

Lasantha was my friend; he used to come and meet me, told me of various things that were happening, even in my party. He would drop in at two o'clock in the morning and I used to send him back in my vehicle.

NR: His last call was to you?

President: Yes, but unfortunately I was in the shrine room. It was a bad time. If I was out, they would have given me the phone. I was very angry with my security people.

Cultural values

President: I always respect the family culture of the Tamils. That is very important but it has been ruined by the LTTE. There is this 19-year-old girl in one of the IDP camps; she has had seven children! Every year she got pregnant because then the LTTE would not take her away to fight. And they don't even know the father.

NR: And the parents also supported this?

President: Yes, to keep the child. This is in a traditional family. This is the society we are living in. We don't want to publicise all this, although I did mention it in one of my speeches. The point is you can't ruin the culture of a country, the future of the young generation. The drug dealers are doing that. We must do everything to stop them.

425. Extract Relevant to Sri Lanka from the Statement of External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna in Parliament.

New Delhi, July 9, 2009.

Sri Lanka

5. Permit me now to briefly apprise the House of recent developments in Sri Lanka. As Hon'ble Members are aware, after more than two decades of conflict involving the Sri Lankan Government and the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE), a terrorist organisation proscribed in India, the Sri Lankan Government in mid-May 2009 proclaimed the end of military operations after wresting back all the territory held by the LTTE. The death of several LTTE leaders was also announced, including that of Velupillai Prabhakaran, who is a proclaimed offender in India. This is a significant conclusion to the military conflict in Northern Sri Lanka.

6. The end of military operations in northern and eastern Sri Lanka is an opportunity to rebuild the country after the ravages of conflict. In the immediate post-conflict situation, the most pressing concern is to ensure the early resettlement and rehabilitation of the nearly three lakh Tamil civilians displaced by the conflict in the last year. The early return of the Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) to their homes is a crucial first step towards reclaiming their lives and restoring normalcy. We have been assured by the Sri Lankan Government and President of their intention to proceed quickly with the task of resettlement. Mr. Basil Rajapaksa, Senior Adviser to the President of Sri Lanka, led a high-level delegation to India on June 24, 2009 when we studied the resettlement and rehabilitation issue in great detail. The Sri Lankan Government have committed themselves to resettling most IDPs in 180 days.

7. India will provide every possible assistance in the task of rehabilitation, resettlement and reconstruction. Hon'ble Members will recall that Prime Minister himself announced in this august House, India's firm commitment to engage with the process of relief and rehabilitation in Sri Lanka in keeping with our abiding interest in the well being of the Tamil people in that country. The Government has earmarked Rs. 500 crores for this purpose and we are willing to do more.

8. The immediate focus of the projects that will be taken up as part of this effort include deployment of four demining teams, which is a pre-requisite for IDPs to return to their homes, reconstruction of houses and supply of shelter material, medical assistance, and provision and repair of civil infrastructure.

9. Since November 2008, India has shipped 1.7 lakh family relief packs from Tamil Nadu for IDPs and civilians affected by the conflict. The packs included essential items such as dry rations, personal hygiene items, clothes, utensils etc. and were distributed to the beneficiaries by the ICRC. Another consignment of family packs will be dispatched from Tamil Nadu shortly. India has also been operating a full-fledged 60-member field hospital in Sri Lanka since March 2009. Since moving to its new location near Vavuniya after the end of military operations, more than 14,000 patients have been treated by the facility which is equipped with modern equipment and amenities and they have done commendable work. Further, two consignments of medicines have also been gifted to Sri Lanka in view of the urgent requirement for civilians and IDPs.

10. The cessation of hostilities gives Sri Lanka an opportunity to make a new beginning and to build a better future for all her peoples and, therefore, for the region as a whole. We are convinced that a closure to the cycle of violence and terrorism that has plagued Sri Lanka requires an inclusive political process of dialogue and devolution. Such a process must address the legitimate aspirations of the minorities, including the Tamil community, within the democratic framework of a united Sri Lanka.

11. We have been assured by the Sri Lankan Government of their intention to pursue a political process that envisages a broader dialogue with all parties including the Tamil parties, the full implementation of the 13th Amendment to the Sri Lankan Constitution and to go beyond, so as to achieve meaningful devolution of powers. We will remain engaged with them through this process.

12. I would also like to take this opportunity to mention that the Government continues to closely monitor incidents affecting the safety of our fishermen in the waters between India and Sri Lanka. We have reiterated to Sri Lanka the need to ensure strict compliance with the understanding on fishing arrangements reached between the two countries in October 2008.

13. As a close neighbour with whom our security and prosperity are inescapably intertwined, the Government attaches utmost importance to the future course of events in Sri Lanka and has an interest in ensuring that a lasting political settlement is reached.

426. Clarification provided by Prime Minister on his Statement in the Rajya Sabha on his meeting with Sri Lankan President at Sharm El-Sheikh.

New Delhi, July 17, 2009.

.....Now, with regard to what Shri Raja* has said, I spent a very considerable amount of my time in my meeting with His Excellency President Rajapakse, discussing the Tamil problem. I expressed to him our concern about the plight of Sri Lankan Tamils. There are nearly three lakhs people who are internally displaced persons living in 33 camps and I emphasised to him that he must take all effective measures to provide meaningful relief and rehabilitation, but that is only the beginning of the process. Sri Lankan Government has to create conditions whereby the Tamil people's legitimate political aspirations for a life of dignity and self-respect can be met and the successful process of devolution as envisaged in 1987 Statement with India can be implemented. So, I can assure you, Mr. Raja, that bulk of my time with the President of Sri Lanka was spent in discussing the plight of Sri Lankan Tamils. We are very deeply concerned. I explained to him that we have a legitimate concern about the well being of Sri Lankan Tamils. It has a bearing on Sri Lanka's relations with India, and, therefore, I urged him to do all that he can to satisfy the legitimate political aspirations of the Sri Lankan Tamil community. I thank you, Sir.

(For text of the statement please see Document No.39.)

* Shri Raja had asked: "..... since the Prime Minister had talks with several Heads of the States, particularly with the President of Sri Lanka, I would like to seek one clarification. I don't know whether the Sri Lankan Tamils will be able to get any political solution to their problem; I do not know whether they will have, in the near future, a peaceful co-existence on the basis of equality in the island nation. I would like to know whether the Prime Minister raised these concerns with the President of Sri Lanka."

It may be relevant to note that a delegation of ten parliamentarians from Tamilnadu visited Sri Lanka for four days from October 10 on the invitation of the Sri Lankan President. Its main objective was to visit the camps of the internally displaced persons and study their problems first hand. It met representatives of the Tamil and Muslim political parties and exchanged views on the plight of the 2.5-lakh war displaced and the need for a permanent solution to the ethnic conflict with meaningful devolution.

After visiting the camps of the displaced persons in the North and meeting the cross section of the political opinion of the Tamils the delegation called on Sri Lankan President Mahinda Rajapaksa in Colombo on October 13 and exchanged views on the rehabilitation of the 2.5-lakh war displaced housed in government-run camps and the contours of a political solution to the ethnic conflict. They also visited the hill districts where the Plantation Tamils of Indian origin are settled. "With regard to discussions on a political settlement to the ethnic question," the President reportedly told the delegation that "any settlement must be one that is accepted by all communities and by Sri Lanka's neighbour." Mr. Rajapaksa also emphasised the multi-ethnic nature of Sri Lankan society, referring to the 65 per cent of Tamils who live outside the provinces of north and east, mostly in and around Colombo. The delegation reportedly expressed fears about the coming monsoon rains but it was assured that steps had been taken to ensure that no hardships were caused to the IDPs. Media reports said that the President told the delegation that the Government was "concerned about the speedy resettlement of IDPs but were also appreciative of the actions taken by the government so far, in this direction. The President emphasised that de-mining must be done first before any resettlement". The MPs also met Prime Minister Ratnasiri Wickremesinghe, Foreign Minister Rohitha Bogollagama and Defence Secretary Gotabhaya Rajapaksa, beside the United National Party leader Ranil Wickremesinghe. The UNP in a statement said: "Before the war all communities lived amicably, which was disrupted by the cruel war. Now that the war is over, steps should be taken to resettle the IDPs and accelerate their return to normal life. The south Indian MPs must play a vital role towards achieving this goal."

Tamil Nadu Chief Minister M. Karunanidhi, who received the delegation on return at the Chennai airport on October 14, announced at a press conference that the delegation had been assured by the Sri Lanka Government that 58,000 IDPs would be rehabilitated in their native places in 15 days and the remaining would return gradually to their homes. In all, there were about 2.5 lakh people in the camps, Mr. Karunanidhi said adding the move of the Sri Lankan government was in response to the request made by the team that the internally-displaced Tamils be sent to their homes before the advent of rains. To a question whether Sinhalese would be settled in areas where Tamils lived traditionally, the Chief Minister said President Mahinda Rajapaksa had denied that such a thing would happen.

In New Delhi, the delegation called on the Prime Minister on 23rd October. In a written report, they suggested that India could help by building about one lakh houses, constructing roads and schools, making arrangements for water supply, helping with agriculture and other basic amenities for the IDPs, who were returning home. The MPs suggested that the Rs.1,000 crore aid, promised by India to Sri Lanka, could be given in the form of infrastructure. The delegates wanted India to ask the Sri Lankan government to speed up de-mining activities, send more experts there to quicken this process, advise it to stop firing indiscriminately on Tamil Nadu fishermen and rehabilitate IDPs before the monsoons. Home Minister P. Chidambaram and National Security Advisor M.K. Narayanan were present when the MPs briefed Dr. Singh on their visit.

On October 18 the Home Minister P. Chidambaram after meeting the Tamil Nadu Chief Minister in Chennai told the media that New Delhi would provide another Rs.500 crore (besides the Rs. 500 Crore already committed) to the Sri Lankan government towards rehabilitating the displaced persons after Sri Lanka submitted the project report.

He said: "The MPs' delegation has listed the steps taken by the Sri Lankan government (to rehabilitate the IDPs). We discussed how to help the Sri Lankan government to fulfil its promise." Asked whether the Sri Lankan government had started sending the Tamils to their homes after the visit of the Tamil Nadu MPs' delegation, Mr. Chidambaram said 5,000 people had already been sent to their places. "It has started in a slow manner. It has to be speeded up. We will take steps to ensure that all the Tamils are sent to their homes," he said.

Meanwhile on October 15 Minister of State Mrs. Preneet Kaur who was in Colombo in connection with the 8th Asia Cooperation Dialogue in a meeting with the Sri Lankan Foreign Minister Bogollagama had also assured him of India's readiness to provide further humanitarian assistance, on the request of Colombo. She referred to the offer of assistance for rebuilding the Duraiappa Stadium and establishing a cultural centre in Jaffna. Mr. Bogollagama said that though de-mining work carried out by the Sri Lanka Army and the Indian de-mining teams was progressing expeditiously, more assistance was required to complete the process.

427. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence announcing the extension of the Medical Team in Sri Lanka by another two months.

New Delhi, August 2, 2009.

The tenure of the Indian Armed Forces Field Hospital Unit providing succour and relief to the Internally displaced Tamil civilians in Manikfarms Camp in Sri Lanka since March 9, 2009 has been extended by another two months on the request of Sri Lankan Government. This is the third extension granted to the field hospital unit.

The field hospital unit has a 60-member medical team comprising Surgeons, Pediatrician, Medical Specialist and Lady Medical Officer. The team so far has already treated over 21,000 internally displaced Tamil civilians including cases of gunshot wounds, trauma, head injuries and those related to general surgery and orthopedics at Manikfarms camp at Vavuniya. The medical camp was first set up at Pulmodai.

A 30-member Armed Forces medical team has been sent on July 23, from Delhi to relieve the medical personnel already there since March, this year. The Indian field hospital unit is carrying out yeomen service by providing urgent medical aid to the war ravaged Tamil Civilians.

The tales of some of the treated casualties at the Indian Armed Forces Field Hospital Unit give a gripping account of the extent of the treatment provided by the team that has made a difference to those affected.

428. Suo Motu Statement by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna in Rajya Sabha on "Recent Developments in Northern Sri Lanka".

New Delhi, December 4, 2009.

I rise to inform the House of the recent developments in Northern Sri Lanka.

Hon'ble Members would recall that conclusion of the military conflict in Northern Sri Lanka presented Sri Lanka with an opportunity to heal the wounds created by decades of protracted conflict, to make a new beginning and to build a better future for its people.

Government of India had emphasized to the Sri Lankan Government that the time had indeed come to focus on issues of relief, rehabilitation, resettlement and reconciliation. We had expressed our readiness to work with the Government of Sri Lanka in the rehabilitation and reconstruction process of Northern Sri Lanka and in restoring normalcy.

In the aftermath of the conflict, the presence of nearly 300,000 Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) in camps in Northern Sri Lanka posed a major challenge for the Sri Lankan Government. It was crucial that these IDPs were given immediate humanitarian attention and that urgent steps were taken to resettle them in their original places of habitation. This would, ultimately, ensure that a semblance of normalcy was restored to their lives after the traumatic experience they had undergone during the conflict. Their welfare was the first priority.

Our concern on this score was conveyed to the Sri Lankan Government. We have consistently urged the Government of Sri Lanka to quicken the pace of rehabilitation and resettlement. They had agreed that the bulk of the IDPs would be resettled within 180 days.

In October this year, a delegation of Parliamentary Members from Tamil Nadu had visited Sri Lanka to study the rehabilitation and relief work being undertaken in Northern Sri Lanka. They had visited Jaffna, the IDP camps in Vavuniya, the Up-country Plantation areas in Central Sri Lanka and met the IDPs in the camps, witnessed the distribution of the humanitarian relief items donated by India and held discussions with a cross-section of the leaders of the Sri Lankan Tamil community and the Indian Origin Tamils. They called on the President of Sri Lanka H.E. Mahinda Rajapaksa.

Subsequent to their visit, more than 100,000 IDPs have been resettled. According to Sri Lankan Government sources, a total of more than 150,000

IDPs have been resettled and around 145,000 still remain in the camps. We understand more have been resettled recently. Travel restrictions in Northern Sri Lanka as well as those on the remaining have been relaxed. We have been assured that by end-January 2010, all IDPs would be resettled. We continue to work with the Sri Lankan Government to ensure the resettlement of all IDPs.

India has been actively involved in the critical task of providing humanitarian relief and assisting in the rehabilitation of the IDPs in Northern and Eastern Sri Lanka. 2.5 lakh family packs from Tamil Nadu, consisting of dry rations, clothing, utensils, footwear etc, have been rushed to the IDPs since October last year. The 60-member emergency field hospital set up by India in March operated for six months till September this year and treated more than 50,000 patients, many of them serious cases requiring surgery. Two consignments of medical supplies have also been gifted.

After Prime Minister's announcement in June 2009 in the Parliament, Government set aside an amount Rs. 500 crores for the rehabilitation of the IDPs and for the welfare of the Tamil people in Sri Lanka. We are committed to doing more. Our humanitarian effort in Sri Lanka has transitioned from a purely relief effort to a broader rehabilitation and reconstruction phase. In order to facilitate speedy resettlement of IDPs, India is extending much needed de-mining assistance. Four Indian de-mining teams are currently in Sri Lanka. After our Parliamentary delegation suggested enhancing Indian assistance in the field of demining, we are sending three more de-mining teams. To ensure that returning IDPs have a roof over their heads, India has donated 2,600 tonnes of shelter material. Additional 2,600 tonnes of shelter material is being sent. We will also supply cement to assist the returning IDPs to rebuild damaged housing. To address the vulnerable sections of the society emerging out of a military conflict, especially war widows, we are undertaking a project for their rehabilitation as well.

India has also decided to assist Sri Lanka in reviving agriculture in the North. To begin with 20,000 agricultural starter packs have been supplied. Supply of an additional 50,000 packs is in the pipeline. A team led by the Indian Council of Agricultural Research visited Sri Lanka to work out a blueprint for our assistance to revive agriculture in Northern Sri Lanka.

Infrastructure is a priority area. The extension of assistance under Lines of Credit to take up projects in railway infrastructure reconstruction in Northern Sri Lanka and provision of rolling stock is receiving our attention, as also construction projects in the North and East of Sri Lanka to rejuvenate the cultural and social life amongst the people. At the same time, the requirements of the up-country Indian Origin Tamils are also not lost sight of. Skill development and capacity building are areas of focus, as also vocational training and the provision of enhanced educational opportunities.

Government is keen to see the revival of the political process in Sri Lanka, which will meet the legitimate interests and aspiration of all communities, including the Tamils and the Muslims, within the framework of a united Sri Lanka. Revival of such a political process and an inclusive dialogue would help bring the minority communities into the political mainstream. We have continued to emphasise to the Sri Lankan Government to put forward a meaningful devolution package that would go beyond the 13th Amendment. We will remain engaged with them through this process of transition and reform.

Before I conclude, I would like to reiterate to this august House that the welfare and the safety of our fishermen in the waters between India and Sri Lanka have always received very high priority by Government. Government and our High Commission in Sri Lanka have always taken up matters relating to the expeditious release of the arrested Indian fishermen. Hon'ble Members would recall that it was with a view to address the humanitarian and livelihood dimensions of this issue that Government reached an Understanding with the Sri Lankan Government in October 2008 to put in place practical arrangements to deal with bonafide Indian and Sri Lankan fishermen crossing the International Maritime Boundary Line. The Understanding of October 2008 has had a salutary effect on the situation. While in 2008, 334 boats and 1456 of our fishermen were apprehended by Sri Lankan Government, in 2009, till end of November, we have had only 31 boats and 124 fishermen apprehended, witnessing a sharp decrease. We have continued to emphasize to the Sri Lankan Government the need to scrupulously adhere to the October 2008 Understanding. However, it is important that our fishermen do not venture deep into Sri Lankan waters for their own safety and security.

Government attaches utmost importance to the rehabilitation and the reconstruction efforts being undertaken by Sri Lanka in the North. As a close neighbour, India continues to do whatever it can to assist Sri Lanka at this crucial turning point in the country's history.

On December 7, the External Affairs Minister provided clarification to the points raised by the members on the Statement made by him on Decemberr 4, 2009.

Sir, I would like to thank all the hon. Members who participated in their effort to seek clarifications as to what the Government of India has been doing in terms of helping out the Tamil minority in Sri Lanka. I was particularly benefited by the perspectives that hon. Members, Shri Venkaiah Naidu, Shri D. Raja, Shri Tiruchi Siva, Shri T.K. Rangarajan, Shri K. Malaisamy, Shri B.B. Tiwari and Shri Rajniti Prasad and others that were able to paint a picture as to how pitiable it is, how pathetic it is that the Tamil minority in Sri Lanka are going through.

Sir, in my Statement, I gave the figures as to some of the steps that the Sri Lankan Government has taken in terms of rehabilitating the 3,00,000 Tamil-speaking IDPs, internally displaced persons. But, the question is whether what they have done is enough. Well, I would certainly go along with the assessment that it is not enough. But, at the same time, we are dealing with a friendly country with which we have had traditionally cordial relations; and, in terms of our security also, Sri Lanka is a very important country.

I did give the figures as to how many of them are still in the camps. I am given to understand that there are about 1,00,000 IDPs still in the camps. I think, the effort is to resettle them also, or at least get them out of the camps so that they could go back to their villages, they could go back to their hamlets and seek a living there. As I have mentioned in my Statement, India is giving substantial assistance for rehabilitation and reconstruction in northern Sri Lanka and it is our intention to continue to do so. Doubts were expressed by some Members including Shri Tiruchi Siva, Shri Brij Bhushan Tiwari about whether our assistance was reaching the intended beneficiaries. Sir, Rs. 2.5 lakh family packages from Tamil Nadu were in fact, distributed through reputed international organisations like the International Red Cross and the UN High Commissioner for refugees and we have received extremely positive feedback about their distribution and our timely help. Let me assure you that other projects being taken up by India are also being monitored closely and there are robust mechanisms existing for monitoring all Government projects taken up abroad. Let me submit that it is incorrect, as was suggested by some Members, particularly Dr. Malaisamy that we had taken up projects only in socalled Sinhalese areas. Sir, our engagement with Sri Lanka has increased to embrace a range of such projects in various parts of Sri Lanka, including the Northern and the Eastern provinces where India has been generous in extending assistance. I would like to assure

Shri Natchiappan that we are actively involved in improving the welfare of the Indian origin Tamils. We are also taking up projects to support the widows, the unfortunate widows. They have become widows because of the tragic turn of events that have taken place in Sri Lanka. Hon. Member, Shri Raja, did mention about our defence cooperation.

Sir, Sri Lanka is a close neighbour with whom our security is intertwined. India regularly maintains defence cooperation with Sri Lanka. Such cooperation is premised on our national interest. It is incorrect to impute that the Government had actively aided the Government of Sri Lanka against the Tamil community in the conflict. Even during the conflict, the security and safety of the IDPs received our highest priority.

Hon. Members might recall that we had consistently impressed upon the Sri Lankan Government to ensure the security of the IDPs to strictly adhere to no-fight zones and to extend safe passage to the civilians to come out of the conflict area and to pause hostilities to give a chance to the IDPs to escape from the conflict zone. Hon. Members, Shri M. Venkaiah Naidu and Shri Tiruchi Siva and others have raised a question of human rights violation. India condoned human rights violations regardless of where such violations take place. But, we would not like to politicise the issue, because it is very easy to politicise the human rights issues. We have taken up, whenever it has been brought to the notice of the Government of India, about human rights violations. We have always taken up with the Sri Lankan Government through diplomatic channels. I think, it is the unanimous opinion of this hon. House that the Sri Lankan Government, though victorious, as I said in the other House, the victors must be just and the weak protected. This is the dharma that we expect from the Sri Lankan Government. We have always conveyed to the Sri Lankan Government that it should, through a political process, settle the issue of Tamil minorities.

Sir, we are not stopping at the 13th Amendment. We want the Sri Lankan Government to go beyond the 13th Amendment. The political dialogue, which the Government of India expects Sri Lanka to involve itself, would be to find a permanent solution to this problem which is haunting Sri Lanka for quite some time.

Concerns have also been raised about the role of China, especially by Mr. Tiwari. Let me assure the hon. Members that we are confident about the strength of our ties with the Sri Lankan Government. And, our relations with Sri Lanka stand on its own and are not dependent on Sri Lanka's relations with a third country. Sri Lanka is aware of our security concerns and sensitivities and we hope they will continue to respond in a spirit of trust and understanding.

Hon. Shri Raja drew our attention to the plight of fishermen and Katchativu Island. Let me reiterate that the international maritime boundary line between India and Sri Lanka was settled by the Agreement of 1974 and 1976. The sovereignty over Katchativu Island is, now, according to those Agreements, a settled matter. We do not propose to reopen or renegotiate this matter. However, the safety and security of fishermen are all utmost concern to the Government of India.

Hence, we have proposed to the Sri Lankan Government that a Memorandum of Understanding on fishing cooperation with Sri Lanka is being attempted.

We have initiated the process, so that in the days to come we would be in a position to have an MoU with particular reference to the safety of fishermen, so that our fishermen, even if, by chance, go beyond our maritime territorial waters, are not harshly dealt with by the Sri Lankan Government. We are hoping that the Sri Lankan Government would see the rationale behind what we have proposed to them.

Some Members had talked about sending another Parliamentary delegation to Sri Lanka. Sir, the House may recall that at the invitation of the President of Sri Lanka to the hon. Chief Minister of Tamil Nadu, a delegation did go there. I think, some Members from this House also had gone there. They have come back and submitted a report.

.....The hon. Member is technically correct that the report, or whatever you may call it, has not been tabled in Parliament, but nonetheless, they have gone there and visited the camps, not one camp but a few camps.

Among further interruptions the External Affairs Minister continuing with his speech said: Mr. Deputy Chairman, Sir, we are impressing upon the Sri Lankan Government for the political process of consultations with Tamil minorities there and then a durable solution to this problem keeping the Thirteenth Amendment in view and a formula, which would be acceptable to the minorities particularly the Tamil minorities, would be desirable. It would be in the interest of Sri Lanka and it would be in the interest of India so that this problem will not come to haunt that island country of Sri Lanka. I hope that they will be able to go through this political process. Thank you. ..(Interruptions)..

Mr. Deputy Chairman, Sir, I would like to thank all the hon. Members who participated in their effort to seek clarifications as to what the Government of India has been doing in terms of helping out the Tamil minority in Sri Lanka. I was particularly benefited by the perspectives that hon. Members, Shri Venkaiah Naidu, Shri D. Raja, Shri Tiruchi Siva, Shri T.K. Rangarajan, Shri K. Malaisamy, Shri B.B. Tiwari and Shri Rajniti Prasad and others that were able to paint a picture as to how pitiable it is, how pathetic it is that the Tamil minority in Sri Lanka are going through.

Sir, in my Statement, I gave the figures as to some of the steps that the Sri Lankan Government has taken in terms of rehabilitating the 3,00,000 Tamil-speaking IDPs, internally displaced persons. But, the question is whether what they have done is enough. Well, I would certainly go along with the assessment that it is not enough. But, at the same time, we are dealing with a friendly country with which we have had traditionally cordial relations; and, in terms of our security also, Sri Lanka is a very important country.

I did give the figures as to how many of them are still in the camps. I am given to understand that there are about 1,00,000 IDPs still in the camps. I think, the effort is to resettle them also, or at least get them out of the camps so that they could go back to their villages, they could go back to their hamlets and seek a living there. As I have mentioned in my Statement, India is giving substantial assistance for rehabilitation and reconstruction in northern Sri Lanka and it is our intention to continue to do so.

Doubts were expressed by some Members including Shri Tiruchi Siva, Shri Brij Bhushan Tiwari about whether our assistance was reaching the intended beneficiaries. Sir, Rs. 2.5 lakh family packages from Tamil Nadu were in fact, distributed through reputed international organisations like the International Red Cross and the UN High Commissioner for refugees and we have received extremely positive feedback about their distribution and our timely help. Let me assure you that other projects being taken up by India are also being monitored closely and there are robust mechanisms existing for monitoring all Government projects taken up abroad. Let me submit that it is incorrect, as was suggested by some Members, particularly Dr. Malaisamy that we had taken up projects only in so-called Sinhalese areas. Sir, our engagement with Sri Lanka has increased to embrace a range of such projects in various parts of Sri Lanka, including the Northern and the Eastern provinces where India has been generous in extending assistance. I would like to assure Shri Natchiappan that we are actively involved in improving the welfare of the Indian origin Tamils. We are also taking up projects to support the widows, the unfortunate widows. They have become widows because of the tragic turn of events that have taken place in Sri Lanka. Hon. Member, Shri Raja, did mention about our defence cooperation. Sir, Sri Lanka is a close neighbour with whom our security is intertwined. India regularly maintains defence cooperation with Sri Lanka. Such cooperation is premised on our national interest. It is incorrect to impute that the Government had actively aided the Government of Sri Lanka against the Tamil community in the conflict. Even during the conflict, the security and safety of the IDPs received our highest priority.

Hon. Members might recall that we had consistently impressed upon the Sri Lankan Government to ensure the security of the IDPs to strictly adhere to no-fight zones and to extend safe passage to the civilians to come out of the conflict area and to pause hostilities to give a chance to the IDPs to escape from the conflict zone. Hon. Members, Shri M. Venkaiah Naidu and Shri Tiruchi Siva and others have raised a question of human rights violation.

India condoned human rights violations regardless of where such violations take place. But, we would not like to politicise the issue, because it is very easy to politicise the human rights issues. We have taken up, whenever it has been brought to the notice of the Government of India, about human rights violations. We have always taken up with the Sri Lankan Government through diplomatic channels. I think, it is the unanimous opinion of this hon.

House that the Sri Lankan Government, though victorious, as I said in the other House, the victors must be just and the weak protected. This is the dharma that we expect from the Sri Lankan Government. We have always conveyed to the Sri Lankan Government that it should, through a political process, settle the issue of Tamil minorities. Sir, we are not stopping at the 13th Amendment. We want the Sri Lankan Government to go beyond the 13th Amendment. The political dialogue, which the Government of India expects Sri Lanka to involve itself, would be to find a permanent solution to this problem which is haunting Sri Lanka for quite some time.

Concerns have also been raised about the role of China, especially by Mr. Tiwari. Let me assure the hon. Members that we are confident about the strength of our ties with the Sri Lankan Government. And, our relations with Sri Lanka stand on its own and are not dependent on Sri Lanka's relations with a third country. Sri Lanka is aware of our security concerns and sensitivities and we hope they will continue to respond in a spirit of trust and understanding.

Hon. Shri Raja drew our attention to the plight of fishermen and Katchativu Island. Let me reiterate that the international maritime boundary line between India and Sri Lanka was settled by the Agreements of 1974 and 1976. The sovereignty over Katchativu Island is, now, according to those Agreements, a settled matter. We do not propose to reopen or renegotiate this matter. However, the safety and security of fishermen are all utmost concern to the Government of India. Hence, we have proposed to the Sri Lankan Government that a Memorandum of Understanding on fishing cooperation with Sri Lanka is being attempted.

We have initiated the process, so that in the days to come we would be in a position to have an MoU with particular reference to the safety of fishermen, so that our fishermen, even if, by chance, go beyond our maritime territorial waters, are not harshly dealt with by the Sri Lankan Government. We are hoping that the Sri Lankan Government would see the rationale behind what we have proposed to them.

Some Members had talked about sending another Parliamentary delegation to Sri Lanka. Sir, the House may recall that at the invitation of the President of Sri Lanka to the hon. Chief Minister of Tamil Nadu, a delegation did go there. I think, some Members from this House also had gone there. They have come back and submitted a report.

That would only provide a lasting solution to this ethnic problem in Sri Lanka. I think, that will be helpful to Sri Lanka also. Shri Rangarajan mentioned about 180 days. Well, we insist on 180 days. The time is running out. As we run a Government here, they also run a Government there and I can imagine the kind of problems that they would be facing. So, within the constraints of the Government that are placed there, we will continuously insist on the 180-day deadline. Mr. Malaisamy mentioned about equal status. Yes, the Tamilian minorities in Sri Lanka should be equal citizens along with Sinhalese. I think, that is Government of India's proposition. We entirely agree with that. We go along with that and insist on that. Then, the fishermen's problem. Sir, one suggestion has come from our friend, Mr. Natchiappan. I think, the fishermen's federation has to be taken into consideration. They should be taken into confidence. I think, I am inclined to go along with this suggestion which has been made by Mr. Natchiappan. We will sound them out and see if we can get into an MoU so that there could be a permanent basis. But, the only problem is Katchatheevu. One of the hon. Members mentioned that agreement should be abrogated. Well, if an agreement between two sovereign countries has to be abrogated, then, there should be some reasons.

(Interruptions) Well, short of re-opening that, we are negotiating so that our fishermen could be helped out. This is the time for both countries to find a creative solution to put in place institutional arrangements for regularising fishing activities by our fishermen in these waters. So, we will work towards this objective of helping the fishermen.

Sir, with these explanations, I am sure that the purpose for which I made my suo motu statement would have been served.

429. Joint Press Statement issued on conclusion of the visit of High Level Sri Lankan delegation.*New Delhi, December 10, 2009.

Hon'ble Basil Rajapaksa, Member of Parliament and Senior Adviser to the President, H.E. Mr. Lalith Weeratunga, Secretary to the President, H.E. Nirupama Rao, Foreign Secretary and Shri Pradeep Kumar, Defence Secretary. They also called on the External Affairs Minister Shri S.M.Krishna.

Both sides reviewed the ongoing relief, rehabilitation and resettlement efforts in Northern Sri Lanka. The Sri Lankan side mentioned that more than 1,58,000 Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) have since left the camps and around 1,15,000 remained. The Sri Lankan side detailed to the Indian side the steps initiated to resettle the IDPs in their original places of habitation. They indicated their resolve to resettle the IDPs before end-January 2010. Welcoming the initial steps taken by the Government of Sri Lanka to relax movement and travel restrictions on IDPs, the Indian side expressed the hope that the IDPs would resume their livelihood and return to a life of normalcy.

The Sri Lankan side thanked the Indian side for the substantial assistance being provided by India for the rehabilitation of the Internally Displaced Persons. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the commendable work done by the 60-member Indian Field Hospital at Menik Farm, Vavuniya, where more than 50,000 patients were treated. The contribution of 2.5 lakh family packs sent by the Government of Tamil Nadu to the IDPs was appreciated. The Indian side emphasized that, with a view to ensure the return of the IDPs to their homes and resumption of their livelihood, it had enhanced the number of Indian de-mining teams in the area, provided additional quantity of shelter material and agricultural starter packs and was now in the process of providing cement bags for reconstruction of damaged houses of IDPs. These gestures were welcomed by the Sri Lankan side.

Both sides recognized the importance of sustaining peace and moving towards a political solution in Sri Lanka. The Indian side welcomed the holding of local elections in Jaffna and Vavuniya. Both sides agreed on the need for political arrangements which would serve the legitimate interests and meet the aspirations of all Sri Lankan citizens. The Sri Lankan side reiterated the commitment of the Government of Sri Lanka to a political process that would lead to lasting peace and reconciliation.

Both sides agreed on the need for restoration of infrastructure and services in the North and East Sri Lanka and welcomed the participation of Indian companies in these projects.

Both sides expressed satisfaction at the visit of a delegation of Tamil Parliamentarians to Sri Lanka and the access given to them by Sri Lanka to visit IDP camps in Vavuniya. The delegation had also visited Jaffna and the Up-country areas. They called on H.E. President Mahinda Rajapaksa.

Noting the salutary effect, which the October 2008 Joint Statement on Fishing Arrangements has had on issues relating to fishing, the two sides agreed to continue to adhere to these arrangements and also agreed to convene the Joint Working Group on Fishing Cooperation to continue discussions on the draft MOU to put in place an institutional arrangement.

External Affairs Minister (EAM) made a telephone call to the Australian Foreign Minister Mr. Stephen Smith today. On behalf of the Government and people of India, EAM conveyed deep condolences and sympathies to the families of the deceased and victims of the bushfires in the State of Victoria. He conveyed India's readiness to provide any assistance in the disaster relief and management, that Australia may require.

431. Statements by the External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna on attack on Indian students in Melbourne.*New Delhi, May 27 and May 29, 2009.*May 27, 2009

I have been appalled by the attack on our students in Melbourne. Our Consulate General in Melbourne has been in touch with the students affected and with the State police.

One of the students, Sravan Kumar Theerthala, is seriously injured and is currently in the Intensive Care Unit.

Our High Commissioner in Canberra has rushed to Melbourne to take stock of the situation and to ensure that the student who has been seriously injured receives the best possible treatment and that the authorities ensure that the culprits are brought to book.

We will also impress upon the Australian authorities that such attacks should not be permitted and that it is their responsibility to ensure the well-being and security of our students studying in Australia.

In the face of persistent reports of racial attacks on Indian students another statement was issued on May 29:

Reports of further incidents of attacks, on Indian students in Melbourne and Sydney, have generated extreme concern, in Government of India. To convey this, at the highest levels, in Government of Australia, the Indian High Commissioner to Australia, along with the Consul General in Melbourne, had detailed meetings, with the Premier of the State of Victoria, John Brumby and other ministers - as also Police officials, on Thursday 28 May.

It was conveyed to them, that Indian students, have been feeling that vicious attacks against them, have been increasing and that, there is an urgent need, to reassure them.

Separately, in telephonic conversations, when the Australian PM Kevin Rudd called Prime Minister and Australian FM Stephen Smith called EAM, to convey their congratulations, on their assumption of office, in the new Government, our concerns at attacks, on Indian students were conveyed suitably, in respective telephonic conversations.

The Australian High Commissioner, was called in to the Ministry when, the deep anguish and continuing concern, of the Government of India, about the students' welfare in Australia, was conveyed. The High Commissioner gave details, of the several steps, that the Australian authorities are taking, to address, the safety issues, concerning the Indian students studying in Australia.

It was conveyed to the Australian High Commissioner that, continuing sense of unease and insecurity, for Indian students in Australia, can have an adverse effect, in a sector that holds much promise. Certain steps that the Australian side could take, in addition to those that they have initiated, were also discussed and conveyed to the High Commissioner.

The Indian High Commissioner and Consul General in Melbourne, visited the injured Indian student, Sravan Kumar Theerthala, at the Royal Melbourne Hospital. They also met his friends and other students, who had been injured in the incident, on the night of 23/24 May. Sravan Kumar is being given, the best possible medical treatment, though his condition continues to be serious. Separately, other students who had been injured in Melbourne and Sydney, have also been met, by the Indian High Commissioner.

Australian authorities have conveyed, their clear commitment, to ensuring the safety and well-being, of Indian students in Australia. Meanwhile Indian High Commissioner in Canberra, as also, the Consuls General in Sydney and Melbourne, are taking steps, to put a series of cautionary measures, on their respective websites, including do's and dont's. A section of the website, specifically devoted to the students, would advise them, on how to report incidents, even of a minor nature, to enable the Indian officials, to take up, their specific complaints with the concerned Australian authorities.

The High Commissioner and the Consul General are in close and constant touch, with the Indian students in Australia and will continue to extend all possible assistance.

Separately, a guide for prospective students, going to Australia, listing out, all the relevant information, to coordinate action on their welfare, is under preparation.

The Australian authorities, have assured that they will be taking, additional steps, to ensure the safety and security, of our students and to reassure all concerned, that Australia continues to be, a safe country to study - in.*

* In the face of persistent reports of attacks on Indian students in Australia the Government of India on June 1 hoped that attacks on Indian students in Australia would end. Talking to journalists, External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna hoped that things would be sorted out soon and detailed the steps taken by New Delhi in this direction. "The Prime Minister has spoken to the Australian Prime Minister [Kevin Rudd]. I have spoken to the Foreign Affairs Minister [of Australia] and our Mission [in Canberra] is in touch with the students from India and also the government of Australia. So, I hope things will be sorted out," he said.

Media reports pointed out the divergence in the perception of the Indian and Australian governments on the origin of the racial attacks. While Indian High Commissioner to Australia Sujatha Singh pointed out to the racist element in the attacks and the Victoria Police not being sensitive to the victims of these crimes, Australian Prime Minister Kevin Rudd told the Australian Parliament on June 1 that the attacks were "part of a much wider problem of urban violence" in parts of some cities. Pointing out that Australia was committed to diversity, harmony and tolerance, Mr. Rudd said his government was committed to developing a stronger, closer relationship with India. Of the approximately one lakh Indian students in Australia, over half are enrolled in Victoria province. Three of the most grievous attacks took place in Melbourne, leaving six Indian students seriously injured.

432. Statement by the External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna on his visit to Australia.

New Delhi, August 11, 2009.

I visited Cairns (Australia) in connection with the Pacific Island Forum's - Post Forum Dialogue which took place on 7th morning. While in Cairns, I had a bilateral interaction with Foreign Minister Stephen Smith, first over lunch and followed by detailed talks. I also had a closed door meeting with Prime Minister Kevin Rudd.

2. India-Australia relations have been expanding rapidly over the last few years. India attaches importance to its relationship with Australia and we are committed to further strengthening and expanding our relations to cover virtually every area of interaction. Both sides feel that significant further scope exists, for expanding our trade as well as cooperation in areas such as Science and Technology, Information and Communication Technology, Energy, Education, Tourism and Agro-industry.

3. People to people contacts are at the heart of any relationship. Almost a quarter of a million people of Indian origin, live in Australia today. The Indian community through its culture and values is contributing in making Australia the vibrant multi-cultural society that it is today. They are a vital bond between our two countries. There is also a strong and growing community of Indian students in Australia (close to 97000). I shared with Australian PM and FM, Indian Government's deep concerns about the safety and security of our students in Australia and impressed, that measures need to be put into place, to address their legitimate grievances so that our students get a good quality educational experience and I am sure the Australian authorities are working to bring this about*.

4. Both India and Australia hope to eventually take our relationship to the level of a strategic partnership. We are looking at the possibility of discussing a Free Trade Agreement which would further boost our ties.

* Apart from the political relations with Australia, the recent attacks on Indian students studying in Australia were uppermost on the Minister's mind. In his interaction with Australian leaders including the Prime Minister, the Foreign Minister and the Premier of the New South Wales Government, he vigorously took up this issue and was assured of their full cooperation to safeguard the interests of the Indian students and he was promised stern action against the culprits. When the Minister was informed that scores of Indian students were among those duped in a massive education scam in Australia, he said India would be "ruthless" with the rogue agents who took gullible youth for a ride. The Indian government would go after the unscrupulous education agents in the country as part of its effort to control the student crisis, External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna said in response to a question at a press conference in Melbourne. On the

5. I have conveyed to FM Smith that we are looking forward to his visit in the near future as also a visit from PM Rudd in the later part of this year. The regularity of our bilateral interaction (visits of Australian Dy. PM and Education Minister Julia Gillard in end August) shows that the relationship is growing strongly all around and areas where there are concerns, such as the students' issue, need to be dealt with, in a sensitive manner, while we make efforts to strengthen our ties in a comprehensive manner.

attacks on Indian students in Australia, the Minister said he did not think all assaults were racist. Mr. Krishna, however, said there was need for orientation for students on living conditions and other information that would help them integrate with the society here easily. Satisfied with the assurances of the Australian Government on the treatment of Indian students in that country Mr. Krishna felt confident to tell the members of the Indian community in turn that he was satisfied with Canberra's response.

Mr. Krishna said Prime Minister Kevin Rudd and Mr. Smith had assured him that the well-being and security of Indians would be taken care of. (Among the Indians Mr. Krishna met were some students who were subjected to racial attacks.) "We appreciate the fact that they have stepped up police patrolling in the problematic areas and have taken several other measures to deal with the safety issue," he said. "I have underlined that these things should be kept in place as long as they are needed. The two task forces that have been set up are examining the various issues related to the well-being of international students in Australia, including those from India," the External Affairs Minister said.

He announced additional measures on India's part to instill greater confidence among the Indian students and said specially designated student welfare officers would be available in the Indian High Commission and Consulates in Australia. They would focus on issues related to Indian students. "The officers will also be available every Friday for Indian students. The students and community members can discuss any issue with them."

On Australian uranium supply to India, he said it came up for discussion during his meeting with his counterpart Stephen Smith. The Minister said he was aware of the Australian position on uranium supply. Australia is against supplying the yellow cake to countries that have not signed the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

Speaking over the telephone to The Hindu correspondent based in Singapore separately, Mr. Krishna said: "I was very impressed with the kind of assurances that I have been able to get from the Prime Minister [of Australia], Foreign Minister, national security advisers and others" across the policy spectrum. Mr. Rudd "has taken very seriously the [issue of] quality of education," said Mr. Krishna. On talks with Australian Foreign Minister Mr. Smith, Mr. Krishna told The Hindu the "stalemate continues" in regard to Australia's unwillingness to supply uranium to India, which had not signed the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT). The issue was "discussed in passing" but he emphasised that "as long as the NPT is discriminatory, we will not be in a position to sign it." The External Affairs Minister left Australia in no doubt that India was looking for uranium purchases only for power generation purposes.

[Even before his Australian visit, when the External Affairs Minister visited Phuket (Thailand) in July for the Asean foreign ministers meeting, he took the opportunity to meet the Australian Foreign Minister Stephen Smith and bring to his notice the concern of the Indian government on the plight of the Indian students in his country. Mr. Smith in trying to reassure the EAM of his governments concern briefed him of the steps taken by Canberra to stem the violence against the Indian students. It was then that while briefing the journalists of his "pull aside" meeting that he announced his intention to visit Australia to underline Indian concern to the Australian government.]

433. Press Statement by the External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna on his talks with the Australian leaders on the question of attacks on Indian Students in Australia.

New Delhi, August 17, 2009.

I have been deeply concerned, about the incidents of assaults, on Indian students, which have come to our notice since the last week of May. To assess the situation personally, I utilized the earliest opportunity to visit Australia, for in-depth talks with the Australian leadership on the issue of the safety and security of our students, for an early solution to matters pertaining to difficulties being experienced by them, with respect to academic issues and facilities at their educational institutions.

2. While attending the Pacific Island Forum-Post Forum's Dialogue meeting at Cairns(Australia)-which took place on 7th August morning, I had detailed discussions with Australian Foreign Minister Stephen Smith, first over lunch and thereafter followed by talks. I also met Australian PM Kevin Rudd in a 20 minute closed door meeting. Both these leaders told me that they were 'personally appalled by the incidents of assaults'. They gave me their categorical assurance that the present Australian Government was committed to finding an early and lasting solution to the problems which have been highlighted by our students. Australian society is a multi-cultural one where approx. 250,000 persons of Indian origin, as long-term residents, have made significant contributions to the Australian society.

3. Arriving in Sydney on 6th August(Thursday) en-route to Cairns, I spent the full day in Sydney meeting prominent Indians settled in and around the city who have achieved prominence in the Australian society. These people informed me that their fruitful and long-term stay in Australia was a clear example of the open and tolerant way of life in Australia and the recent incidents were only an aberration, which were unfairly highlighted in Indian media as being racist. From my interaction with the Indian community, it emerged that there are many inter-connected issues concerning students problems which need further investigation, like the role of some Indian origin entrepreneurs/businessmen acting as educational/immigration agents as also of Indian businessmen under-paying them in part time jobs, in violation of the Australian prescribed minimum wages. They also highlighted that the quality and the inadequate infrastructure of some educational institutions/colleges needed to be looked into. I exhorted the Indian community to enhance their interaction with our student community in order to, help them better assimilate in their new surroundings.

* Apart from the political relations with Australia, the recent attacks on Indian students studying in Australia were uppermost on the Minister's mind. In his interaction with Australian leaders including the Prime Minister, the Foreign Minister and the Premier of the New South Wales Government, he vigorously took up this issue and was assured of their full cooperation to safeguard the interests of the Indian students and he was promised stern action against the culprits. When the Minister was informed that scores of Indian students were among those duped in a massive education scam in Australia,

4. Separately, I met the Indian students in Sydney and heard their grievances as also suggestions. A section of the students was especially concerned at the incidents involving pre-mature closure of certain colleges like the Sterling College in Sydney with resultant hardship for our students. It was the desire of these students that at the earliest opportunity, Australian authorities should be impressed upon to have them accommodated in other similar colleges for their courses to continue.

5. In Sydney, I also had a detailed meeting with the Premier of New South Wales State, Hon. Nathan Rees, in his office, where senior officials of Police, Education and other Departments were also present. Premier Rees assured me that in conjunction with our Consulate in Sydney they had taken measures in advance, in susceptible areas, to prevent incidents of assaults by increasing police patrolling, better lighting etc. Measures like greater interaction with the Indian students community and counselling by local police had resulted in far fewer incidents in the State of New South Wales as compared to the State of Victoria. He assured me that his Government was determined to prevent such attacks and would do its' utmost to make the stay of our students' problem free. As he is scheduled to visit India soon to inaugurate New South Wales Office in Mumbai, he promised to up-date me of further remedial measures undertaken when he visits India.

6. In my interaction with our students including those from the Harris Park area of Sydney, while hearing their individual problems, experiences and suggestions for improving the situation, I did emphasize to them that they needed to abide by Australian laws and regulations and take required common precautions while moving-about in the city especially late at night. I also told them to ensure cross-checking of the bonafides of educational institutions and convey this very message to other prospective students in India intending to join education institutions in Australia.

7. Two clear problems emerged from such discussions. First, the students' anxiety about colleges like Sterling having gone bankrupt with the resultant hardship and loss of academic semester and the serious problems being faced by our students undergoing Aircraft Pilot training where vast sums of money had been paid by them after taking Bank loans in India but the flying training still to be completed. I took up both these issues with the Australian Government, at the highest levels, for an early solution.

8. On the matter of attacks on our students, Australian PM Kevin Rudd conveyed his appreciation of the position taken by our side. He promised that Australia would do everything required, to make our students feel at home by addressing their specific problems, concerning the lack of suitable accommodation and deficient infrastructure at educational institutions.

9. After the Cairns meeting, I traveled to Melbourne (August 8) and attended a Reception where prominent members of the Indian community from the State of Victoria and Indian students studying in various institutions in Melbourne had been invited. In my brief address to them, I underlined the utmost importance GOI places, on their welfare and safety and told them of my extensive discussions earlier in Sydney and Cairns. I informed the students and the Indian community that I had instructed the Indian High Commission in Canberra and the Consulates in Sydney and Melbourne to ensure with immediate effect the presence of a dedicated India-based official to receive and attend to the grievances of Indian students every Friday afternoon. Here again the students brought to my notice problems being faced by them due to closure of a few colleges (like the MIC) and consequently their tuition expenses getting stuck with the management. Students also highlighted the need for greater sensitivity on the part of local police and pre-departure orientation in India before their travel to Australia.

10. I met the Premier of Victoria State, Hon. John Brumby on Sunday Aug 9th and once again I was assured that the Government of Victoria State was fully resolved, to tackle the various issues relating to students' welfare. PM Brumby told me that his Government was recruiting 120 additional police officers, to improve the security environment at sensitive places in addition to measures like a dedicated telephone hot-line operational round-the-clock, for registration of students' complaints. Measures were also being taken by his Government to toughen laws relating to race and hate crimes. Regarding closure of colleges he admitted that such problems had been brought to his attention and to assist the affected students, some measures are being worked out, to help students transfer to other similar colleges. Brumby would be visiting India in September and promised to give me a further up-date on various other measures his Government was undertaking to improve our students' confidence.

11. In Melbourne, more than 47,000 Indian students, are present out of approx. 97,000 Indian students in Australia, and a rapid increase has occurred in a very short span of time in the last three years especially in vocational training colleges where some educational and immigration providers seem to have bent rules and cut corners.

12. I also utilized the opportunity to visit Sunshine Railway Station in Western Melbourne where the local Police Chief showed me recent measures undertaken like the stationing of mobile CCTV camera fitted vans and the control room where such footage was being constantly monitored. Measures like these have been initiated by the police over the last three months to provide assurance to students to travel from Suburbs to the inner city for educational area to work places.

13. Australian Dy. PM Julia Gillard, [who is also the Federal Minister for Education] is scheduled to visit India in end-August. She has announced the establishment of a Committee, to review the entire system of international education in Australia and report to her Government, the necessary changes which need to be brought about.

14. My visit to Australia, has thus afforded me a first-hand opportunity, to not only understand the concerns of our students there but at the same time convey in a forceful manner, to the Australian Government the seriousness with which the Government of India views the safety and welfare of our students. Over the next few months, high level visits from Australia are scheduled. It will give me a chance to learn from them, what additional measures Government of Australia has been able to implement. I am sure the concerns that I have conveyed to the Australian leadership will result in a tangible improvement in the situation, very soon.

434. Statement by Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs on the assault on Indians in Melbourne.

New Delhi, September 16, 2009.

It is learnt that two Indian nationals and two other persons of Indian origin, were assaulted by a group of individuals at Melbourne late in the evening on 12th September. One of the Indian nationals, Mr. Sukhdip Singh sustained serious injuries and is undergoing treatment. We are informed that the Police arrested four individuals who have since been released pending further investigations.

We are concerned at the recurring attacks on Indians in Australia. The matter was taken up with Foreign Minister Stephen Smith by our High Commissioner in Canberra today who has also written to the Premier of Victoria. The Indian Consul General in Melbourne is in contact with authorities in Victoria including the police authorities.

As we take note of the assurances given, including from the highest levels of the government and provincial authorities of Australia, it is our earnest hope that the concerned authorities would take all necessary steps towards the safety and security of Indians in that country.

We hope that the latest incident is investigated with care and the culprits are dealt with, according to the laws of the land. It would also help, if various measures being contemplated by the Australian side, in addition to those already announced, are put in place at the earliest, to prevent reoccurrence of such incidents in the future*.

Officials of the Consulate General of India in Melbourne, are also in touch with the members of the family of the victims, who have been assured all assistance by the Consulate.

* A week later the Premier of the State of Victoria John Brumby visited New Delhi and in his meeting with the Minister for Overseas Indian Affairs on September 25, he gave an assurance to provide heightened protection to the students studying there and announced a series of initiatives to promote Australia as an education destination.

Both the Overseas Affairs Minister Vayalar Ravi and Human Resource Development Minister Kapil Sibal too had expressed concern over the unsavoury incidents against Indians in Australia when they met Mr. Brumby and sought necessary steps to ensure their safety and security.

435. Joint Statement issued at the end of the India -Australia Foreign Ministers Framework Dialogue.*New Delhi, October 13, 2009.

At the India-Australia Foreign Ministers Framework Dialogue in New Delhi on 13 October, the Indian Minister of External Affairs, S M Krishna and the Australian Minister for Foreign Affairs, Stephen Smith underlined the strong bonds and enduring shared interests which bind India and Australia together.

Relations between India and Australia continue to expand across a wide front, adding depth and breadth to the relationship. The two Ministers acknowledged the significant contribution made by regular two-way high-level political and official visits to the deepening and diversification of bilateral relations in various sectors.

International and regional cooperation

The ministers had an in-depth and wide-ranging discussion about international and regional issues. They underlined the significant capacity for enhanced regional cooperation between India and Australia, including to strengthen the leaders-led East Asia Summit. Describing his discussions with the two Ministers as positive and constructive, Mr. Brumby claimed that the level of crimes had come down in the wake of the action initiated. He took pains to assure the Indian leaders of the impartiality and objectivity of the police in dealing with such sensitive incidents. Mr. Brumby, however, admitted that the attacks had damaged Australia's image but not its relations with India and said that partnership in the sphere of education was fundamental to the future ties between the two countries. Outlining the measures being initiated to root out racial hatred, Mr. Brumby said the law was being amended to give more powers to the police besides deploying a greater number of personnel on security duty. The punishment against offenders would be made more stringent with longer jail terms to send a clear message. The expanded fund will introduce a new 'grand challenge' component, which will support large-scale research projects designed to deliver practical solutions to some of the major challenges shared by both countries. The areas of focus will be "energy", "food and water security", "health" and "the environment". The expanded fund will also introduce a substantial new fellowship program, comprising exchanges for early-career researchers from both countries and short-term visits by senior scientists.
